tion at us with great emphasis and apparently in ridicule and with personal enjoyment. Every schoolboy knows the answer to that question. As far back as we can remember his section has enjoyed the benefits of cheap labor. The most unfortunate chapter in our national history was written in breaking the shackles of such cheap labor. Of late years, and even today under the code, it still manages to enjoy that tremendous advantage. With proper pride New England can say that it has, for many years, been able to meet and overcome this disadvantage through sheer efficiency. It is, however, a matter of shame to us that in this great fight for equal opportunity much northern capital has gone into the South, lending additional strength to that competition, and many New England textile operators have also moved their plants there, in order to take advantage of these labor conditions. And to make our fight still more difficult, it is feared that there will be those who will secretly endeavor to retain such conditions in the code for their own profit.

How does the gentleman from North Carolina dare to taunt New England, which has so long paid much higher wages to labor and, in addition, enacted many humanitarian laws to make life for the employees more bearable and the expense of which fell upon the employer? Is he, indeed, proud that his State could bait away our industries by the low wages paid to women and children? Is he, indeed, proud of the system of tenantry so largely obtaining in his own section? Compare the situation of the textile employee of his locality with what has, at least, been that of those in New England, where labor has been able to own their own dwelling houses without fear of eviction and have the happiness that comes from the enjoyment of a home free from the dictates and whims of an employer. To taunt New England in this matter; to suggest that labor conditions in the South have been, and are, what they should be, and by implication to suggest that we ought to go backward to similar conditions in order to retain our mills is not an argument such as should win the plaudits of his hearers.

Let us hope that the ovation given him by the Members of his own party and, to my surprise, joined in by some of the Members of his own party from New England, could only have been an expression of appreciation of the gentleman's forensic ability rather than an approval of his views. As I have said, the stage was set. The gentleman had a good audience. New England was to be excoriated by a man exceptionally capable of caustic expression. Eagerness showed on the countenances of his colleagues. They knew that he could be counted on to do a good job. He has demonstrated this on many occasions. Recently he gave a truly remarkable performance in this respect when the bill to provide additional clerk hire, sponsored by his own colleagues, was before the House. On that particular occasion you did not applaud him so much, although he really did a much neater job. Then, as yesterday, he refused to yield, except to carry out that clever scheme of yielding for a motion that was bound to kill the bill in question.

I greatly admire his ability and his ingenuity, but an analytical reading of his speech of yesterday makes me feel that it failed to achieve the result which he desired. His motive and the sectional feeling expressed were alike too obvious and too unfortunate. However, when he had finished it must have pleased him mightily to hear the great applause which followed. As he walked up the aisle among his admirers, I could not help but think of the old story of Mr. Hooley. Since the gentleman was so biting in his references to a number of us, surely he can take no offense if I offer a pleasantry at this time. Describing his rise to political fame, after his election as mayor, this Mr. Hooley said, "Whin I came to this country, a poor immigrant lad, I got a job diggin' sewers and everybody called me Pat. Thin I got to be boss of the gang and they called me Mr. Hooley. Later I was elected to the city council and they called me the Honorable Mr. Hooley. Finally I was chosen mayor of me great city, and the following Sunday, purposely late, carrying me cane and silk hat and with me large family behind me, I entered the church, and just as I did so the choir and entire congregation rose and started to sing 'Hooley, Hooley, Hooley, Lord God Almighty.'" I am wondering if the gentleman really does enjoy the thought that the textile industries in New England seem to be dying while those of North Carolina remain alive. Such an apparent feeling on his part recalls to my mind the story of the two colored men who met after a period of 5 years, during which both had been married. Said the first, "Mose, what sort of a gal did you all git?" Mose replied, "She am an angel." Whereupon, the other exclaimed, "Boy, yo' suttainly am lucky! Mine's still alive."

Now, I wish at this time to ask, Mr. Chairman, that I may revise and extend my remarks. I desire to place in the RECORD at this point a fairly brief letter about the harassing feature of trying to reclaim from the Government the processing tax, when drawbacks may be allowed under the law. It is almost too much for many mills to bear.

I also want to put in the RECORD a few of the lamentations of those other Jeremiahs, Senator GLASS and Senator BYRD. We think they truly represent Virginia on the very matters in which our sweet songster from Roanoke has so seriously differed from them, in his great loyalty to this administration. Let us recall, too, the speeches of Senator BAILEY, of North Carolina, Senator GEORGE, of Georgia, Senator TYDINGS, of Maryland, and many other stanch members of the majority party.

I may also wish to insert a few statements by Governor Talmadge, of Georgia. I shall not inflict upon you anything Senator LONG may have said [laughter], but shall refer to these other Jeremiahs of the Democratic Party, earnestly exhorting their own colleagues and lamenting, not jokingly, as I often do. I believe in stating things forcefully, so that the facts may receive attention, but nobody can see more of the humorous side of some political debates than I. Certainly I shall expect that a good natured reception will be given any remarks that I may make today.

A FEW EXCERPTS FROM YOUR OWN JEREMIAHS

A Democratic Governor of the Democratic State of Georgia raises his voice against Government spending and the destructive policies of the "brain stormers" at Washington.

"Let the follies go on", said he; "it won't last much longer."

"The real fight in this country", he declared, "is Americanism versus communism, mixed up with some kind of crazy 'gimme.'"

"We cannot go on running the Government on hot air," said Senator TYDINGS, "on money pulled down from the heavens, which the taxpayers will have to pay back."

And he warned the administration against counting on support at the polls if it continued its reckless experimentation and wasteful expenditures.

"Before another year shall have gone", said he, "there may not be the large Democratic majority here and in other places which we have enjoyed."

LAVISH SPENDING HIT

Senator BYRD criticized the lavish spending of public funds, saying that never in the history of the country has there been such wide-spread spending to "control the opinions of the people."

He referred to the Federal bureaus as "kingly" in their dealings with the public. He said the taxing power of the Congress had been given to these bureaus.

BYRD took the Government to task for going into business in competition with private industry, and advised that the administration look to ways and means of increasing consumption of farm products and reestablishment of export trade.

Even the King of England, in the old days of more absolute monarchy, could not enter uninvited the cabin of his poorest subject, and yet many of these officeholders, attired in plain clothes, exercise more power under a straw hat than did the king of old adorned with a jeweled crown.

Decrying the reckless outlay of Federal credit, Senator ADAMS, Democrat, of Colorado, a banker in private life, declared the existing Federal debt of twenty-eight thousand millions would be swelled to forty billions by this and pending bills.

He turned on its author, Senator BANKHEAD, Democrat, of Alabama, warning:

"You can't save the Alabama tenant farmers without saving those in Colorado and other States. To provide for all of them would require $10,000,000,000."

Senator GLASS. Every State and nearly every community in every State, including my own home town, has put itself in servitude to the Federal Government, has put itself under some inextricable obligation to the Federal Government to such an extent that some of the miserable little bureaucrats here in Washington have had the insolence to threaten States with withdrawal of so-called

"Federal aid" unless those States would go to the extraordinary expense of summoning special sessions of their legislatures, and give these bureaucrats some more of their funds.

I also insert a statement by former President Coolidge:

The centralization of power in Washington, which nearly all Members of Congress deplore in their speech and then support by their votes, is steadily increasing. The farmer, who was the shining example of sturdy independence, has intrusted the Government with finding him a market. Now the wage earner is to look to the same source to find employment. Individual self-reliance is disappearing.

A revolution is taking place which will leave the people dependent upon the Government and place the Government where it must decide questions that are far better left to the people to decide for themselves. Finding markets will develop into fixing prices and finding employment will develop into fixing wages. In default of furnishing markets and employment the Government must pay a bounty or a dole.

Those who look with apprehension on these tendencies do not lack humanity but are influenced by the belief that the result of such measures will be to deprive the people of character and liberty.

I wish to repeat that if the textile industries within the gentleman's State are still living it is chiefly due to the benefits of unfair competition and that we, the Congress, shall have utterly failed in our plain duty if we do not create different conditions which shall provide fair play to all sections within the second greatest industry in our country.

The following is quoted from the New Bedford (Mass.) Times:

MISERY STALKS COMMUNITIES

It requires no stretching of the imagination to see what the closing of textile mills means to New England. The first victim is the worker. He or she is out of a job. No work, no pay; no pay, no money to buy food, clothes, or coal, to pay rent, or buy gasoline. Merchants can't sell goods; savings accounts dwindle; insurance policies are cashed in and all kinds of difficulties follow.

Landlords can't collect rents, real-estate men can't sell houses, and auto dealers can't sell cars. Property owners can't pay taxes, and eventually the town can't pay firemen, policemen, and school teachers.

Sickness, poverty, and misery stalk a community that once was a good town in which thousands lived, worked, and prospered.

That's why this problem is not simply the mill owner's problem. Under the conditions prevailing today it is the problem of everybody in the community from the mayor to the humblest citizen.

These remarks were made in my own city recently—a city where many textile plants are today being dismantled. A city where there are as many patriotic citizens as in any other on the face of the earth.

Visit that city and view the public improvements that those public-spirited citizens have provided for the enjoyment of its people. They probably have not, except in rare cases, received a dividend from the cotton mills for some time. Since they almost despair of receiving assistance through our great Government in Washington, these stockholders think they might as well cash in and get what little remains, instead of going on for years and losing money more and more, which is bound to happen unless prompt relief is afforded this industry.

It is thought by some that these mills will be transported to the South. No; they are going to Argentina and other South American countries.

Now, I want to make a few remarks on the Japanese situation, into which, the gentleman from North Carolina stated yesterday, the President was looking in connection with these other problems. I rejoice that we can now go before such a committee, but let us hope that the investigation will not stretch into weeks and then end by holding an autopsy.

We want action and we want it now. It would seem that our Secretary of State and our administration do not wish to take the same measures against Japan that Great Britain and certain other nations are taking. I call your attention to the following:

QUOTATIONS FROM CAPT. DUDLEY W. KNOX, RETIRED, UNITED STATES NAVY, "JAPAN'S DRIVE FOR WORLD TRADE"

Strong opposition to the new commercial menace, stalking out of the Far East, must continue indefinitely from its very gravity. Already Japan has practically driven western competitors out of the Chinese market for manufactured goods, and has made remarkable gains at the expense of trade rivals in other parts of the world also. In the year 1932 the volume of her exports increased approximately as follows: To Asia, 60 percent; Europe, 30 percent; North America, 28 percent; Central and South America, 220 percent; Africa, 95 percent; and Oceania, 75 percent.

There seems to be no prospect of a let-up because Japanese production costs and selling prices are extremely low; their nearby sources of raw materials are ample; their industrialization is modern and on a quantity-production basis; they have their own shipping to take goods to market cheaper than is possible by other nationalities, and their Government not only encourages and freely subsidizes all forms of industry on a large scale but also manipulates national currency as necessary to take full advantage of this important factor in international business.

The ability of western nations to meet the competition is still further hampered by the Japanese practice of organizing their foreign commerce into vast and highly integrated trusts, which in effect are backed by the Government. A single group, such as the Mitsui interests, for example, may finance, control, and coordinate every phase of the cotton-goods industry. Their own buyers will purchase raw cotton in Texas, let us say. Their own ships will deliver the cotton to their own wharves and warehouses at a Japanese port. Other subsidiaries will haul it to the factory, manufacture it into cloth, transport it again by land and sea to many foreign markets, and there sell it. All will be financed by their own bank and insured by their own insurance company.

At the moment Britain is about to restrict Japanese imports into the home country and her colonies by means of tariffs, quotas, or embargoes. In this the cooperation of the Dominions is to be sought and doubtless to a large extent will be realized. The move promises to be successful in cutting off a large proportion of the existing Japanese foreign trade, while at the same time it offers little opportunity for retaliation because Japan normally buys so little from England or the Empire. The principal exception to this is Australian wool, which Japan imports in large quantities, and the prospect of losing this wool market may well operate to keep Australia from giving Britain support in the trade war.

I urge you to read the following in regard to the harassing effect on our mills produced by the collection of refunds:

No provision can be found protecting processors (mills) or owners of fabric against irreparable loss in case the tax is suspended or reduced, but only in case the tax is wholly terminated. The possibilities of this thing make it imperative for Senators and Congressmen who are active in this matter to see what they are doing. It is satisfactory to urge action looking toward the termination of the tax, but to work for suspension or reduction of the tax will do more harm than good—will create chaotic merchandising, conditions the likes of which have never been experienced in the cotton-goods industry. In the hands of mills (producers or processors) and in the hands of merchants, wholesalers, retailers, and bag men are hundreds of millions of yards of cotton fabrics all carrying anywhere from 4.5 to 5.5 cents per pound tax (4.2 cents "upped" by the amount of waste in conversion from lint cotton to fabric), and all of whom paid millions to the Government in floor-stock taxes. None of this is returnable unless the tax is wholly terminated. If it is reduced, no proportional amount equal to the reduction is returnable to owners of fabric. And yet, at the first instant that a proclamation suspending or reducing the tax went into effect, millions of pounds of fabric would have to be marked down and sold or invoiced at lower prices equal to the amount that the tax was lowered or suspended. Many mills with large stocks of cloth on hand, produced in anticipation of demand which has not materialized as yet, and produced for stock to keep working forces intact and labor occupied, would be bankrupt or their capital structures seriously impaired by their losses. The only parties who could escape serious losses through a suspension or reduction in the tax are those mills which have no stocks on hand, which is the rare condition to be found. Even when the tax is wholly terminated, in which case claims for refund of floor stocks are in order, a firm will probably have to wait a year or more for its money from the Treasury Department. This wait alone will impair the capital of many mills.

If you want to know what happens when the tax is suspended or refunded, refer to Secretary Wallace's proclamation of June 1934, suspending tax on certain large-size bags and the compensatory taxes on paper and jute. The latter went off immediately the proclamation became effective, since the tax was levied at the time paper and jute were converted into bags. However, the tax which was supposed to be suspended when cotton cloth was converted into bags goes right on. This is because the tax was collected when raw cotton was converted into fabric. The tax is imbedded in the price of the fabric. To get it back the firm has to file a claim for refund. It was months (along about October or November 1934) before the Treasury Department got out the necessary forms and regulations to file claim for refund, and to date only a relatively few thousand dollars has been refunded, although perfected claims are running into hundreds of thousands at tremendous cost to the mills. The effect of the proclamation, instead of helping cotton and cotton fabrics, has been just the opposite. It has hurt cotton. Why? Because the compensatory taxes on paper and jute ceased last June, but the tax on cotton, though refundable, goes right on, throwing the prices of these competing staples more out of line than before. Of what avail if consumers wait for, not months, but what looks like years, to get their refunds, to which they are entitled?

Despite the law and the amendment which covers the matter of rebate of floor-stock tax when, and if, the tax is terminated, suspended or reduced, it can be seen what this one uncertainty is doing to the industry. It is a nightmare and unquestionably is slowing down trade. The desire is to be as clear of stocks as possible when the tax goes off.

Is the Treasury Department going to require an affidavit of tax payment to support every item in a floor-stock inventory? This requirement alone has slowed down refunds to manufacturers from 6 months to 1 year in acting under Wallace's proclamation of June 12, 1934. If they are going to require such an affidavit, thousands of wholesalers, retailers, and converters will be cheated out of the refund they are legally entitled to, because they will be unable to comply, the fabrics having lost their identity; for example, a single carload of cotton fabric going to a manufacturer or to a wholesaler may be split into hundreds of smaller shipments, going to retailers or in some other disposition.

Even though the tax may not be suspended or reduced, the uncertainty is ever present; and a clear-cut outline by Wallace and the Treasury Department as to how they intend to handle this situation when it does arise will ease the minds of thousands of buyers all over the country and give them the assurance they want, so they can go ahead and buy and stock goods in the normal course instead of running stocks down to nothing. Of course, it backs up on the mills. They are holding the bag, and when normal distribution is disrupted their stocks pile up and the mill closes.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] said yesterday that the processing tax had no effect whatever on imports or exports. Think of that for a foolish statement. Every added cost to the manufactured article serves, of course, to prevent our competing with the foreigner selling his goods here or abroad. As far as Japan is concerned the situation is more startling. At the moment, Great Britain is about to restrict Japanese imports into her home country, and she is going to ask Australia to join her, even although Japan buys a great deal of wool from Australia. In the United States today there are 37,000,000 spindles, but 4,000,000 are idle. Japan has 9,000,000 spindles and exports 2,000,000,000 yards. The United States has 30,000,000 spindles and exports only one-fifth of a billion or 200,000,000 yards. And Japan is going into South America, from which we buy a great deal, and she has captured our markets, has captured the British markets, and is now insisting on a parity in naval strength to protect those markets in which she has achieved such astounding success. The Japanese matter is more serious than the gentleman would like us to believe. Just the so-called "little amount" that is now being exported to this country has a most depressing effect on prices. It affects the entire price structure. Your wife or mine will buy a Japanese article for 50 cents, and their neighbor will shop a long time before she will pay double for a similar article. It is not alone in the textile field that Japan is troubling us and this problem of her imports to us should be met courageously. While it is true that we sell her much raw cotton, we well understand the bargaining which she is carrying on today in procuring raw cotton from other countries. We know that in India she has even captured the home market, and in order to do that she must have bargained, or made concessions. We know something about what can be done by way of tricky performances in the matter of monetary exchange.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not much longer inflict my voice upon the Committee, but shall extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. No. I am like the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN]. The only successful method is apparently not to have a speech punctured and challenged during the making. I have always yielded, and I have always welcomed interruptions, but on this occasion I must refuse. In closing, do I have to apologize for or defend New England—New England which has given so much to the entire country, not only men of the pioneer type but of her wealth, taking great risks to build up your various industries all over this country? She has paid enormous taxes by comparison with most other States. You know that men of thrift and industry live there. Our people have always worked and saved. They have not had other people to wait upon them. They have not had cheap labor. The young men in our section were not brought up to go hunting and fishing all the time, and to be gentlemen to be waited upon. Our whalers went to the farthest corners of the earth and made a little money, and when that industry ended they were willing to experiment and invest in the textile industry. In those days how happy the South was that New England did it! New England has given over much to our country, and in spite of Secretary Wallace's sarcasm, she is not now whining. I do hope that we from New England are able to state her case properly. I do not wish to be political or partisan in these matters, but you gentlemen on the other side well know that in speaking from the floor we sometimes indulge in remarks rather taunting the other side. Yesterday the speech of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] was carefully prepared and skillfully read. Seemingly it met with the approbation of a great political party, but to me it gave evidence of too much satisfaction over the thought that New England's mills could not compete with the conditions existing in other parts of the country. So I have now taken my turn to rise here to plead and to protest with all the power I possess, to the end that greatly needed relief may be afforded to this great but stricken industry, whether located in the North or in the South. [Applause.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois has a statement of a minute or two to make, and I am glad to yield to him.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, we have often heard it said that no news is good news; but the best news that we have had in a long time—in fact, for the last 2 years—was in the morning's paper, when we read that Frank Walker is to be named by the President to handle the moneys and allotments as a kind of clearing house under the public-works bill. Mr. Walker, from Montana and New York, is one of the most astute business men in the United States. The President, the administration, and the country are to be congratulated on the appointment of Mr. Walker to make a clearing house in the allocation of these funds.

I congratulate the President, and I think the membership on this side of the aisle and the membership on the other side of the aisle will agree that the President has made one of the most wonderful appointments at this time that he has made since he came into power. [Applause.]

I thank the gentleman from Virginia for allowing me this moment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I be notified when I have consumed 25 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, after persistence, I have finally been able, as the gentleman from Massachusetts just said, to have the honor of making a few remarks to my colleagues in the House. I had rather hoped that 12 years of service in the House, under circumstances which I thought were courteous and friendly to opponents as well as Members of my own party, might have entitled me to the kindly consideration of the gentlemen of the minority; but, exercising the privilege they had, they objected to my speaking in the House, and I am very glad to speak in the committee. I excuse the gentlemen, though. I do not hold it against them. I rather sympathize with them, for I have noticed of late with considerable apprehension some very alarming symptoms manifesting themselves in the conduct and in the antics of the Kentucky colonel from New York [Mr. SNELL] and the distinguished and amiable rear admiral from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]. I do not believe it is a serious malady, however. I think I have diagnosed it. In fact, when I was a little kid I often used to have that same trouble, especially when I had stolen out and partaken a little too freely of green apples. I recommend to the gentlemen the same dose that my mother gave me, Jamaica ginger and castor oil. That will make you feel better. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, on the 6th day of April the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] a former colleague in the House, a personal friend and a most amiable gentleman, went down to the city of Roanoke in my State, in my home city, and appeared before a most delightful and cultured audience, and there delivered what many people believe was his keynote address in his campaign for the Republican nomination for President in 1936. He chose as the subject of his address the phrase that "The old Democratic donkey ain't what it used to be."

I rise now for the purpose of saying that to the extent of the title of his address we are in perfect accord, because in truth and in fact the old Democratic donkey "ain't what it used to be." It used to be the emblem of defeat and minority. Today it is the insignia of victory and progress. No more is it the stupid, slow-moving, long-eared beast of burden, noted principally for its ability to kick and emit jackassical brays, but in this new day, with undaunted courage, with steadfast determination, it bears upon its broad back the burdens of a stricken people; and it marches on, surely if slowly, to the day of deliverance when in this land of political liberty there shall also be economic freedom and social justice.

This new Democratic donkey is emblematic of a new thought, a new era, a new party, a new order. It has seen and caught the inspiration from the dawning light of a new era and is answering the call to duty of a new social and economic order.

Forward is the watchword. Domestic tranquility and national security is its objective. It typefies a new party, a rejuvenated party, an inspired party, a party that dares, if you please, to destroy so-called "ancient landmarks" when those ancient landmarks are but tombstones of a social and economic order that have brought only disappointment and despair. We are living in a world of rapid changes. It is a far cry, my colleagues, back to the day of Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton. Economic social conditions are different. The problems of government and the necessity for government are different. The people are different. It is a different world. Swiftly the moving hand of progress has left its impress upon the social and economic life of our country. The patriot fathers who labored so well to lay the foundations of this Government could not have imagined in their moments of wildest speculation a social and economic order such as we face today.

Those fundamentals have not changed. Thomas Jefferson, the patriot saint of the Democratic Party, fought for the rights of the masses of the people. He laid down the gage of battle to those who denied to every man an equality of opportunity. He fought that battle upon the terms, on the issues, and with the implements of warfare at hand in his day. The battle still rages. The fundamental principles involved are still here. The objective is the same, though the implements of warfare and the ethics of conflict have changed.

It is very strange to me that there are many highly patriotic citizens today who will concede that it is highly desirable that there should be revolutionizing changes in the social and economic order, yet will not agree that there can be any departure from the old precepts of government. In their way of thinking there can be no virtue in anything new. To their minds, a principle of government must be hoary with age in order to be dependable and virtuous. These very delightful and estimable citizens, politically speaking, are still living in the days of hoop skirts and bustles. The wheels of progress have passed on and left them behind. They cannot find it in their hearts to accept the new order. What is this new order? Is it really a departure from the fundamentals of government as our forefathers conceived them? I do not think it is. I think it is a determination on the part of the present leadership of our Nation to meet fairly and squarely facts and issues that exist today and apply the necessary remedies in the present emergency and to endeavor, if possible, to build safeguards for the future.

In his address at Roanoke, the distinguished Senator laid great stress in quoting from the Democratic platform and from the campaign utterances of the President, particularly as it related to the promise to curtail expenses of government. The speaker made the most of this. He held the President personally responsible for everything. In fact, I am not so sure that he did not, at least to his own satisfaction, prove that the Democrats were responsible for the depression. What candidate Roosevelt said or what candidate Hoover said does not interest the American people today nearly so much as what President Roosevelt is trying to accomplish. It is interesting, however, if we are going to dig back into the past and measure actions by words to apply the rule to both of the candidates. At the particular moment, I am reminded of a very eloquent and impassioned deliverance made by Mr. Hoover on August 11, 1928, at Palo Alto, Calif., when he accepted the Republican nomination for President in a memorable campaign in which he was so overwhelmingly elected. Here is what candidate Hoover said:

> Unemployment in the sense of distress is widely disappearing. * * * We, in America today, are nearer the final triumph over poverty than ever before in the history of any land. The poorhouse is vanishing from among us. We have not yet reached the goal, but given a chance to go forward with the policies of the last 8 years we shall soon, with the help of God, be in sight of the day when poverty will be banished from this Nation. There is no guarantee against poverty equal to a job for every man. That is the primary purpose of the economic policies we advocate.

I do not have the time nor is it necessary to remind you what happened. Mr. Hoover was elected overwhelmingly. Undoubtedly he went forward with the policies of the preceding 8 years. You know the result.

Another prophet has just appeared in the political horizon in the form of Mr. Roger W. Babson, a great economist. Just a few days ago in an address in New York he advocated giving to United States Senators full salaries for life. In characteristic fashion he condemned everything that is happening, warned us that revolution was impending, and in true Babsonian fashion called down the wrath of the universe upon the Democratic Party. The vaporings of this great Republican economist are not very impressive, however, when we remember some of his previous prognostications. This gentleman also made some prophecies in 1928. In an address to the National Business Congress at Wellesley Hills, Mass., he made the following statement:

> If Smith should be elected with a Democratic Congress we are almost certain to have a resulting business depression in 1929. * * * The election of Hoover and a Republican Congress should result in continued prosperity for 1929.

Again on December 26, 1930, in one of his syndicated interviews, he made the following prophecy:

> In a big way 1931 can be described as a year of opportunities. In 1929 we were living in a palace with a powder mine in the cellar. In 1931 we may feel sure that we are living in a poorhouse with a gold mine in the cellar.

And again on May 9, 1931, the following:

> Statistics show clearly that business reached its low point in December of last year. Since then there has been a steady but constant improvement. Everything indicates that general business has turned the corner. * * * I go further and say that 1931 should offer the greatest opportunities of any year for generations.

His present apprehensions will be treated just about as seriously by the American people as they were in those other days.

As a Democrat, I am interested in party success, but first of all I am interested in the welfare of my country. I sincerely believe that the American people made no mistake when they called to national leadership Franklin D. Roosevelt. I believe I voice the sentiments of an overwhelming majority of the American people when I say they still have confidence in his high sincerity of purpose and his devout determination to serve his country in a great tragic hour. I do not object to strong opposition to the present policies of the administration. The very safety of our country demands that we have perfect freedom of speech, and that we be not afraid to speak our sentiments. It is wholesome for the country to have a strong minority viewpoint, and one of the tragedies of the present moment is that our good friends in the opposition party, while loud in their criticism, have no leadership, no plan, and nothing whatever to offer in the place of what the President is trying to do. Before the country will take our Republican friends seriously, there is one inquiry which I believe they will have to answer, and that is this: If you know so well now what is the matter with the country and what ought to be done to straighten it out, then why did you not during those 12 years, in which you had complete control of the Government, at least prevent the happening of this great catastrophe? Why do you not tell us how the hungry, the destitute, and the aged may be cared for if the present plan is not the proper way? Why do you not tell us how to relieve unemployment and put these millions of men back to work if the President's plan is not a good one? I know what your answer would be. You will talk about a balanced Federal Budget and a return of confidence. All of this is devoutly to be desired, but talk of a balanced Budget and theories of government and constitutional limitations will not meet the very practical problems with which the President is wrestling.

I do not mean to say that errors have not been made. More often than not, however, they have been errors of administration rather than inherent defects in the plan of operation. We have sought to profit by those errors. The present administration has not hesitated to change its course of action when such a change seemed necessary or desirable to carry out the objective. We Democrats do not deny that we are human and that we make mistakes. It is only our friends, the Republicans, who are perfect and who are all-wise. How happy, however, we are today that under the wise and courageous leadership of our President we move forward. In these strenuous times the President deserves to have, certainly from the members of his own party, their cordial and sympathetic support and good wishes. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, time does not permit any lengthy or detailed description of the various relief measures put into operation by the administration. May I say at the outset that, speaking entirely for myself, I have viewed with some considerable disappointment and apprehension the operation of some of these measures? I voted for them, however, feeling that the emergency justified some degree of experimentation and with complete confidence in the good judgment of the President to profit by experience and to correct errors wherever they might appear. The administration has not claimed, nor do I claim, perfection for all of these efforts; but I do claim that the President has made and is making an honest and a courageous effort to meet the situation as it has developed and that he is entitled to the support of the country, and especially is he entitled to the good wishes and the sympathetic cooperation of the members of his own party.

The President and his administration face today probably the most unique situation that has ever developed in the history of our country. The shafts of sharp criticism and bitter arraignment are leveled at him by his political opponents. Certain groups and elements of so-called "big business" are now bitterly resenting what they term "too much Government interference", notwithstanding the fact that a short time ago when they were flat, they were very anxious and willing to have Government assistance. In addition, there are distinguished and highly patriotic members of his own party who are most unhappy over the trend of events. Against this array, the President has to contend on the other side wtih those vociferous elements who are willing to take advantage of the unsettled condition of affairs and who would fan into a red flame the passions and emotions of our people by holding up before them all sorts of fantastic and visionary schemes. These various elements are opposing the President and his policies but for widely different and separated motives. They meet, however, upon one common ground. That is, in many instances they make the task of recovery forces much more difficult. One group opposes him because he is too radical, another group because he is too conservative. There is, though, I do believe over and above these particular groups an overwhelming sentiment in this country today that has unbounded confidence in the integrity, the high purpose, and the ability of our President to succeed. [Applause.] It might be possible to destroy this administration and its policies. If that is done, then I ask you, what next? No party, no plan, no leader has yet appeared upon the political horizon who offers the hope of success that we may find in our Chief Executive. There is only one figure on the political horizon today around which there is any earthly hope of building permanent recovery. That is Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The N. R. A. has been the target of bitter denunciation in many quarters. There are others who tell us it has done good. Undoubtedly, there is a happy medium that should be struck, and an effort should be made to salvage and save its beneficial qualities and to throw into the discard those policies and operations which have had only the effect of annoying and pestering the average small business man.

AGRICULTURE

Every responsible statistical statement that can be found shows that for the first time in a decade agriculture shows signs of recuperating. The policies of the administration with reference to agriculture have also been the subject of severe criticism, and some of it has no doubt been merited, but undoubtedly the President and his advisors will have the discernment and the good judgment to know what part of this program has been beneficial and what part detrimental.

Farm cash income from marketings of crops and livestock in the entire United States was $4,328,000,000 in 1932, $4,889,000,000 in 1933, and $5,534,000,000 in 1934.

In addition to this income from marketings, farmers participating in A. A. A. commodity-control programs received cash income in the form of benefit and rental payments of $161,734,000 in 1933 and $555,782,000 in 1934. Total farm cash income for 1934 was thus $6,090,000,000, as contrasted to $4,328,000,000 in 1932.

In the State of Virginia farm cash income rose from $61,000,000 in 1932 to $100,000,000 in 1934, a gain of 64 percent.

Figures by commodities for 1934 are not yet available, but the difference even between the 1932 and the 1933 income from certain of the most important crops in Virginia is a striking one.

The 1932 Virginia production of tobacco was worth $4,744,000; the 1933 production, $12,416,000. The 1932 Virginia production of potatoes was worth $4,237,000; the 1933 production, $6,429,000. The 1932 Virginia production of apples was worth $4,065,000; the 1933 production, $5,192,000. The total value of crops produced in Virginia in 1932 was $29,454,000; the total value of the 1933 production was $46,191,000, plus $782,000 of rental and benefit payments on wheat and cotton adjustment contracts.

These changes in farm income are reflected in the decline in farmer bankruptcies for the entire United States from 5,917 in 1933 to 4,716 in 1934, a decline of 20 percent.

The extent to which increased farm purchasing power made it possible for farmers to buy the city-made goods that they need in order to operate their farm as a business and their farm as a home appears in the figures for sales of the great mail-order houses. The monthly average sales of these firms, whose customers are largely in rural areas, were $38,345,000 in 1932, $39,775,000 in 1933, $49,640,000 in 1934.

New automobile registrations tell a similar story. In 1932, 1,277,000 new cars were registered in the United States. In 1933, 1,740,000; in 1934, 2,292,000. In Virginia the figures were 25,000 in 1932 and 40,000 in 1934, an increase of 60 percent.

The importance of the farm market is shown by the increase of advertising lineage in farm journals in 1934, as compared with 1933. The change was, in the East, 30 percent; in the Middle West, 29 percent; in the Southwest, 56 percent; in the Far West, 32 percent.

The revival of farm purchasing power has been a boon to the cities as well as the farms. A study recently made by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration of car-lot shipments over four railroads from the industrial States of the Northeast to the agricultural States of the Southeast shows that shipments during the 12 months ending July 1, 1934, were 38.8 percent greater than shipments in the preceding 12 months. That is to say, in the year following the inauguration of the A. A. A. cotton and tobacco-control programs, car-lot shipments of industrial commodities increased by 816,302,238 pounds.

These are a few of the figures which show what has happened to agriculture during the first 2 years of the new deal as contrasted to the last year of the "old deal." They show the extent to which the farmer is working back to his rightful place as a member of the American economic community, and they indicate to what extent the cities have benefited from his doing so.

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

By refinancing farmers' debts on a sound basis the Farm Credit Administration has helped to stop the tide of foreclosures, which 2 years ago were piling up in practically every farming community in the country. The heavy burden of farm-mortgage indebtedness has been lightened and at the same time, in addition to refinancing farm mortgages, a complete system of credit for the farmer, including short-term loans as well as long-term mortgage loans, has been set up and placed in operation.

Here are the total figures: Over $2,600,000,000 has been loaned to farmers and farmers' cooperative organizations during the past 2 years. Of this total approximately $1,615-,000,000 represented farm-mortgage loans, $780,000,000 short-term production credit, and $205,000,000 has been loaned to farmers' cooperative marketing and purchasing organizations.

Over 450,000 farmers have obtained long-term mortgage loans to refinance their debts. In short, more farmers have gotten the benefits of long-term land bank and land bank commissioner loans during the past 2 years than the number who had loans in May 1933, after 17 years of operation of the Federal land banks. These farmers, thousands of whom have been saved from foreclosure, pay a lower rate of interest on these loans than they did on their old debts. The loans are made for long periods up to thirty-odd years, repayable in small annual or semiannual installments. The loans are based on normal values, giving the farmer a chance to work out of debt.

In addition to helping thousands of farmers save their homes and farms, the Farm Credit Administration has relieved the credit situation in other ways. Commercial banks, for instance, have received almost $400,000,000 in liquidation of mortgages and notes owed by farmers who have been refinanced. Thousands of creditors to whom farmers owed money have strengthened their financial position through liquidation of mortgages, notes, and charge accounts. Over 3 percent of the money loaned by the land banks and the commissioner has been used to pay State and county taxes owed by farmers.

Under the Farm Credit Administration for the first time in our history a complete system for making short-term loans has been set up. Today farmers in every section are within comparatively short distance of a local production credit association which makes short-term loans suited to the farmers' needs. Altogether there are over 560 of these associations providing a permanent source of production credit. By means of these cooperative organizations a farmer can use his crops and chattels as bankable assets for short-term money. These associations are now in the midst of the spring financing season and their services to farmers are rapidly increasing. Since January 1 over 100,000 farmers have obtained loans to finance this season's crops and livestock.

The Farm Credit Administration has also established a system of 13 banks for cooperatives—a central bank in Washington and 12 district banks. These institutions provide a needed source of credit for farmers' associations which market farm products and purchase farm supplies cooperatively.

The Federal land banks, the production credit associations, and the banks for cooperatives are all cooperative institutions. Every farmer or farmers' organization which obtains credit takes a share in the cooperative financing business. In this way a farmer-owner and farmer-controlled credit system is being built up.

Although the permanent institutions under the Farm Credit Administration have been capitalized entirely or in part by Government funds, the major portion of their loans is obtained through the sale of securities to the investing public.

F. E. R. A.

The Federal Emergency Relief Administration under Harry L. Hopkins has provided $2,315,610,317 worth of relief to the needy and destitute victims of the depression and drought in the 23 months since its creation by President Roosevelt in May 1933.

When the F. E. R. A. was established, the small amount of relief being extended throughout the country was in many sections on a starvation basis. The F. E. R. A. has raised the standard of relief to amounts more nearly adequate.

It is virtually impossible to overestimate the importance of the change that the F. E. R. A. has wrought in the methods of extending relief. It has succeeded in swinging relief giving throughout the country away from direct relief to a great program of work relief. There are now two and a half million heads of families working for their relief allowances. This has effectively minimized the deterioration of morale among the jobless workers. It has maintained work habits and given to the country a wealth of useful results from the hundreds of thousands of work projects that have been done for public benefit.

It has brought about more adequate relief for the sufferers.

It has encouraged and increased the proportion of work relief, rather than direct relief or the dole.

It has made agreements with the States for a greater State share of participation in paying the costs of relief.

As the unit of Government through which American citizens have expressed their conviction that they are their brothers' keepers under distress, I believe that we can write F. E. R. A.'s functions and activities into the history of this depression as a tremendous job well done. It has handled its duties in an American way. It has fed and clothed and sheltered and provided medical care for the needy. That was what it was created to do; and I believe what I said in the beginning—in handling the more than $2,000,000,000 of relief funds during its 23 months of hard-working life, the F. E. R. A. has provided the country with exactly that much worth of relief.

Eight hundred thousand American homes have been refinanced and saved to their owners because of the financial assistance rendered by the Government under this administration. Many business enterprises have been saved, jobs made secure for workmen, and the wheels of progress kept moving because of financial assistance rendered through the medium of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The banks of our country were saved and untold loss prevented by the timely and courageous intervention of the President and his policies. All of this idea of the Government lending money is contrary to our orthodox precepts, but is there a man among us who will have the hardihood to say that it has not been justified?

The President is now in the act of announcing the administration's policies with reference to the work-relief program. The country awaits this pronouncement with keen anticipation. His announced determination to transfer able-bodied men from relief rolls to gainful employment met with a spontaneous response from the National Legislature, as well as from the people. We have given the President a great instrumentality of war against unemployment. It is now up to him.

The vicissitudes of old age and dependency and the hazards of unemployment will be met by the passage ultimately of the President's social-security bill. For the first time in the history of the Nation this vital sociological problem has been courageously acknowledged and met. The bill as passed by the House is not a perfect bill, but again we shall have to profit by our experience and remedy and correct defects as and when they appear. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel disposed to prolong this discussion or encumber the RECORD with a great statement of statistics. Everyone knows conditions are better. We know, however, that the fight is not yet won.

Mr. Chairman, I reiterate, in closing, that the Democratic donkey is not what it used to be, but may I say in all good nature to the distinguished Senator from Iowa that the good old G. O. P. elephant has not changed a bit. It is just exactly what it has always been. If there is any virtue in that, then he is certainly entitled to all of the comfort and consolation that comes with that knowledge. I will admit that its appearance is perhaps not quite so formidable. It is not quite so sleek, and perhaps not so well nourished, as in those other days, but by nature it is just the same. It stands for exactly what it has always stood for. It is emblematic of the same party policies and principles. It still thinks more about a balanced Budget than it does about sufficient diet for hungry people. Its objective is still to protect and to promote special privileges and interests. It is just the same old elephant, representing the same old party, which the people of this country so emphatically repudiated in 1932. It reminds us of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover.

Recently, in another body, the very charming and lovable Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], in the course of a very impassioned discussion of present-day policies, made this very interesting statement:

> I predict that unless we about face and walk back toward sanity, we will rue the day, and that we will realize that silence was not the part of friendship, the part of patriotism, or the way to assist in getting out of the depression.

I can agree with much of the sentiment that prompted this distinguished Democrat to hold out a warning to his party, and to my party, that we are perhaps approaching or passing through the most critical period of our responsibility to the American people; that we shall surely be held accountable for the public trust that has been placed in our hands, and that the time has come for us to proceed with caution and care; but when the Senator tells me to about face, and to walk back toward sanity, then I am unable to follow his logic or reasoning. Where am I going to walk, and where will I find the sanity? Surely he would not have me go back to March 3, 1933? Surely, he does not mean that this sanity will be found in the dark, cloudy days of Harding, or in those beautiful sunlit days of Coolidge, when smug complacency and eloquent silence were mistaken for wisdom. Surely, he would not have me turn back my steps to the fateful days of the Hoover administration, when a succession of economic earthquakes precipitated us into an abyss of despair and hopelessness. Ah, my friends, we do not move backward; we move forward!

Very recently there came from the press of the Macmillan Co. a volume by Mr. Ogden Mills, former Member of the House of Representatives and Secretary of the Treasury under Mr. Hoover. The title of the volume is "What of Tomorrow?" Mr. Mills asks the very interesting question, "Where do we go from here?" The American people may not be able at the moment to definitely and accurately tell him just where we are going. They can, however, give him a pretty accurate description of the tragic excursion into the land of economic disaster from which we are just now emerging. They can also give him the name of the party and its leaders who were our conductors on this pilgrimage.

I do not claim to have prophetic vision or to be able to tear aside the veil that separates the present from the future and to prophecy with accuracy what is going to happen to us. I do not know. I do not know whether permanent recovery is just over the brow of the hill straight ahead or in the far distant future. I do not know whether the road shall take us farther to the left or whether there must be a sharp turn to the right. Of one thing, however, I am definitely and positively sure: That is, that economic solidarity and domestic tranquillity, which are the havens of our refuge, are before and not behind us. There can be no turning back to the old order of things or its discredited leaders. Of that I am sure; and, though I do not know how long the journey may be, nor whither the road shall lead us, yet I do know we are headed in the right direction. [Applause.]

May I say, in conclusion, wth all of the sincere earnestness of which I am capable, that there are many things which have happened and that are happening which are not in full accord with my own ideas. I think this is true of every man in the House. Errors have been made, many of them administrative errors. We try to profit by those errors and change our course when conditions show that we should change it; but today there is no plan, no leader, no idea, no constructive movement in America to take us out of this depression except that which is headed by our administration. [Applause.] I devoutly believe that there is only one man today upon the political horizon in America around which a recovery program could be builded, and that is Franklin D. Roosevelt. [Applause.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia, who just preceded me, one of the Democratic leaders of the House, said he did not know where "we", referring to the Democratic Party, were going, but his intimation was that we were on our way.

There is nothing new nor startling in his statement. Not only the people at large, but the members, the leaders, of his own party have been laboring under the same difficulty, and there is nothing strange in that when we consider the inconsistent policies they originate and follow.

But, even as Republicans, there is no reason why, looking toward the future, even though it be the distant future, we should be pessimistic. Our faith in the people of our country, in their good sense, their honesty, their industry, their thrift, and their patriotism, is such that we may be quite sure that, even the Democratic Party, with all of its unfortunate "noble experiments", its method of governing by the adoption and use, at the expense of the taxpayer, of every fantastic idea, simply because it is something new, will never be able to permanently class us, as a Nation, with the inhabitants of Russia and similar peoples, even though it has traveled far on the road.

As in the days which have passed, those dark days in the history of our country, the spirit of rugged individualism, which you affect to despise, will prove to be the balance wheel, the gyroscope, to keep us on our course, placing us once more in the vanguard of that march toward the goal where liberty is secure and there is justice for all. The history of the Democratic Party as a party shows little, if anything, which has even tended toward the attainment of that end.

The gentleman also said that the Republican Party was the party of special privilege. The charge, if made against the party as a whole, is unfounded. If by it he meant that at times and on occasion special interests had profited while it was in power, the charge is true. Equally true is it that every party, when in power has had those within its ranks, attracted there quite naturally by the opportunity which only a winning party can give, who have sought and obtained for themselves and their friends unjustifiable advantages.

But never before, so far as my recollection serves, has a great national party had as its national committeeman a member of the Cabinet, as a dispenser of Federal patronage. Never before in the history of the Nation has there been a party which granted so many special privileges to so many different classes as has the Democratic Party since the 1932 election.

Cotton farmers, the hog and corn raisers and growers, the tobacco farmers, and class after class have been granted special inducements, ostensibly to benefit the business in which the particular group was engaged or relieve the handicap from which it was suffering, but used, practically and effectively, for the purchase of votes.

If there is anyone that you have missed in your attempts to purchase votes, to buy elections, except, of course, the veterans in their application for the bonus, memory fails me.

Oh, the gentleman was right when he said, referring to the donkey as the party emblem, "She ain't what she used to be." We agree with you. We know, as do you, that in the olden days the Democratic Party was a party of principle.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. We know it was a party which came out, in its party platform, for something, made a declaration of principles, during the campaign fought for those principles, and, after the election was over, made an honest, earnest endeavor to put them into effect. It was a party which came out on the floor of the House here and advocated a single measure at a time and fought for that measure on its merits. It was a party of which anyone might be proud to be a member, for it at least had sincerity of conviction and honesty of purpose.

No; you are right. The Democratic Party "ain't what she used to be." You put out a platform in 1932 which contained a statement of sound, progressive principles, which appealed to all true Americans. Subsequent actions indicate that some, at least, never intended it as a declaration of principles, but merely as a bid for votes. Your candidates went up and down the country promising fulfillment of your party platform. Your candidate for the Presidency promised the people, in return for their votes, a balancing of the Budget, a lessening of governmental expenses, freedom from interference of bureaucrats, a sound currency, and, through his spokesmen, no inflation.

Sound money? We all knew what that meant. It meant the payment of the Government's obligations in the manner specified on the Government's currency and in the Government's bonds. But, after hundreds of millions of new promises had been issued, promises to pay in gold, within a few short months those promises were solemnly repudiated.

"She ain't what she used to be!" Right you are. It "used to be" that honesty was the best policy; it was the best policy in private life; it was never dreamed that a government could, or would, even think of anything else. But you, as a party, after so bitterly and scornfully condemning the nations of Europe which repudiated their war debts, have adopted the Kaiser's thought that a government's promise is only "a scrap of paper." You have deliberately, by almost a unanimous vote, under the guise of "an emergency", betrayed your own people, taken from them the gold which they owned, and now brag of the "profit" so made at their expense. You have increased the Nation's book wealth by taking the property of the individual, represented by the gold which he lawfully held, until you made of such holding a crime.

While the books of every State contain laws making it a criminal offense to hold out an inducement to obtain a vote or to influence voters, before the last election you caused to be spent, did you not, hundreds of thousands of dollars, the very purpose of which was to return members of your party to power? Today your party leaders are telling the States that if they wish to share in the distribution of Federal funds, to obtain the benefit of money appropriated for the relief of suffering humanity, they must mold their legislation in accordance with your pattern.

Now, as you bring in bills, is it not true that many of them are drafted with their vote-catching possibilities in view? Is not every one of them a bid for more votes?

The gentleman said, "We are marching on", and in substance he added, "But I do not know to where." Sure, you are marching on. And, if you have your way, you are marching on to inflation, to national bankruptcy, are you not? And, perhaps, national bankruptcy will clear the air, and then once more we can settle down to that principle which your President declared to be absolutely necessary—the balancing of the Budget and the living, nationally, within our income.

If you wish to know something about your party, never mind listening to what Republicans say. They doubtless are prejudiced, ill-advised, or misinformed. But go over to the other side—go over to the Senate and give ear to CARTER GLASS, to Senator TYDINGS, to Senator BAILEY, Democrats all, patriotic, each placing country before party, each pleading with you to return to sanity. Read what former Governor Ritchie, Al Smith, the present Governor of Georgia—yes, or the gentleman from Georgia sitting here in the House [Mr. COX]—what any of these gentleman has to say of your own shortcomings.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I heard him, Mr. Chairman. No, thank you. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Every time you come in here with a bill, what is its purpose? What is it? Do you bring in a bill for one particular thing, for one proposition? Take this last social-security bill you brought in—a little of good, but that little of good all wrapped up with a whole lot of other things, giving to the administration at the other end of the Avenue more authority, more power, all looking toward one purpose—the placing of legislative authority in the hands of the executive department, an increase in the power of the National Government, an attempt to batter down and make subservient the governments of the States, every move a step toward dictatorial power in one man's hands. Almost five billions for one man to spend. You know what it means. Answer to your conscience.

This you all know to be true. Member after Member on that side, as on our own, said of this legislation, "I do not like it; I do not believe in it; I do not want to vote for it." And then, when it came to a vote, all but a lonely 33 swallowed the mess and voted for it. [Laughter.] You took it, yes, rubber-stamp boys. Is it not too bad? Am I not right?

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. No.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You will not even acknowledge it.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Certainly not.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You take orders always and follow what comes down here from the other end of the Avenue.

The gentleman from Virginia further said that it was the Republican position that there is no virtue in anything new. The Democratic position is that there is no virtue in anything old—honesty, work, thrift, saving for old age, and living within one's income—wipe it all out; it is old, therefore of no value. That seems to be your thought.

Your idea is, if a man has a dollar, take it away from him and give it to someone else. That is your policy, and has been ever since the beginning of the session and during the last session, too—a pale pink version of HUEY LONG'S scheme of sharing the wealth.

And this is a strange thing—with cotton mills in North and South closing because of the laws which you have passed, with the textile industries on the verge of a complete collapse, yesterday a gentleman stood up here and told us about the benefits of the triple A, forgetting evidently that Secretary Wallace not so very long ago said that the triple A was only "a political expediency." What hypocrisy! Something announced as a great new principle, a part of the magic new deal, something to help the "underprivileged" to lead "the more abundant life", and then, after it had been tried and found to be a failure, the gentleman who wet-nurses it tells us that, after all, it was only "a political expediency"—a frank, if a breath-taking, confession.

"She ain't what she used to be"—the old Democratic mule—I'll say "she ain't." She used to be honest; she used to be sincere and honorable; she used to fight her battles for the things she wanted, for the things she believed in, but today she eats the feed that is brought down to her from the other end of the Avenue and she likes it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee. I regret that I did not hear all of the able speech of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. I think it is perfectly proper that a defense should be made of the administration on the floor of the House of Representatives. I know of no better or more proper place to discuss the issues before the country or of an abler spokesman for the new-deal policies. I am not here to criticize him, and there is no reason in the world why the gentleman should not take the floor and make a partisan speech. That is his right, and there ought to be more of them so that we can analyze the issues and know what the Democrats believe are the issues, what you take pride in, and what you claim you have accomplished for the best interests and welfare of the American people.

So far on this side we have been unable to find out what you have done to restore confidence and put American wage earners back to work, or even what you claim you have done. With statements of the kind just made we can join issue.

I did not hear the entire speech of the gentleman from Virginia, but I understand he attacked a Republican Senator who made a speech recently at Roanoke, Va., I assume a partisan speech, upholding the Republicans and criticizing the new-deal administration. Of course, that was his right. Senator DICKINSON, of Iowa, had a right to go to Roanoke, as I am going to Woodstock, Va., tomorrow night. I expect that I shall make a partisan speech and that I will point out the failures, the break-downs, and the broken promises of this administration.

But let me point out that it is not the Republicans who are criticizing the administration in the severest manner and in the bitterest terms. What about the two United States Senators from the State of Virginia, from the very State that the gentleman comes from—who have repeatedly denounced the A. A. A. and the N. R. A. They attacked them more vigorously and far more bitterly than any Republican has ever dared to denounce them.

I refer to the radio speech a few nights ago by Senator BYRD against the A. A. A. and the recent speech of Senator GLASS against the N. R. A. There seems to be some difference of opinion between the gentlemen from Virginia who made the laudatory speech today and his own two Senators from Virginia. It seems to me as if there was a conflict between them on the accomplishments of the administration and to what the real issues are.

And that is not all. The gentleman referred to the distinguished Senator from Maryland, Senator TYDINGS. He has at least the courage of his convictions as to the N. R. A. and the A. A. A., and stated within the last week that they were the greatest monstrosities ever imposed upon the American people.

Governor Talmadge, Governor of the great State of Georgia, almost the adopted State of the President, issued a statement only yesterday that it would be the greatest calamity to the country if the President is renominated by the Democratic Party. I will not refer to Senator LONG, for he has a habit of speaking for himself. We could answer every argument presented here by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] out of the mouths of prominent Democrats, and yet he spent most of his speech on a partisan denunciation of the Republican Party as having been responsible for these attacks upon the administration. Let me say as one Republican, and I think speaking for all, that we have no apology to offer for opposing the administration's new-deal policies where they failed, for exposing them, for criticizing them, and for condemning them. We believe it is not only our right but our duty to show to the American people the failure and break-down of these unsound, unworkable, and socialistic policies.

For 2 years we have been in the midst of Government by propaganda and ballyhoo, with hundreds of paid publicity agents, paid out of the Treasury of the United States, getting out news every hour of the day, making up news in defense of the new-deal administration, and getting it over the radio to the people back home, swamping them with misinformation and propaganda and trying to make them believe that Roosevelt and recovery are synonymous. And what do we find? We find a million and a half more unemployed today than there were a year ago, we find the breakdown of both the A. A. A. and the N. R. A. We find the people are impoverished, we find destruction of business confidence, and no consistent economic policy except to pile debt upon debt and borrow billions, more billions, and still more billions without regard to the day of reckoning and of the inevitable inflation, chaos, ruin, and bankruptcy. We find that in the North as well as in the South a great industry, the second greatest in the United States, the textile industry, is shouting from the housetops for relief because if the visionary free-trade policies of the Secretary of State, these long-distance economic free-trade policies, are put into effect, the factories of the North and the South will be shut down and millions more will be unemployed. The gentleman from Virginia says that we do not know where we are going. That is apparent, of course, by this time to the American people. No Democrat knows where we are going but they say, "We are not going back." We are not going back to what? To 1926? Does not the gentleman from Virginia know that the main policy of the Democratic Party as enunciated on the floor of this House time after time has been to get back to the price levels of 1926, under the Calvin Coolidge administration? It is about time that the Republicans on this side of the House also changed from the defensive and took up the offensive, because we have nothing to apologize for from 1921 to 1929.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield. My time is limited.

Mr. PARSONS. I will get the gentleman more time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I insist that the gentleman be permitted to proceed in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York declines to yield.

Mr. PARSONS. I ask the gentleman if he will yield if I get him more time.

Mr. FISH. Yes; if the gentleman will get me some extra time.

Mr. PARSONS. I shall do it.

Mr. FISH. But the gentleman cannot guarantee it, so I cannot yield. Get the time and I will yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is entitled to proceed in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will preserve the gentleman's right and all other rights. The gentleman engaged in the colloquy voluntarily with the gentleman from Illinois, and the Chair is not responsible for that. The Chair has protected the gentleman.

Mr. FISH. I am not complaining. I will protect my own rights. Between 1921 and 1929 what happened? Under the sound policies of the Republican Party business confidence was restored, American labor was employed, employed at the highest standard of wages and living ever known in this country or in any country in the history of the world. Why? Because of the sound policies of the Republican Party.

Mr. PARSONS. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Because the Budget was balanced.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Get me the extra time and I will yield. Because the Budget was balanced, the national debt reduced, because business men knew what money was worth, and as a result confidence pervaded the land from one end of the country to the other, which put American labor to work, and the Lord knows there is not a thinking man or woman in America today who would not like to go back to the prosperous times of 1926 when American labor was employed and received wages such as were paid at no other time or in no other nation in history. What is lacking today is confidence, without which there can be no employment of labor or business profits.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FISH. Only if he will get me extra time.

Mr. PARSONS. I will get the gentleman 5 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Very well, I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman says that from 1921 to 1929 the people were satisfied. The gentleman has been describing conditions that existed from 1926 to 1929. Will the gentleman tell the House just what happened during that period and what happened from January 1, 1929, to March 4, 1932?

Mr. FISH. Certainly, I shall be very glad to. For all those years, 1921 to 1929, American labor was employed and the factories were going full blast.

Mr. PARSONS. What about the 10,000,000 people out of employment between 1929 and 1932?

Mr. FISH. I am very glad the gentleman asked that question. I say again to the Members on the Republican side we should change from the defensive to the offensive. Here is what happened.

The Republicans have nothing to apologize for. We gave the people a veritable surplus or overabundance of prosperity between 1921 and 1929. Because of our sound policies we have always been the party of prosperity, and it is beginning to look as if there will be no more prosperity in America until the Republican Party is returned to power. The American people under three Republican administrations, Democrats and Republicans alike, with the money they made under those administrations, became wasteful and extravagant, buying two or three automobiles instead of one, and so on. Not only were they wasteful and extravagant but they speculated and gambled with the money they made under those administrations, to get rich overnight, without any work whatever, from the bank president to the office boy. Was there a Democrat anywhere in the country back in 1929 who cried "Halt!"? Was there anyone who said "We must stop these upward prices"? Not one. The only spokesman of the Democratic Party, the fiscal agent of the Democratic Party, Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale University, said at the end of 1929, "We have not yet reached the peak. We have entered a new era of high prices, which are definitely upward." He was the spokesman, and has been for many years in the past, of the Democratic Party. There was not a soul in 1929 on the Democratic side of this House who cried "Halt!" It was because the American people, Republicans and Democrats alike, who abused the wealth they had made under those administrations, threw it away, gambled and speculated, which made for the enormous inflation that sooner or later, as we look back, had to crash of its own weight. It did not stop at normalcy but went on down into the depths; and when it came, the Republican President in power suggested the only possible remedy.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. FISH. I do not yield.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman does not yield.

Mr. PARSONS. I propose to get the gentleman some additional time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, let us have order.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no point of order involved. The gentleman from New York has the floor, and he declines to yield.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman has promised to yield if I could get him more time. I will be glad to get him additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield. The gentleman having the floor has control of his own time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 17 minutes remaining.

Mr. FISH. So the crash came, and the Republican President then in power in the White House, with a Democratic House of Representatives, urged upon the Congress certain sound constructive legislation——

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No. I cannot yield. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] did not yield.

Based upon the experience of the past; and practically all those recommendations were thrown out of the window by a Democratic Congress, who, not like the Republican Party in the past, which has always placed the country above partisanship, turned down President Hoover's recommendations. The Republican Party followed Woodrow Wilson throughout the war, right to the end of the war, but when he asked for a Democratic Congress, then that was too much, and we gave him a Republican Congress. We supported this administration at the outset. For the first 3 months practically every Republican on our side voted for the recommendations of this administration, on a temporary emergency basis. But that was not so with the Democratic Congress under the Hoover administration in 1930. They threw out of the window every single sound, constructive measure suggested by him to relieve the unemployment situation except one, and that was the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, under which money was to be loaned on sound collateral. The Democrats took that and have used that vehicle to loan $8,000,000,000, and that has done more to stabilize industry, to preserve credit, to save credit from total collapse, to rehabilitate the banks and save the railroads, insurance companies, and business generally than all the panaceas and "brain trust" experiments of the new-deal administration combined. [Applause.]

Now, let the Republicans be fair. This new-deal administration—let us not call it Democratic—came into power on a sound platform pledged to reduce by 25 percent the running expenditures of the Government, to preserve sound money at all hazards, to stop borrowing and to stop deficits, to reduce the number of commissions, and lastly to balance the Budget. Every single one of those planks, I say to you Republicans, could be and should be supported by our party, and I would like to see them in the next Republican platform. If they are in the platform, the Republican Members of Congress will uphold them and adhere to them, instead of repudiating them, as the Democrats have done.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman probably will have some part in writing the next platform if he is the candidate for President. He is my candidate.

Mr. FISH. I thank the gentleman for the great honor of representing Tammany Hall. I have never been so flattered as being endorsed by Tammany Hall. [Laughter.]

Let us be fair. The Democrats came into power upon that platform. They were elected by the American people upon a sound platform. The American people in the depression wanted a change. They voted for President Roosevelt by an overwhelming majority. They wished him to succeed. For the first 3 months of his administration, adhering to the sound principles of his platform, he gave an admirable administration. He tried to balance the Budget. He tried to put into effect the sound policies of his platform. He had at least 90 percent of the American people with him after the first 2 or 3 months, and they believed that President Roosevelt was a Moses almost divinely sent to lead them out of the economic wilderness and back to prosperity and the reemployment of 10,000,000 loyal and industrious American wage earners. That was the hope of all of our people. Then all of a sudden something happened. That is what the gentleman from Virginia was talking about. The "new dealers" changed all their policies. They repudiated practically every important plank in their party platform and every principle of Jeffersonian Democracy. President Roosevelt appointed to office, often to key positions, a lot of radicals, socialists, and "new dealers" to experiment upon the American people and to produce a new social and economic order. That is what the gentleman from Virginia was talking about—a new social and economic order. They said that everything was wrong and rotten and corrupt in the past; all the experience and wisdom of the past must be scrapped. For what? For some form of socialism or communism of the left, or Hitlerism or fascism of the right; something imported from abroad; some foreign policies for a new economic and social order, where they have all failed, were to be substituted for our American system. Our economic and industrial system based upon private initiative and reasonable profit and free labor is to be scrapped by this new-deal administration; and you ask us to remain silent on our side and see those institutions of ours, political and economic, see our American system destroyed by the "new dealers", many of whom have never voted the Democratic ticket in their lives, and a new economic and social order substituted based on Government ownership, regimentation, collectivism, a crushing bureaucracy, and state socialism.

Let me ask you Jeffersonian Democrats, especially the Jeffersonian Democrats of Virginia, what it is the Jeffersonian Democrats have fought for all these years, for more than 135 years, fearlessly, without fear or favor, win or lose, but the rights and liberties of the individual under the Constitution, for State rights, for national economy, against the concentration of power in the Federal Government and against the use of this centralized power to interfere with the rights and liberties of individuals and of business? This was the Democratic creed until the "new dealers" came in; and, as an illustration, I am reminded of a story said to have been told by Abraham Lincoln of two men with their overcoats on who got into a fight and fought so hard they fought into each other's overcoat. That is what has happened between the Republican and Democratic Parties; the Democratic Party has fought so hard that it has fought itself into the Republican overcoat of centralized government; but not stopping there, it has gone way, way, way beyond into collectivism, regimentation, bureaucracy, and finally state socialism, getting as far away as they possibly could from the fundamental principles of Thomas Jefferson.

Only this morning I appeared before a committee of this House in behalf of a bill I introduced to erect an equestrian statue to Gen. Robert E. Lee in Arlington. The bill was reported out unanimously. As I spoke before that committee I was reminded of the fact that Gen. Robert E. Lee and the rest of the southerners fought in that war for a certain principle which they believed to be right under the Constitution. That principle was nothing more nor less than State sovereignty, the rights of the States; and let me say to you that this new-deal—not Democratic—administration has done more not only to trample upon the principles of Thomas Jefferson but to destroy State rights and the respect for State rights than all the Republican administrations since the Civil War. I wish to God there could be some revival among the Jeffersonian Democrats who still in their hearts must have a lingering faith in State rights, whether it be through Governor Talmadge, of Georgia, or some other Democrat. There is more need today for a revival of Jeffersonian Democracy than there was 75 years ago, more need for someone to speak for the rights and the interests of the States than ever before. If it is not done soon, the new-deal administration will have burned State rights so deep that there can be no hope of resurrecting them.

From the "new dealers" today we can expect just one thing: Repudiation of platform, repudiation of the principles of Thomas Jefferson, and, above all, a trampling in the mud of any reference of any kind to the sovereignty of the States.

Mr. Chairman, I rose today to join the chorus in regard to the deplorable textile and cotton situation. I find my time rapidly going; so I shall just touch upon the main points and I shall begin by reversing my speech in order to follow up another peculiar inconsistency of the Democratic Party. It is so inconsistent that it almost becomes consistent with the policies that are now being practiced by the Democratic Party. For many years the Democratic Party has claimed to be the low-tariff party, or the free-trade party; to be the party of the consumer, the party that stood for the protection of the consumer. What has happened? For the first time in history a new-deal Democratic administration comes into power and with its advent it levies processing taxes on the necessities of life, on cotton and foodstuffs against the consumer, a tax which is nothing more than a tariff directed against the consumers within the 48 States. Up to now as between the States we have been a free-trade country of 48 free States with no economic barriers between them. Along comes the new-deal Democratic free-trade administration and erects tariff barriers within our States; and, above all, against the American consumers on foodstuffs and the necessities of life. If this be not inconsistent with low-tariff principles, there is no such thing as inconsistency.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield. The Members have heard and will hear much more in regard to the textile and cotton industries and the sad plight at the present time. Had I the time I would like to go into more of the details of the situation. I shall, however, refer to an angle of it which has not been presented in the House, an angle which affects the textile States, North and South. That is the export trade. Two years ago the Philippines were our greatest single export market for cotton goods from both the North and the South. Two years ago when this administration came into power the United States had 75 percent of the cotton-goods market of the Philippines and Japan 25 percent. Today Japan has 75 percent and we have 25 percent. If these long-distance economic policies of our free-trade Secretary of State are put into effect for another year, we shall have no cotton-goods export trade to the Philippines and Japan will have it all. That was our single greatest market; and, mind you, we bought from the Philippines, and still buy, 85 percent of all their products. When it came to the question of protecting our textile trade with the Philippines, the Philippine Congress, desiring our goodwill, desiring to trade with us, offered to impose a quota so as to protect and continue our trade in textiles. They sent their proposal over here but the State Department turned thumbs down on it. To my way of thinking, this was almost a treasonable act. It certainly is the most ruinous act I have known of in the many years I have been here. It deliberately defeated the attempts of the Filipinos themselves to protect our second greatest industry, it destroyed our biggest market, and it permitted the Japanese laborer, paid 20 cents a day, not only to come in and compete with us but to take the Philippine market away from us, the market of a country under our own control and from which we buy 85 percent of their goods.

It is inconceivable to me. Can you imagine that Great Britain would permit a thing like that, with her imperial conferences, her "trade quotas", and preferences to her own colonies, as well as the countries affiliated and associated with her? But here under this new-deal administration within the last 6 months the State Department has refused the offer of the Philippine government to protect the textile trade and has lost that market to American industry and wage earners. How long will American labor permit a free-trade Secretary of State to sacrifice their jobs for the benefit of Japanese labor on the altar of free-trade and long-distance economic and visionary policies?

Further, in reply to the gentleman from Virginia, who said that the cotton farmers were benefiting by the increased price of cotton, may I say that, of course, the cotton producers getting 12 cents are benefiting, but as they are benefiting to that amount they are losing the world market in cotton to the South and increasing unemployment through the reduction of 25 percent of the crops among the southern people engaged in planting, harvesting, ginning, compressing, transporting, shipping, and in warehouses and affiliated industries. Millions of southerners are being ruined for the temporary benefit and permanent loss of a few cotton farmers.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I believe we on this side, and particularly those of us of the North, are as much interested in the prosperity of the South as are the people from the South. The cotton and textile situation affects the entire Nation. It is self-evident that if you peg the price of cotton at 12 cents for the temporary benefit of some cotton producers and cotton farmers you will lose the world market. You have lost 50 percent of it in the last year. You will lose the other 50 percent of it in the next year and a half. Is that not a national issue? It is not a partisan issue. We do not grow cotton in the North, but we are interested in our country, and we are interested in your not committing economic suicide and losing the world markets in cotton. As you have lost 3,000,000 bales, Brazil, Egypt, China, North Africa, and India have increased their production 3,000,000 bales in 1 year. They can increase it another 3,000,000 bales in the next 2 years, and then you will lose every bale of cotton you have been shipping in the past, the greatest wealth of the South, bringing ruin, destruction, and desolation on the Southland. Is that not a problem and an evil for all of us to fight against? Are we going to follow these "new dealers", who, on account of their selfish purposes and pride, have refused to see the errors of their ways, who have refused to admit their failures and insist on going serenely on to economic suicide because they want to save their faces and prefer to gamble away the wealth and welfare of the southern people? I say to you from the South that we of the North are with you in any proposition that is for the welfare and interest of this country of ours. If you persist in the present ruinous and short-sighted policy you are going to lose the entire cotton market of the world and bring untold suffering and financial ruin to the cotton States. [Applause.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER].

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly to note that the majority of the "minute men" from New England, representing the Boston tea party, have decided to retire. Perhaps they are out getting some additional ammunition. The trouble with New England, Mr. Chairman, is they have been able to control the Republican administration so long that recently it dawned upon the Representatives of that great section of the country that perhaps they could get the southern textile mills to join with them and take charge of the Democratic administration.

I want to state to my friends from New England that it will take more than misleading propaganda to change the course of President Roosevelt, who is determined to see to it that forgotten agriculture gets a square deal.

Much has been said recently on the floor of this House and in the press against the agricultural program and especially the processing tax. Many of these statements are absolutely misleading and without foundation of fact. The purpose of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which was introduced by me, was to place agriculture on an equal basis with tariff-protected industry. The processing tax is nothing but an indirect tariff or what you might term a "bounty." The purpose of the Bankhead Control Act was to do for the farmers that which they have never been able to do for themselves because they are unorganized, namely, bring about an orderly controlled production in line with demand. I want to ask if there is anything wrong with either of these programs? Industry receives a tariff at the expense of the consuming public, and when they have an overproduction or even an indication of an overproduction they immediately slow down and even close down, as they are now doing in many instances, so as to adjust their output in line with the demand for their products.

It has been charged on the floor of the House during the past few weeks by those representing the New England textile mills and by the gentleman who preceded me, Mr. FISH, of New York, that the processing tax is destroying the textile mills of New England and of the South. Prior to 1933 we had no processing tax, yet many of the textile mills of New England and of the South commenced to slow down and close their factories. I would be glad if the gentleman will tell me why these mills closed at that time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I want to ask the gentleman a question first.

Mr. FULMER. I will be glad to have an answer to my question.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman if he thinks the processing tax is helping the textile industry?

Mr. FULMER. In answer to the gentleman, will state that it is my firm belief that a proper investigation will show that this tax is not hurting the industry. I would like to know if the gentleman will join with me in making a thorough investigation in order to ascertain the real facts as to whether or not the textile industry is not responsible for its trouble at this time. I make the charge that you will find that overproduction, unreasonable salaries, and profits are responsible for the trouble that you are complaining about. The information that I have is true, that is, extra profits are being added because of the processing tax not only by the textile mills but by their selling agents in New York, by manufacturers of cotton garments, and by retailers. I am also informed that the operations under the N. R. A. code has considerable to do with the price on cotton goods.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield in order to answer the question?

Mr. FULMER. I refuse to yield further.

Mr. Chairman, under the Bankhead Control Act, because we are reducing production in an orderly manner, we are told that we are losing our foreign markets. Now, I want to deny these unwarranted charges, because the facts will not bear them out.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. Not right now. May I ask the gentleman if he and the other Representatives of New England will join with me in going into a thorough investigation?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is the question I want to answer.

Mr. FULMER. I will be glad to have the gentleman answer the question.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. May I say to the gentleman that I will be glad to participate in any investigation which will go thoroughly into the cotton-textile industry as a whole, including the growing of cotton. I would not want the investigation to be so long delayed that when we get a report there will be no textile industry left. Does the gentleman not agree with me?

Mr. FULMER. I agree with the gentleman that we ought to have a thorough investigation, and we should have it promptly.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And in the meantime we should give relief to the cotton-textile industry.

Mr. FULMER. I am willing to give to the great textile industry of this country any relief we may be able to give to them, but I am not willing to take the processing tax off or stop orderly control for the present, and put farmers back on a starvation basis.

Mr. Chairman, the time has come for a showdown, and I am willing to go to the last ditch in a thorough investigation from every angle that applies to the whole problem. This administration is entitled to the facts in that, as stated, much misinformation is being carried to the country by the press, by form letters, and even books that are now being printed on this subject. I am sure that our great President, who is leading this country out of poverty and misery with every possible opposition against him by the very people that are responsible for the serious condition that was brought about under a Republican administration, wants the real facts. The Congress of the United States and the people of this country are entitled to know the facts.

I am pleased to know that the gentleman, Mr. MARTIN, speaking for New England, will join with me in getting these facts.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to have read in my time a resolution which I am introducing today in order to get the actual facts.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the resolution referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing and directing a congressional committee to investigate and report to both Houses of Congress with respect to the nature, source, and truth of the various statements and charges which have been and are being made concerning the effect of the cotton-processing tax.

Whereas it has recently been and is being widely charged that the cotton-processing tax imposed under the Agricultural Adjustment Act is the sole or principal or an important cause of the alleged existing economic depression and disturbance of the cotton-textile industry; and

Whereas wide-spread and concerted efforts have been and are being made to secure the repeal of such tax; and

Whereas statements have been and are being widely disseminated among cotton-textile workers and cotton farmers with the object of inducing them to believe that such tax is responsible in whole or in part for unemployment and low wages among such workers and for inadequate returns to producers of cotton; and

Whereas it has been and is being charged that such tax has resulted in the increased importation of foreign cotton products and the consequent displacement of domestic by foreign cotton products; and

Whereas it has been and is being further charged that such tax has resulted in reduced consumption of cotton products: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That a special committee of 10 Congressmen, 5 of whom shall be Senators appointed by the President of the Senate and 5 of whom shall be Representatives appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate and report, as soon as practicable, upon the following matters:

First. The nature, source or sources, and effect of the aforesaid charges, efforts, and statements, and the manner in which such aforesaid efforts to secure the repeal of the processing tax are being made and carried out;

Second. The effect of the cotton-processing tax imposed under the Agricultural Adjustment Act upon the volume of consumption of cotton products during the period since the initial imposition of such tax and the probable effect of such tax upon such consumption in the future;

Third. The effect of such tax upon the importation and exportation of cotton and cotton products;

Fourth. The effect of such tax upon the volume of employment and wage rates among cotton-textile workers;

Fifth. The effect of such tax upon the income of cotton producers;

Sixth. The effect of such tax upon the margin of profit of manufacturers and processors of ginned cotton and distributors of cotton products;

Seventh. The probable results, which may be expected to follow from the removal or reduction in the rate of such tax, upon the various factors, circumstances, and subjects of investigation described in the paragraphs of this resolution nos. 2 to 6, inclusive;

Eighth. The effect of the capital structure of and the scale of executive salaries in the cotton-textile industry and in cotton-textile trade associations, and of the methods employed in the distribution of cotton products, upon the price and volume of consumption of cotton products; and Ninth. Any other factors relevant to the determination of the economic incidence and results of the cotton-processing tax growing out of the above inquiries.

SEC. 2. The committee provided for in section 1 of this resolution is directed to present an interim report to the Congress on June 1, 1935, describing the status of its investigations hereunder, and a final report not later than February 1, 1936.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, which shall be available for expenditure as the committee may direct for expenses and all necessary disbursements in carrying out this resolution.

SEC. 4. The Department of Agriculture, the National Recovery Administration, and all other agencies of the Government are hereby directed to cooperate with the committee in the above inquiries to the fullest extent possible.

SEC. 5. The committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may hold such hearings, require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, administer such oaths, and take such testimony as may be necessary to carry out this resolution. No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing documentary evidence before the commission or in obedience to the subpena of the commission on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to criminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture. But no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before the committee in obedience to a subpena issued by it: Provided, That no natural person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying. The committee may sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Seventy-fourth Congress, employ such clerical and other assistants, and make such expenditures as it deems advisable.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, prior to 1933, when the textile mills of New England, and a great many of the mills in the South, as well as the steel industry of this country and practically all other industries, were slowing down and closing down, we did not hear any complaint or criticism. It was thought to be good business on the part of those who owned these industries to do this. I want to tell you now that it was brought about because of overproduction and, as usual, as they are now doing, they began to reduce production to fit demand. In the meantime they discharged thousands of textile workers, forcing them to enlist on relief rolls and for Red Cross relief.

What happened to the farmers of this country? Many of them did not know about the crash or the results that were to follow and they continued to produce, placing themselves in a position to feed and clothe the world, so to speak. In 1929, when cotton was selling at 19½ cents, farmers were happy. Then the mills commenced to close, refusing to buy their products. During this time, following a decline in the price of these products, the textile mills continued to hold up their prices and many of these mills continued to make profits.

Cotton declined from 19½ cents down to 5 cents, corn to 20 cents, and wheat to 30 cents, destroying 75 percent of the purchasing power of the farmers of the West and of the South. Whoever heard of any of these well-organized industries or business generally reducing their prices 75 percent?

Who ever heard of a $20 suit of clothes selling for $5, or a $5 pair of shoes selling for $1.25?

Immediately after the crash the New England textile industry and all of these other industries came rushing to Congress asking for an increase in tariffs. Tariffs did not go down, they went up, and during 1930 a Republican administration passed a tariff bill increasing tariff rates to the highest point ever carried in any tariff bill, virtually building a tariff wall around this country. I want to say to you who represent New England, and to you, my friends, that this tariff bill has done more to destroy imports and exports than anything that we have ever done before or since the election of Mr. Roosevelt.

Mr. Anderson, an ex-Member of this Congress, came before our committee, the Agricultural Committee, sometime ago in behalf of the flour-milling industry. He stated that he represented 95 percent of the milling industry in the United States. It is his business to lobby in Washington and appear before the Agricultural Committee for the purpose of trying to defeat any type of legislation that might be considered in the interest of the agricultural interests of this country. On being questioned, he stated that after the crash in 1929 his industries commenced slowing down, naturally refusing to buy the farmers' wheat that declined to the low level of 30 cents a bushel. He further stated that during that time they maintained prices that yielded a profit. Although he was opposing amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, it was clear from his statement that his industries had made more profits under the processing program than they did prior to this program. Farmers receiving 30 cents for wheat not only lost their purchasing power but were losing their farms in that they were unable to pay taxes and interest.

I think, Mr. MARTIN, when we have this investigation, you will find that at the time the processing tax was put into effect and at the time the N. R. A. went into operation the gentleman's mills and the mills of the South, as well as the wholesale merchants and retailers, marked up their merchandise on hand, thereby making millions at the expense of the consuming public. Textile mills in New England that had been closed for sometime wiped the cobwebs from their spindles and proceeded to take advantage of the textile code under the N. R. A., which was written by the representatives of the large textile mills, all of which has helped to bring about the serious condition that these mill owners find themselves in at this time. They are slowing down and many of them are closing down for the sole purpose of checking overproduction, as they did prior to 1933.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a comment on his resolution?

Mr. FULMER. Not now.

For the first time in the history of this country, under Mr. Roosevelt, a man who is more interested in humanity than he is in the nobility of those who possess the wealth of this country, we have placed the agricultural interests on a parity with industry. For 10 years prior to the time of Mr. Roosevelt's election I served in this Congress on the Committee on Agriculture with men representing the agricultural West. They voted the Republican ticket all these years under a promise that they would be given an agricultural program, and finally we succeeded in passing the equalization-fee bill that was sponsored by these people. I voted for it because I believed it would help the situation, only to have it vetoed by Mr. Coolidge and, in the second instance, by Mr. Hoover.

The Republican administration gave us a Farm Board, which attempted to increase farm prices without any control over production, in line with the rubber scheme and the Brazilian coffee scheme, which failed as did these other schemes. I stated in a speech on the floor of the House when the Farm Board legislation was up for consideration that without controlled production it would be just like putting that much money in a rat hole.

After Mr. Roosevelt's election, farmers found that we had a surplus of 13,000,000 bales of cotton, a supply for 1 year without planting any cotton in 1933. The thing that I cannot understand as a farmer and as a business man is why it is good business for industry and business to control their activities and wrong for farmers to adjust their production.

When the tariff policy was instituted, over 100 years ago, it was said by someone at that time, "If you do not provide a bounty for agriculture, the time will come when you will find agriculture bled to death." I want to tell you now that prior to 1933 this condition had been brought about. Although industry, banking, and business had no interference at that time, they hesitated—in most cases closed down. The Republican administration was largely controlled by these well-organized groups. They got practically everything they asked for. Speculation and monopolistic price fixing went unchecked. We had during that period on the stock exchange what was known as the "Coolidge and Hoover boom." Millions of worthless foreign stocks and bonds were unloaded on an innocent investing public. The purchasing power of the people was bled white. Now we are told that industry, banking, and business is hesitating because of what the present administration is doing. Yet every report that you get and every paper that you pick up you read of increased profits, extra dividends, and increased sales.

It has been stated on the floor of the House and in the press that these complaints are coming from a combination of the New England and Southern textile cotton mills.

I believe that I have as many cotton mills in my district in South Carolina as there are in any district in the United States. I believe I am in a much better position to speak for the cotton mills in my district than those who represent New England; and I want to say to you who represent the great New England section of this country, that you are not going to find the cotton mills of the South going along with you to destroy an administration that for the first time in the history of this Republic has been willing to give to every class of people equal rights. Some cotton-mill representative from New England some days ago stated that the farmers of New England were not receiving any benefits from Mr. Roosevelt's program. May I state, neither are my farmers or the farmers of the South getting any benefits from your tariff policy. All of these years they have paid millions to the protected interests of this country, but have been forced to sell their products on an open, unprotected market at a world-basis price.

This unfair scheme has brought poverty to the South and has made tenants and share-croppers out of my people, as will be shown by the figures that I am placing in the RECORD at this point.

Take a look at these figures and you will see that only about 25 to 35 percent of the farmers in the South own their lands while in New England only 5 to 12 percent do not own their lands. I have heard my good friend, Mr. TREADWAY, stand up on that side and plead for tariffs and more tariffs. I have heard him say, "America for Americans." Yet today the mail of this country is going through every post office in the United States tied with jute string imported from India at the expense of the textile mills and the cotton farmers of the South. I have tried for the last 5 years to pass a net-weight cotton bill whereby we might be able to use cotton bagging in covering cotton instead of jute, and the Representatives from Massachusetts, and those who have jute mills in their districts, have opposed and have defeated the passage of the bill. This is the only cotton country in the world that sells cotton on a gross-weight basis. This is the only cotton country in the world that covers cotton with old heavy, wasteful, and disgraceful jute bagging. Jute is imported from India, but they do not use this old heavy jute in covering their cotton.

I have a bill now pending before the Ways and Means Committee proposing a tariff on jute. I challenge you who are talking about the loss of our foreign markets to join with me in passing this bill and thereby preserve our own markets for cotton farmers and the textile industry. We would be able to market and consume 3,000,000 more bales of cotton right here in the United States which is being taken away from us by India and the jute interests. The textile mills of New England are calling long and loud for an increased tariff on foreign textiles, but I have not heard a word about a tariff on jute. You state India is increasing her cotton production and that we are losing our exports to India. Why are you willing to let India take our cotton market and in the meantime refuse to stop the importation of jute?

Now, it is stated that the Bankhead control bill is destroying our foreign markets. In 1921, 1922, and 1923 we only produced 9,000,000 bales of cotton annually. That was brought about because of a severe bollweevil infestation—a production of only 27,000,000 bales in 3 years. It was stated at that time that America was losing her foreign markets. Did we? In 1923 and 1924 the farmers received an average of 28½ cents for cotton.

In 1924 farmers increased their production three and one-half million bales, and the price fell from 28½ cents to 6 cents per pound.

In 1926, when the purchasing power of this country and all foreign countries was at its height, our farmers produced 18,000,000 bales, the largest cotton crop ever produced in this country.

Immediately, because of overproduction, the price declined from 19½ cents to 12½ cents. For this fine, splendid crop of cotton of 18,000,000 bales the farmers of the South received $200,000,000 less than they received for the 10,000,000-bale cotton crop. In other words, instead of being compensated for the extra labor, fertilizer, and the extra acres planted in cotton, they were penalized $200,000,000.

(The time of Mr. FULMER having expired, he was given 5 minutes more.)

Mr. FULMER. In the beginning of 1933 we had a surplus of 13,000,000 bales of cotton, a sufficient amount of cotton, as stated, to take care of the demand, both our market and our foreign markets, without producing a bale of cotton in 1933.

Under the program of 1933 we plowed under 4,000,000 bales of cotton. In 1934 we held the production down to around 10,000,000 bales. If we are able to control production this year around 11,000,000 bales, at the end of this year we will have produced 33,000,000 bales during the controlled program. We will have produced 6,000,000 bales more during the 3 years of orderly control than we did during the 3 years of boll-weevil control.

We did not lose the market when the production went down to 27,000,000 bales during the 3 years of boll-weevil control. I want to ask you, my friends, what would have happened to farmers, textile mills, and business generally had we not plowed under 4,000,000 bales in 1933 and if we had produced a normal crop in 1934 around twelve to fifteen million bales?

My friends, why are we losing our foreign markets? There are three outstanding reasons: First, the tariff wall built around this country in 1930 by a Republican administration in the interest of industry that practically prevents the importation of foreign goods; in the second place, foreign countries have not the cash purchasing power, and in that they are unable to buy our cotton on a credit as they used to do the reason for the loss of our foreign markets is simple; third, the standard of the United States currency and that of foreign countries all being on a different standard has as much as anything else to do with exporting and importing.

Who pays the processing tax? Textile mills tell you that they do. This is not true. Textile mills simply act as collecting agents for the Government and, like the tariff, it is passed on to the consuming public.

Now, much has been said about the tax increasing prices on cotton goods. It has been stated because of this tremendous burden consumers are refusing to buy cotton goods. I contend, and so does the Secretary of Agriculture, that if textile mills and the various handlers of cotton goods would be fair with the consuming public the added price on account of the tax would not be a burden on consumers.

Here is the trouble, my friends, and that is one of the things we want to find out about under the investigation proposed by me. Mr. McCuen, a cotton merchant in Greenville, S. C., stated some time ago that the added cost would not amount to much by adding the 4.2 cents on a pound of cotton, but we have a selling agency in New York, manufacturers of cotton goods, wholesale and retail merchants, and until all of these added on their profits the price is too high for the consuming public.

Why should you add anything after adding the 4.2 cents? That is exactly what we want to find out in this investigation, about the manner of adding profits by all handlers of cotton goods after the lint cotton has been manufactured by the textile mills. Farmers have no selling agents. Each individual farmer does his own selling and has to take the other fellow's price on that which he produces. When a bale of cotton is placed on the market immediately the cotton buyers commence to pounce upon it and each and every one of them secures a sample and makes a profit, and after it passes into the hands of the mill, and then on through their selling agents, manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers, their profits are added. I tell you the time has come when we should pass legislation whereby we may be able to establish an up-to-date marketing and distributing system for farmers—a system that will give to farmers and consumers some bargaining power and some say about the prices they receive and the prices they have to pay. The spread between what farmers receive and the price that consumers have to pay, in a great many instances, is simply highway robbery on the part of many middlemen, many of which are nothing more or less than real parasites sapping the very lifeblood out of both producer and consumer.

I have the deepest regard for the very valuable Members of Congress from that great southern State, Georgia, but I am humiliated to read in the newspapers that Governor Talmadge of that State is ranting all over the State and into other States against the President of the United States and his administration.

Mr. McCuen, who resides in Greenville, S. C., in the district represented by that able statesman, my colleague Mr. MCSWAIN, stated some days ago in the Greenville Observer, a paper that carries but little else than ridicule for the agricultural program and the processing tax, that "Party loyalty meant everything, but it was more important to save the cotton textile industry than to reelect Franklin D. Roosevelt." I am sure that the statement of this cotton merchant who makes his profits per bale—more bales, more profits—sounds like sweet music in the ears of the people who reside in New England and in the ears of the Republican Party. I am very happy that Mr. McCuen does not live in my district.

Mr. Chairman, this Nation has a productive capacity, men, material, and knowledge sufficient to double the production that we have at this time and I believe if we would expand production in an orderly manner, a balanced production, it would do more to bring about recovery than anything we have done up to this time. We all know that the unbalanced production prior to 1933 brought about the serious depression in which we find ourselves. I believe that although the generation ahead of me and during my own time we have submitted to this monopolistic price fixing, tariff benefits for the well-organized and well-financed groups at the expense of agriculture and the consuming public, centralizing the wealth of the country in the hands of the few will not be tolerated by the young manhood and young womanhood of this and future generations.

In closing may I state that I am glad that we have a President who is in sympathy with a square deal, one who will lead us out of the predicament we were carried into under a Republican administration. [Applause.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY].

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Chairman, the impression has gone abroad, at least in New England, that the present dire straits of the New England textile industry can be attributed to the Democratic Party and its policies. I deny that in toto. I know something about the textile situation in New England and its history. I come from a small town in Massachusetts that had as its primary industry a textile mill. Back in the 1920's that textile industry folded up, never to open its doors again, throwing thousands of my fellow townsmen out of work. That was not during any Democratic administration, but while a Republican President and a Republican Congress were in power.

I might say in discussing the causes of the present straits in the textile industry, one cause has been overlooked. Industries in my town have failed because of this one cause which has not been discussed. It was crooked stock promotions, a situation that the Republican Party did nothing about. Here was the situation and the line-up. For illustration, an industry in my town would be worth, say, $1,000,000. A similar industry in some other town would be worth $1,000,000. A stock promoter would come along and say to both of the individuals who owned these industries, "Let us get together and capitalize, not on the honest basis of $2,000,000, but upon a fictitious, watered-stock basis of $3,000,000." The results were far-reaching, of course. Not only was the public cheated and defrauded, but so was the poor employee who, trying to earn a dividend for the owners on that dishonest valuation, was up against a hopeless task. The result was that industries in my town staggered along for a time and of course finally came to a halt and folded up, and thousands of those employed in those industries were thrown out of work.

I say to you and to the Republican Party that they took no steps to correct that situation during three administrations of the Republican Party, and that the Democratic Party, my party, did something, which, had it been done by the Republicans would have cured that situation. We have now, under President Roosevelt, a Securities Commission which would never have allowed those stock promoters to have watered the stock in those industries, or have permitted them to get together in such crooked deals. The Securities Commission, created under President Roosevelt, demands that before you can issue stock there must be an honest dollar's worth of value behind every dollar's worth of stock issued.

I would like to discuss some other causes which throw light on why factories in my section of the country have either failed or gone to other States. We, in Massachusetts and in New England generally, have a high concept of labor. We believe that labor is worthy of its hire. We believe that labor has a dignity, and we treat the laborers in our State with the same dignity we accord members of professions, manufacturers, and business men.

We were pioneers in giving to labor a decent wage, that would enable them to enjoy decent living conditions. We gave to them minimum hours of work. We abolished child labor. We gave to them decent conditions under which to work. Of course, when we tried to compete with other States where they allowed child labor, where they allowed children to be exploited in order to bring a few dollars into the hands of manufacturers, where they had starvation wages, where they had long hours, we could not compete. That is another cause for our industries moving out of New England.

I am here to plead the cause of the manufacturers in the textile industry who stayed in New England, who felt that they owed an obligation to the generations of working men and women who had contributed so faithfully and loyally to the upbuilding of their industries. These hardy men had a sympathetic attitude toward their employees. They did not consider the laborer a mere commodity, but felt that he had an imagination, a soul, and feelings which they were bound to consider and respect. They have stayed on bravely fighting against circumstances over which they have little or no control, and deserve the highest commendation from all right-thinking people.

Imagine my surprise and indignation, therefore, when I read that our Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, made a speech in Brunswick, Maine, at Bowdoin College, in which he termed these men "whiners", and asserted that they were getting flabby and had no "guts." The newspapers stated that Secretary Wallace had left his manuscript in Boston. I am of the opinion that, with the manuscript, he left his good judgment and good manners. He ought to appreciate that these are fearful and distracting times; that he occupies the dignified position of a member of the Cabinet, with great power for good or evil. He should stop talking like a moving-picture football coach who is giving a "pep" talk to undergraduates.

We of New England resent his arrogance, and on behalf of the textile-mill owners of my acquaintance who are finding it increasingly difficult to survive, I say to Secretary Wallace their problem should be of grave concern to him as a public servant.

Now, I would like to say something about what this administration has done for the textile industry of New England. I have told you about the high standard which Massachusetts and New England has set up, its hours of employment, minimum wages, abolition of child labor, pioneering in that field. Our administration instituted the N. R. A. The N. R. A. is nothing more than putting into effect throughout the entire country what has existed in Massachusetts and New England. Therefore, I say that we most certainly are glad to support the N. R. A., because it raises prevailing wages, because it acknowledges that the workman is entitled to a living wage, because it abolishes child labor. For those reasons we are for the N. R. A. There are certain administrative features that we do not favor, but we believe in its principle.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman, of course, does not agree with the interpretation placed on the N. R. A. by Mr. Donald Richberg, does he?

Mr. CASEY. I have not heard of that interpretation.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I mean his interpretation of 7 (a) in the automobile case.

Mr. CASEY. I do not know about that interpretation.

Now, I would like to address myself for a few moments to the processing tax. I am against a processing tax in any industry in any field, on general principles. I feel that the processing tax lays too much of a burden upon a particular few. For example, in Massachusetts the cotton-textile industry paid something like $21,000,000 last year in processing tax. That industry is staggering along trying to keep its head above water. It cannot bear that processing tax. I am not opposed to the farmer having help if he needs relief. I believe he does need relief, but I think it should be in the form of general taxation, rather than by putting a burden upon an industry that can ill afford to bear it at this time. It should be abolished.

Japanese imports cannot be dismissed by the statement that they represent but 1 percent of the total consumption of the goods in this country. That does not really meet the issue. The important thing about imports from Japan is that they are increasing.

In January we imported more goods from Japan than in the entire preceding 12 months. In February we imported more than in January. More important than that is the fact that when you introduce cheap-coolie Japanese-labor products into this American country of ours you get a price so low that it depresses prices in that entire field. I say that is the chief evil of Japanese imports. I hope that that situation will be controlled so that we do not have to make our American workmen compete with the type of labor in Japan.

There are other causes. I believe that under the N. R. A. there should be a uniform 40 hours in the industry. There has been 50 percent overproduction in the cotton business. There should be a uniform 40 hours so that production may be cut down; but I have faith in my President. I have faith in my administration. I hope and I believe that this committee appointed by my President will consider these problems carefully and, after giving them due consideration, will prescribe remedies and put those remedies into effect. [Applause.]

Mr. GRISWOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASEY. I yield.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Does not the gentleman realize that according to the testimony before the Committee on Labor some of his New England manufacturers are largely responsible for the importation of these goods? They manufacture them in their own plants, operated by themselves, and ship them in here in competition with your New England employees.

Mr. CASEY. There may be some of that, but I do not think it is very wide-spread.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I refer the gentleman to the testimony of the General Electric Co.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yesterday, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] addressed most of his extremely bitter, sectional attack at me. I have in my hand a portion of a Democratic paper published last evening in Lowell, Mass., and in the headlines which appeared in that paper last night are the following:

Representative ROGERS flayed by North Carolinian in House speech.

Mr. Chairman, you know very well that the Democrats in Lowell, Mass., are smart enough to realize that that speech, apparently inspired by the administration, was a direct separating of the North from the South. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the administration apparently is willing to give up its Democratic votes in New England to try to secure votes of the southern farmers and southern manufacturers and southern laborers; but, Mr. Chairman, not even the workers in the mills in the gentleman's State of North Carolina are fooled. I am so sorry the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] has brought politics and sectionalism into a Nation-wide problem. His bitter sectionalism and unjust misleading statements, I should think, would prove very embarrassing to him. He was as silent as a closed mill about the problem of the present distress in the manufacturing plans in his own State and other Southern States.

The gentleman neglected to say in his bitter speech that his mills of North Carolina, the mills of the South, are closing. There is just as great agitation among the manufacturers and workers of the South to be relieved of the burden of the processing tax as there is among the workers and the people of all New England. I know whereof I speak. I have heard from people in Southern States. I have heard from the workers in the raw-cotton industry. Southern Members in the Senate from the South have dared to raise their voices. The Senator from Georgia offered a way to lift the burden of the processing tax from the manufacturer, to pay the cotton farmer if he needs a processing tax. He suggested it should be paid out of the relief fund. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] neglected to tell that to the House. The gentleman from North Carolina spoke in his misleading and sectional speech of the fact that New England industry had failed or was failing on account of obsolete machinery and obsolete methods. And the gentleman would not yield when he made these misleading statements. Four times I requested him to yield.

Mr. Chairman, I should have thought the gentleman from North Carolina would have had a feeling of shame to bring to the pitiless public gaze the real reason for the moving of those mills from the North to the South. The Members of Congress know just as well as every man and woman who is in the textile industry knows that those mills moved South because the southerners paid low wages, worked their people long hours, and worked little children. They also gave them concessions in rents, heat, and light; but by far the greatest reason for moving was the low labor cost. How could the North, no matter how efficient, compete with those conditions? Massachusetts blazed the trail for the shorter hour week and better labor conditions. There are in the South today, too, Mr. Chairman, obsolete mills. There are some mills in the North, of course. Mr. Chairman, do you realize that when the southerners bought the northern mills they bought the machinery? Some of that was obsolete, and the southern mills operated with obsolete machinery.

Briefly, let us go back over the history of the New England textile industry. Everyone who knows about it realizes that at the beginning of the Wilson administration, under the lower tariff, the industry began to decline. Then came the war, which made the spindles turn to produce materials to carry on the conflict. After the war the southern companies, with their low wages, competed against the northern companies. The schedule which Mr. WARREN cited the other day indicates the effect of this. Many a manufacturer of the South would like to do away with the N. R. A. so he could go back to paying even lower wages again.

Let us be fair, Mr. Member from North Carolina, in our statements. Not one word of sectionalism had I uttered in any statement over the radio or in any statement on the floor of the House—not one word of party politics. I realize perfectly, just as you do, that the North today is suffering as a result of the unfair wage differential under the N. R. A. I attended a huge mass meeting of New England labor in Massachusetts when I was there at Easter; there was not a man or woman there who did not want the elimination of this wage differential, the difference of a dollar in the lowest bracket. They know very well, just as you do, that in many instances in the South the minimum wage is the maximum.

Of course, the North is handicapped in this respect; but, Mr. Chairman, today I am speaking of the national aspect of the case, as I have every time I have spoken before. The North, the South, the East, and the West wish that the cancer which is eating away the very vitals of the textile industry be removed.

I have never stated, as the gentleman from North Carolina indicated, that industry would boom if the processing tax were removed; that is not the only reason for the depressed state of the textile industry, but it would make an enormous difference. I have spoken before of Japanese competition. How many Members realize today that more than half the cotton produced in the world last year was produced outside of the United States? We all know that the United States exported less cotton by 2,525,000 bales in the first 8 months of this year than ever before.

We all know that hundreds of thousands of bales less of cotton were consumed in this country in the past 8 months. The cotton farmer knows that he is losing his market for his goods; the 9,000,000 people who work in raw cotton realize this same fact. The people in America today are beginning to wake up to the fact that Brazil is exporting 800,000 more bales of cotton than ever before; that Russia has 1,000,000 bales more exportable cotton than ever before; that Argentina is to grow cotton; and that Japan herself is growing cotton. Think well upon the fact that Japan is taking our market in the Philippine Islands and Latin America.

Does the gentleman from North Carolina realize that if the northern mills are killed, as he seems to wish, and only the mills in the South left in operation, that in order to compete with the Japanese cotton goods that are coming in, the operatives in the mills of the South might be paid the low wages of Japan? The little Japanese girls work in the mills for only 25 cents a day. Think of it! Anybody who has done any marketing in a big way realizes that the market price is always the cheap price.

The total consumption of Japanese goods in this country, of course, is relatively small when compared with the entire consumption of cotton goods. But if now, as is the case, 30 percent of the market of a certain class of goods is taken by Japan, with the tremendous increase occurring each month, it means that in a short time that special type of goods will not be produced in this country; and the gentleman from North Carolina either did not know or forgot that these goods compete far more with the cotton goods made in North Carolina and the Southern States than they do with the cotton cloth made in our own New England States; but here again, of course, the low cotton price always affects the market, whether it is in the identical class of cotton goods or not.

I was amazed when the gentleman in his speech tried to throw dust in the eyes of the people with his humor, with his sectionalism, that he entirely forgot the cause of the workers in the cotton mills of his own State. The fallacy of his argument, so far as the cotton farmer is concerned, is apparent. How can the cotton farmer sell his goods if the mills are closed and there is no market for them?

Mr. Chairman and members of the Democratic side, yesterday I appealed to you to join me in urging the President to appoint on his Cabinet committee to consider this vital situation a cotton farmer, a man who makes his living growing cotton; but not a man has responded. I telegraphed the President today, knowing a telegram would reach him immediately, and made the request. I am interested in every State in the Union. My friends, I know your people of the South and the West perhaps better than I know some of you, although I have worked with you since 1925. I have seen your people in sorrow and in distress. I know how fine they are. I know of the self-sacrifice of the people of Arkansas during the war, when they went without wheat in order to send it to France to help win the war. New Englanders are fine, too. They are all worthy of assistance.

I had previously made the request of the President that a manufacturer and a textile worker be put upon that board. Cabinet members are very busy, and they need the advice of people who are trained in the industry, if they are going to do justice.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] spoke of a dead President. He said, "It was keep cool with Coolidge", but the workers thought it was "Keep cold with Coolidge." President Coolidge's record speaks for itself.

Mr. Chairman, may I say right here, and the Members know this as well as I do, the people of the United States in those days had confidence, most of them, to get work somewhere if they wanted it.

The gentleman from North Carolina said I never "chirped", as he expressed it, or raised my voice to help the industry in those days. If the gentleman from North Carolina had been on the floor, he would have heard me many times raise my voice in behalf of a tariff to protect the industry—in fact, all the industries. He would have heard me ask aid for my farmers. He would have known, if he had read the newspapers, that many times I went to Republican Presidents to ask assistance for my people. It makes no difference to me whether a President is a Republican or a Democrat; if it is a matter affecting my district or my country, I go to him and make the appeal. I went early to President Roosevelt in this matter. With the wide powers that President Roosevelt has today, he is the only person to whom we can appeal. Have done with sectionalism. Mr. Chairman, let the North live; let the South live. Let the workers of this great country have work and let the country prosper. [Applause.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, about this hour of the afternoon the Congress is reminiscent of a Wednesday night prayer meeting. It requires a high degree of faith and devotion to sit through all of the speeches that occur in general debate, and for those whose devotion keeps them here at this hour I have only admiration and respect.

I want to address myself to the devoted Members this afternoon for a little while on a question that does not involve any particular controversy and it involves no consideration of politics or of partisanship. I refer to the question of immigration, naturalization, and deportation.

When George Washington was President of the United States we had approximately 3,900,000 people. From that day to this, through the operation of forces that we might very well characterize as centrifugal, this country has become an expanded, far-flung country of approximately 126,000,000 people. When I refer to the centrifugal force that was operative in expanding the frontier of this country, may I say it operates a good deal like one of those centrifugal wringers in a washing machine. The clothes are put in to be washed, the switch is turned on, and the container inside turns around, swirling the water away from the center, thereby drying the clothes. This same force was operative in picking up people on the Atlantic seaboard 150 years ago and just spreading them out everywhere in this pioneer country of ours. Then, when the frontier closed, the centrifugal force, instead of working away from the center, became a kind of centripetal force and worked toward the center and gave us such great metropolises as Chicago, Detroit, and San Francisco. They picked up all of these folk that lived out in little disintegrated communities everywhere in the West, the South, and Northwest, and flung them into one center, which became the beehives known as the "modern cities."

Mr. Chairman, it is a long cry from George Washington to Franklin Delano Roosevelt and from a population of 3,900,000 people to a populaion of 126,000,000. Perhaps for purposes of clarifying some of the issues and some of the controversies that arise in connection with problems of immigration and naturalization at the present time, it is necessary to examine some of these fundamental forces in order to get this picture squarely in mind.

I would say first of all that the largest factor in the population of this country was the excess of births over deaths. In 1916, if I remember correctly, the excess was approximately 315,000. In 1927 we reached a peak of births over deaths of approximately 915,000. This is not very far short of a million. In other words, the excess of births over deaths was almost a million in 1927. This indicates the accretion of new blood to the population that expanded this country.

The second factor consisted of the folks who came from foreign shores to America. We wanted them in the early days. Here were millions and hundreds of millions of acres that had to be peopled. Just fancy, the State of Texas is almost as large as Germany; yet it has only five or six million people as compared with 63,000,000 people in Germany. We had land. We had vast areas. We wanted to grow. We wanted to reach a certain kind of national maturity. We wanted new seed. We welcomed people to the world's greatest melting pot. So we welcomed these folks who lived in foreign countries. We beckoned to them to come over here. Between these accretions of excess births and the immigrant population that came from foreign shores, we gradually became a country of 125,000,000 people.

Mr. Chairman, if I recall the figures correctly, from 1820 to 1870 we gained approximately seven and a half million new people from other countries. From 1870 to 1900 we gained approximately 12,000,000. From 1900 to 1920 we gained approximately 15,000,000. They were coming in at the rate of seven or eight hundred thousand per year until in 1918, because of the war and because of the restrictions that had been imposed, the immigration gradually tapered off, and I think in that year dropped down to 18,000.

Then because of restrictions that have been imposed since that time, it has not increased very much, and I believe, as a matter of fact, last year we had a net loss when the emigration and the immigration were counterbalanced.

Now, for the purpose of clarity, because some of these controversial questions are going to come on this floor again from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, let us first of all have a clear picture as to what constitutes an immigrant. It might be said, very generally, that anyone who comes from a point outside of the United States, who is not a member of a diplomatic or ministerial family, who does not come here for the purpose of working under a treaty, who is not in transit through this country, and probably a few more may be considered as immigrants.

A lot of these people want to come to America at the present time and I am very happy to say that somehow we have become nationally conscious of this problem and the time is not far distant when the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization is going to be one of the most important and outstanding committees of the House. There are certain things that, manifestly, make us conscious of this problem. In the first place, we have ten or eleven million people out of work. Obviously, we do not like to see anybody come from foreign shores and displace one of our own people and take away from him a job and the incident bread and butter that goes along with it.

Secondly, we have these problems of subversive doctrine, preaching the destruction of our institutions and our form of government, setting themselves up resolutely against the maintenance of law and order.

These are the things that have gradually come up, and coupled with the desire of those who have a deep and abiding interest in this country to maintain a certain purity of the social structure, it has made us immigration conscious. It started in a rather aggravated way back in 1913 and gathered momentum as we went along to 1924. As you recall, they set up the so-called "National Origins Act", which limited the number of people that could come from foreign shores. If I remember correctly, the first quota was around 357,000 and along in 1923, 1924, 1925, and 1926, we virtually received the full quota from foreign shores. Then, in 1927 the quota was reduced to 150,000, which, when finally corrected, amounted to just a little over that amount.

However, the State Department has been operating under a kind of temporary order, which provides that the consuls in various foreign countries should not, and cannot in reality, issue a visa to anyone who wants to come to this country unless he can satisfy this provision that we call the public-charge requirement. If he attempts to come here and does not have sufficient funds or the assurance of a job quite outside of the pale of contract labor, the consuls are operating on a program whereby they refuse to give a visa to these people, and this is the only thing at the present time that is stopping a great influx of people from other countries. But this is not our real problem at the present time. Our problem is not concerned so much with those who come in under the quota, because by legislation we can cancel the quota altogether, but our problem is concerned more nearly with those who come in under a nonquota status, and this includes virtually all the people residing in the countries in the Western Hemisphere. They belong to the nonquota group and therefore are admissable into the United States of America.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. This is the reason we are having a problem at the present time. If you want to see a rather illuminating sight, go up to Detroit and watch the folks coming back and forth across the Canadian line over the Ambassador Bridge, or you might go down on the Rio Grande border and watch the Mexican peons coming into this country, or watch the folks who come in from Central and South America. They are the so-called "nonquota immigrants."

Today our problem is concerned with swapping the man from Central America for the man who used to come in from Italy or Germany, and, perhaps, swapping the man who lives in Canada for those who formerly came in from England and Norway and Sweden and Denmark.

Our problem today, therefore, is the nonquota rather than the quota problem.

As I see this immigration problem, and for the purpose of getting it clearly in the minds of the Members who are later to be called upon to vote on some of these controversial issues, let me say to you that the problem is divided into three parts: First, there is the problem of those who come from foreign shores. This is immigration. The next problem concerns those who are already here, but who have not been really absorbed into the body politic and who have not assimilated American ideals and traditions. This is the problem of naturalization. Finally, there is the problem of getting rid of those who have violated their right to be here, if they ever had such right, and involves those who are willing to take the benefits and not the burdens that go along with living in the United States of America.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. Is it not also true that the number of undesirable aliens who have been deported from the United States during the past 2 years has been greatly reduced in comparison with the number deported in the 2 or 3 previous years?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is quite true; and when we consider that in connection with the decrease in the total number of immigrants, it means an even larger percentage than that indicated by the Labor Department and by the State Department.

However, to continue for a moment with this matter of immigration and naturalization and deportation, let me say that, as I conceive it, the first and most important thing is that we get a consciousness of the fact that this country has become of age. You know some years ago—perhaps 10 years ago—Andre Siegfried, a French observer and critical writer, came to America and made a considerable tour of this country and then sat down to record his observations. He included them in a book called "America Becomes of Age."

Even at that time he points out very distinctly this problem and says the time will come when we are going to have to close our borders and then solve our problems on some other kind of basis than that which obtained in the years when we stood out there beside the Statue of Liberty with open arms welcoming people from foreign shores. We had no unemployment problem at that time. We had none of these subversive influences that have operated through the social structure in the last few years. These are things that have become aggravated within the last few years, and so, more and more, our interest and attention to this immigration problem will be emphasized.

Secondly, there is the problem of absorbing the people who are here. Do you gentlemen realize that we have almost 6,000,000 aliens in this country who are not citizens of the United States? Think of that! A host of reasons are assigned why they are not citizens. A great many have been here for 30 or 40 years who have not taken the trouble to become citizens. I have heard witnesses come before our committee and say that they came here when they were of mature age, that the mind had lost its facility to adapt itself to a new kind of language and new customs, they were just a little bit shy and modest about court procedure, and they had a host of reasons as to why they were not naturalized. Be that as it may, I still believe it becomes absolutely necessary to assimilate all those people, to make them citizens, to make them appreciate the responsibilities of citizenship. If necessary, then let us cast aside all of the fees necessary, let us make it just as easy as possible for those who are now here, so that the day will not be far distant when we can say that these 6,000,000 who are now aliens and who are living and doing business and earning a livelihood in our country will subscribe to the same flag and the same Constitution and the same laws and the same doctrines to which you and I, as citizens, subscribe. It seems to me that one of the profitable things that we could do in this country is to designate a naturalization week or a naturalization month, and then have patriotic societies address themselves vigorously and militantly to that problem, instead of just scattering our efforts and constantly talking about it. It requires a program. We have to go out into the highways and byways and find them, we have to attract them into schools of citizenship, and show some spirit of welcome. We have to carefully and gradually pilot them through the Federal courts and make them citizens, and then the second part of our program is solved, the problem of naturalization.

Then, there is the third part of this program, and that is the problem of deportation. There are lots of things for which people can be deported, but there are lots of things for which they cannot be deported at the present time under the law as it now exists. This law is so abstruse and confusing that I do not believe half the members of the Immigration Committee understand what it is all about. But this thing we do know, and that is that we are doing a kind of repairing and patchwork business on the laws that have been passed in the last 20 or 25 years dealing with that problem. What we do in the Immigration Committee at the present time is throw back to the mistakes made in the last generation and come up from behind and stick a patch on the statute here and another patch on a statute there in the hope of doing some good. I remember 2 years ago we thought we would develop a comprehensive program along this line, and we were advised by the State and Labor Departments that they were doing that very thing. That is 2 years ago, and, if my memory serves me correctly, we have not gotten a report from the State or the Labor Department yet on that problem. So, this House committee will have to address itself to that matter the best it knows how, but instead of a lot of patchwork it seems to me the whole immigration and naturalization subject should be revamped and codified, so that there is some semblance of pattern to these laws.

Getting back to these deportables, on whom so much attention is lavished in the newspapers at the present time, here are those who can be deported from the United States: One convicted of narcotic violation, after termination of prison sentence. If he is in prison for violating the narcotic law, you cannot reach him there and get him out and send him back where he belongs. Rather, we have to feed him and care for him in one of our prisons on which we are spending $500,000 for repairs and maintenance annually. I say, let us reach in there and get him out and send him back where he belongs. We cannot afford to be sympathetic or soft-hearted about that thing, especially when we deal with people who peddle dope and ruin the physical vitality and robustness of some of our best people. You will remember years ago when Wallace Reid was one of the popular moving-picture idols. These dope peddlers reduced him to a pile of physical junk because of the dope that he bought from them, but when we catch somebody of that kind and put him in prison for a limited time, under the present law we cannot reach in and take him out and send him back where he belongs. Since many aliens have been mixed up in that kind of a racket, it is high time that so important a matter as this have the deliberate attention of the Congress.

Second, those who at the time of entry or thereafter became anarchists, those who advise, teach, and advocate and oppose all forms of organized government, those who advise or teach or advocate, or are members of a group which teach these subversive doctrines, and those who donate to an organization that teaches these doctrines are deportable. Along with them, deportables include any alien who illegally entered, who at the time of entry belonged to an excludable class, who advocates the destruction of property or anarchy, or the overthrow of government, and an host of others who are included. But the singular thing is that we have not been able to put our hands on a lot of these gangsters and gun toters in the large cities. Unless some moral turpitude is involved, they go about in their stick-up business and racketeering business and we have not been able to touch them under the law. Therefore, when I say it is patchwork I mean that our immigration laws are a patchwork, and that they should be recodified, because we are standing on the threshold of some new concept of what nationalism and patriotism means. When I say that I am no flag waver, I am no sentimentalist, I try to look at it in a broad and practical way.

By way of recapitulation, let me summarize this problem as I see it. Once upon a time, we had ample land, ample room, and wanted folks to come to this country. Through excess births over deaths and through immigration, we became a country of 125,000,000 people. Our civilization and our economics and social structure became complicated, and as a result of the war and its incidental problems we inherited unemployment, radicalism, labor troubles, criminal activities and a tendency on the part of aliens toward subversive doctrines.

To limit the number who came over, we invoked the National Origins Act which reduced the number of quota immigrants to about 150,000. Through the operation of a ruling of the State Department, nobody can come to this country who might possibly become a public charge and the proof against such likelihood rests on the immigrant.

We do not, however, touch the problem of deserting alien seamen, the problem of stowaways, the problem of visitors who come over here and fail to go back at the expiration of their permits, and the problem of nonquota immigrants. These constitute the back door to the immigration question and for the protection of American labor it becomes increasingly necessary to close the back door and prevent influx of immigrants from countries in the Northern Hemisphere. Until we reach a state of normalcy, let us stop further immigration and give our own citizens a chance at the few jobs that are now available.

Secondly, let us absorb the aliens who are now legally here. They want to become citizens. Let us meet them half-way. Let us put on a drive to make them citizens and give them an appreciation of what it means to live in the greatest Nation in the world, despite the depression and its incidental problems.

Finally, let us rid ourselves of the aliens who are undesirable. Today we have gangsters and mobsters, narcotic peddlers and rum runners, bootleggers and bandits who are aliens and who have been a most disturbing influence upon the peace and order of our people. The easy and the facile way is to get rid of them and send them back from whence they came without sentimentality or sob stuff.

We are no longer a country in knee pants. We have reached our maturity and it is high time this matter was receiving most serious attention.

So long as we have eleven or twelve million people out of work, let us bar the door until they have had a chance to find jobs. They are our own people, and our first obligation is to them. That will dispose of the immigration problem.

Let us take the five or six million aliens in our country who are now aliens and bring them into citizenship. Let us develop in them the spirit and the traditions and the idealism of this country. That will dispose of the naturalization problem.

And finally, let us gather up those who have violated the hospitality and the freedom and the laws of this country and send them back to whence they came, without any "ifs", "ands", or provisos. That will dispose of the deportation problem.

The problem and its definite solution stands before us. It is neither difficult nor abstruse. All it requires is a bit of good old-fashioned, red-blooded action. For the time being, let us keep out additional aliens, assimilate those who are here, and deport those who should not be here.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN].

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I am going to talk about a new subject—about the bill that is before the Committee for consideration. To my mind it is extremely regretable that a bill of this great importance and consequence has received scant consideration in the last 2 days.

In his remarks yesterday, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY], on page 6229 of the RECORD, expressed a doubt as to the accuracy of my statement that the United States has been spending far more money on its Navy since the Washington Conference than any other country. I quote below figures taken from page 941 of the 1935 World Almanac. These figures are official as gathered by the United States Government. I leave off the odd dollars:

Expenditures, by years	United States	Great Britain	France	Japan
1923	$346,000,000	$315,000,000	$31,000,000	$137,000,000
1924	328,000,000	281,000,000	43,000,000	196,000,000
1925	323,000,000	271,000,000	40,000,000	124,000,000
1926	317,000,000	327,000,000	49,000,000	112,000,000
1927	320,000,000	281,000,000	72,000,000	119,000,000
1928	336,000,000	282,000,000	96,000,000	127,000,000
1929	366,000,000	278,000,000	99,000,000	130,000,000
1930	375,000,000	271,000,000	64,000,000	130,000,000
1931	357,000,000	281,000,000	134,000,000	131,000,000
1932	353,000,000	250,000,000	109,000,000	104,000,000
1933	349,000,000	245,000,000	94,000,000	146,000,000
1934	282,000,000	260,000,000	106,000,000	201,000,000
Total	4,052,000,000	3,342,000,000	937,000,000	1,657,000,000

It will be seen that, with the exception of the year 1926, the United States spent much more money than Great Britain, whose possessions are scattered over the wide world, and we spent two and one-half times as much as Japan spent.

Mr. CARY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. CARY. Is it not true that we got a great deal less Navy for our money than other countries by reason of the fact that labor is cheaper, material is cheaper in other countries, and it cost us more to build in this country than in foreign countries? While we have spent more money we actually have not got as much for our money.

Mr. BIERMANN. I do not know whether that is true or not, I never heard any testimony nor have I seen any evidence of those facts.

Mr. CARY. The gentleman does know, as a matter of fact, that the labor and living conditions and the standard of living is very much different in other countries than it is in ours; that wages are higher here and the cost of material is more.

Mr. BIERMANN. If that is so, why do we ship our manufactured articles to foreign countries for sale? We can manufacture farm machinery, sewing machines, automobiles, and other things cheaper in this country than they can be manufactured in foreign countries; and I am not sure but that the same thing applies to battleships.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. Has the gentleman taken into consideration the subsistence provided by foreign countries and the comparison of subsistence for the enlisted personnel of the armed forces of this country and foreign countries? If the gentleman's statistics are worth anything, it seems to me it would be well to point out the character of subsistence provided for the armed forces in this country as compared with subsistence provided for by other countries.

Mr. BIERMANN. I think that investigation would better be carried on by the committee of which the gentleman is a member.

Mr. DITTER. If the gentleman will yield further, I hope his original statement as to the scant consideration the bill has received was not directed to the Subcommittee on Appropriations.

For 6 weeks this committee, under the very able leadership of the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY] inquired into the requirements of the Naval Establishment. I can say to the gentleman, with no undue compliment to the gentleman who is chairman of that committee, that no committee chairman ever worked more zealously and faithfully than your colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY].

Mr. BIERMANN. I do not doubt that at all. Is the gentleman in control of the time on that side? I do not mind being interrupted, but I would like to get my statement in. It so happens that mine is the first talk that has been made against this bill, and the second talk of any kind that has been made on the bill. I appreciate what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said regarding your committee, but the unfortunate part of it is that the vote is not going to be by that subcommittee. The vote is going to be by 435 Members of this House, and, with all due respect to them, I think the gentleman will agree with me that the average Member knows nothing whatever about this bill.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield for a further statement?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DITTER. If the gentleman is present tomorrow, I hope to be able to give him some figures that I believe will carry out substantially the declaration that I have made with respect to the subsistence provided for the personnel in the armed forces here, as compared with the armed forces in other countries.

Mr. CARY. And especially is that true relative to pay.

Mr. BIERMANN. I will be glad to have those figures.

For the current fiscal year, our appropriations are given as $284,000,000, but to keep the record straight, it should be taken into account that in the 1934 and 1935 years the Navy received more than $317,000,000 out of the emergency funds, this according to the testimony of Admiral Richardson on page 277 of the hearings on this bill.

To my mind there is only one big question involved in the consideration of this bill: Is it necessary to appropriate $457,000,000 for 1 year's expenses for our Navy? If the proponents of this measure cannot prove that necessity, they cannot make out a case for this enormous expenditure.

In yesterday's debate the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY] told us that he wanted the United States Navy to be mistress of the Seven Seas, and in the next breath he told us that the expenditures contemplated in this bill are for defense only. I challenge him or any other member of this committee to prove that our national defense demands the amount of expenditures contemplated in this bill.

Against whom are we going to defend ourselves with our Navy? No one, of course, will contend that any other navy or any other two navies in the world are anywhere near equal to that of the United States, except those of Great Britain and Japan. The most extreme alarmists will not tell us that we are in danger from Great Britain. Then the whole case simmers down to Japan, and the whole question in considering the merits of this bill is, "Are these expenditures justifiable as a preparation for defense against Japan?" There are 5,000 miles of water between Japan and our western coast. I do not believe that a member of this committee can produce any testimony that will lend the slightest support to a theory that Japan could attack our western coast with any prospect of the smallest kind of success.

Mr. DREWRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. DREWRY. If the gentleman thinks that $327,000,000 is too much to be appropriated for the upkeep of our Navy, what sum does the gentleman have in mind should be appropriated and in what way should that sum be spent? Has the gentleman directed his attention to that?

Mr. BIERMANN. Oh, that is an involved question. I think that question should rather be directed to a member of the committee.

Mr. DREWRY. Well, the committee did direct its attention to that for 6 weeks and brought in its report.

Mr. BIERMANN. When the gentleman asks me to say in what places these reductions should be made, of course, he is asking me a question that he knows I am not able to answer, because this bill, this report, and the hearings on this bill have just been available only for about 24 hours. Surely the gentleman would not expect me, with my limited ability, to go into a thousand pages of printed matter in 24 hours and find out exactly where reductions should be made.

Mr. DREWRY. I did not expect the gentleman to be able to answer it, and that is the reason I called it to the gentleman's attention.

Mr. BIERMANN. But he wanted to ascribe a different reason for my failure to answer than the real reason. I do not believe there is any ground in the present situation for requiring this Government to spend $172,000,000 more on its Navy next year than it spends during the current fiscal year.

On page 77 of the hearings the navies of the United States and Japan are compared as follows, as of November 1, 1934: United States, 358 ships, 1,089,775 tons; Japan, 220 ships, 756,561 tons.

Will any member of the committee say that our 358 ships of more than a million tons cannot defend our western coast against Japan's 220 ships of 750,000 tons?

I ask members of the committee to cite us a case in modern history where a navy has taken a major land fortification. I ask them to name a single case in modern history where a belligerent has landed any considerable number of troops on a hostile shore. Great Britain, with her great Navy, failed with frightful losses at Gallipoli in the World War.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman also make an observation as to the value of the navies of the Allied forces during the World War with respect to Germany's position? Is the gentleman of the opinion that the naval force of the Allies was of any value in its conflict with the Central Powers?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes; of tremendous value, but it was not the kind of value that would prove the proposition that the United States is in danger from any other navy.

The Navy of Great Britain, with the help of the Navy of the United States and France, took no German port. They landed no hostile forces on German soil. I do not know that they even landed a hostile shot on any German soil.

Mr. DITTER. May I say further to the gentleman that it was not a part of the program to land such forces on German soil, but the gentleman will certainly acknowledge that the armed forces of the Allies, including the United States, were certainly protected and their cause advanced by the efficiency of the naval forces?

Mr. BIERMANN. I do not doubt that at all; but I wish that tomorrow the distinguished gentleman in his speech would try to draw a lesson from the use of those navies against Germany, to prove his proposition that the United States is in danger from any foreign country.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I suppose the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] is going to tell us that the Battle of Jutland determined the victory of the World War? That would be the logical conclusion from the statement he just made.

Mr. BIERMANN. It seems to me it would not be demanding too much of the members of this committee or the proponents of this bill, if they are going to argue that the United States is in danger from some foreign country, that they pick out some instance in the World War to lend some color to that kind of belief.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I simply rise to make the observation that the value of the Navy during the World War was to protect the men and munitions of war that we sent over to Europe. We are not going to do that again; so we will not need the Navy for that purpose.

Mr. BIERMANN. Exactly. I thank the gentleman for his observation.

Japan's population was 64,000,000 in 1930. Ours was twice that number. In wealth, natural resources, and material for carrying on warfare, we are many times as strong as Japan. To contend that Japan could successfully make war on us over 5,000 miles of ocean is so fantastic as to be ridiculous.

During more than 30 years, to my personal knowledge, the militarists and jingoes of this country have used the Japanese scare as an excuse for huge appropriations. The Japanese scare is the only excuse in the backs of the heads of the Members who will vote for this measure.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. If the gentleman will permit the observation, the gentleman has been here long enough to know that it is not the usual practice to have an appropriation bill out among the membership and make the membership vulnerable to the attacks of those who might be interested in the appropriation long before the consideration of the bill. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BIERMANN. I think that is correct.

Mr. DITTER. So the criticism directed against the present naval appropriation bill does not apply alone to this bill but might apply to all appropriation bills.

Mr. BIERMANN. I am not talking about the general appropriation bills of the House. I made the statement that I regretted very much that this bill has not been considered by the general membership of the House, and I cited these facts to prove that proposition. I meant no aspersion on the committee.

Mr. DITTER. But the gentleman will admit also that he has had the opportunity of studying the bill during the entire time of general debate. This is true, is it not?

Mr. BIERMANN. I think that is true if the gentleman will admit that a Member has nothing at all to do except to study some bill that may happen to be before the House.

Mr. DITTER. And the gentleman will have time to study the bill before it is read under the 5-minute rule, which will probably be a matter of 3 days.

Mr. BIERMANN. But my point is that at a time when we are about to appropriate $172,000,000 more for the Navy than we did in the previous year and about to adopt a policy which will mean an annual appropriation for the Navy of $555,000,000, the general membership of the House ought to know these facts and have an opportunity to study them before they are called upon to pass on the bill; and there ought to be more than just a few Members here to listen to the debate.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield for this further observation?

Mr. BIERMANN. I will yield, provided the gentleman can get me more time.

Mr. DITTER. If the gentleman will compare the Members present on his own side of the aisle with those present on this side of the aisle, I think he will see that he should direct his criticism against the Democratic membership rather than against the Republican membership.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman please deduct the Farmer-Laborites and the Progressives?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the criticism of the gentleman with reference to the method of bringing in this bill applies to all appropriation bills. They should be before the Members in sufficient time for them to study the bills, and attack such provisions as should be attacked. This would be a salutary policy for safeguarding the interests of the taxpayers.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. For a very brief question.

Mr. COCHRAN. Were we to follow the policy our friend has just suggested, would we not be flooded with letters and telegrams protesting against this or that item in the bill?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes; I think that would be especially true with regard to the pending bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. They would not be satisfied with the appropriation provided in the bill but would want more.

Mr. BIERMANN. No; I think they would want two-thirds taken off.

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman does not mean he is afraid of public opinion, does he?

Mr. COCHRAN. I certainly believe in the right of public opinion, but the gentleman knows we would be flooded with telegrams had the bill been reported out 2 weeks ago.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BIERMANN. I regret very much that this bill has not been considered more by the general Membership of the House. Up until 12:30 yesterday noon no copy of the bill and no copy of the report was available to the Membership of this House. Yet we are going to be asked to vote for an appropriation of $457,000,000 in a day or two, and I mean no reflection on the Membership of this House when I say that the very great majority of the Members will vote on this measure without an adequate understanding of what it carries with it. If this bill passes and becomes law, it will mean that we shall appropriate for the 1936 fiscal year more than $920,000,000 for our Army and our Navy. If the emergency funds are used to supplement these figures, as they were in 1934 and 1935, it is reasonable to say that during the next fiscal year, we shall spend on our Army and Navy more than a billion dollars.

The Seventy-third and the Seventy-fourth Congresses have appropriated vast sums of money. The defense for these appropriations largely has been that they were made to meet a great economic emergency. That emergency, we hope and believe, will be temporary, but this appropriation, if it is adopted, embarks us upon a tremendous permanent policy of enormous public expenditures for the Navy.

On pages 53 and 54 of the hearings, Admiral Standley sets out in detail the expense of maintaining our Navy at the so-called "treaty strength" after we shall have attained it in 1941. He declares that it will cost our Government $555,146,641 every year to maintain our Navy and to replace overage ships. That is more money than Great Britain and Japan combined are spending on their Navies. It is more money than it cost for all the running expenses of our Government in any peace year before 1904. It is more than twice as much as it cost to run our Government so recently as 1880.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman has told us how much we are spending on preparedness. Will the gentleman tell us also how much we are spending on panics and depressions?

Mr. BIERMANN. I do not have that in this speech.

A short time ago I received an inquiry from Luther College in my home town of Decorah, Iowa, as to what fraction of our governmental expenditures are devoted to the payment of past wars and in preparation for expected wars in the future. I analyzed the expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and I found in that year more than 69 percent of the ordinary running expenses of our Government were devoted to past and future wars. I ask unanimous consent at this point that I may be permitted to insert in my remarks a copy of my reply to Luther College.

The CHAIRMAN (Mrs. NORTON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 15, 1935.

LUTHER COLLEGE,
Decorah, Iowa.

GENTLEMEN: If we consider the ordinary expenses of the Federal Government, during the past fiscal year which ended June 30, 1934, the expenditures on past wars and preparation for expected wars in the future accounted for more than 69 percent of the expenditures of the United States Government.

The total ordinary expenditures of the United States Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, were $3,100,914,534.14.

The expenditure on wars past and future were as follows:

Army	$205,305,921.93
Navy	274,388,386.06
Veterans' Administration	506,549,454.14
Bonus certificates	50,000,000.00
Interest on debt	756,617,126.73
Public-debt retirement	359,490,900.00
Total expenditures on past and future wars	2,152,351,788.86

Expenditure on legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the Government, all civil departments, all independent offices, civil-service retirement funds, etc., were $948,562,745.28.

The total expenditures for the Federal Government for the year ending June 30, 1934, including relief and other emergency expenditures were $7,105,050,084.95.

Among the emergency expenditures were:

Army	$38,023,229.37
Navy	22,640,904.90
Veterans' Administration	401,033.60
Total	61,065,167.87

The total expenditures on wars past and future out of the ordinary and the emergency expenditures for the year ending June 30, 1934, were $2,213,416,956.63.

In other words, wars past and future, accounted for more than 31 percent even of the grant total of our Government's expenditures including the emergency expenditures.

Sincerely yours,

FRED BIERMANN.

Mr. BIERMANN. For the 14 years, 1922 to 1935, our Government spent more than $11,000,000,000 on "preparedness." It is evident to the most casual thinker that that sort of expenditure cannot continue without having a demoralizing effect upon the other activities of our Government or actually leading this Nation into bankruptcy.

The proponents of this bill will not be able to show during this debate that there is any reasonable excuse for spending a billion dollars on "preparedness" this year and in engaging to spend continuously approximately $555,000,000 each year on maintaining our Navy.

I am sure that if the Members of this House had had the opportunity to study this bill and its consequences, it would stand no chance whatsoever of being approved by the House. I sometimes wonder that we have wandered so far from the principles upon which this Republic was founded George Washington, the greatest of all Americans, warned this country against "overgrown military establishments", because "under any form of government they are inauspicious to liberty and they are to be regarded as being particularly hostile to republican liberty." Jefferson, Hamilton, and Franklin expressed similar feelings.

The Congress of the United States will before long have to return to the fundamental principles upon which this Republic rests or the Republic itself is going to perish. I know of no finer service to his country that any Member of this House could render in the remainder of this session than to cast his vote against this bill.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, we are discussing the practicability of increasing our Navy for the purpose of national defense. I think this is a matter which should be well considered, but I am greatly of the opinion that we should give equal consideration to the proposition that in our national defense we want to do only those things that will protect our own shores; that we are not so much interested in aggression or strife on foreign shores. I think we need more friendships than battleships. I think that if an increase is needed in any branch of our service it is in the Air Service. It is my feeling that we are confronted today with greater possibilities of destruction from within our own country than we are by aggression from without; and it is to this feature of our national welfare that I wish to address my remarks at this particular time.

I call the attention of the Members of the House to the promises made to the American people in two planks of the Democratic platform. I shall insert at this point the preamble of the Democratic platform:

The Democratic Party solemnly promises by appropriate action to put into effect the principles, policies, and reforms herein advocated, and to eradicate the policies, methods, and practices herein condemned. We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance, to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Federal Government, and we call upon the Democratic Party in the States to make a zealous effort to achieve a proportionate result.

This has not been the results so far under this Democratic rule of our country.

The Democratic platform further states:

We advocate a competitive tariff for revenue, with a fact-finding tariff commission free from Executive interference, reciprocal tariff agreements with other nations, and an international economic conference designed to restore international trade and facilitate exchange.

I want to call the Members' attention to the fact that in the Democratic Party platform of 1932 they make this further statement:

We condemn the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Law, the prohibitive rates of which have resulted in retaliatory action by more than 40 countries, created international economic hostilities, destroyed international trade, driven our factories into foreign countries, robbed the American farmer of his foreign markets, and increased the cost of production.

I want to rise to defend that which they condemn, and I want to condemn that which the Democratic plank refers to as the thing they are trying to see inculcated into American life. Why do I want to do this? Because it is doing the opposite from what they claimed it was going to do. If you will read the Democratic platform and the promises that they made to the American people when that platform was adopted, and when the present President of the United States stated, "I am for it 100 percent", you will see that never in the history of America were promises made which were so flagrantly violated, promises that were so much broken as were these.

May I read a letter that I received from a manufacturing concern which employs 423 men? They are condemning the reciprocal tariff and the fact that the Democratic Party does not protect American industry. I want to say to the Members that foreign countries are now bidding and bidding strong for American industry. If we continue along the policies that the Democratic Party is now pursuing, we will have less industry in operation and more people out of work than ever before. The industries of this country will leave America and go to Canada and other foreign countries, because those countries will give them greater protection than they receive in this country. I quote:

In order to be prepared for the worst, our company has deemed it wise to make some investigation of a new site, possibly outside the United States of America, where manufacturing could be carried on under somewhere near normal restrictions, regulations, etc.

It will be of interest to you to know that one of the places we have had brought to our attention is in the Province of Quebec, Canada. We have never heard of the Canadians being accused of permitting sweat-shop wages and conditions to obtain, or that the Canadians paid wages so low that decent living conditions could not be maintained. We quote, therefore, from letter received from the Southern Canada Power Co., of Montreal, touching the general situation of wages and particularly wages for female workers:

"There are no minimum-wage laws in effect for male help; nor limitations as to hours. The general practice throughout our district is a 55-hour week, and overtime is paid for at the standard day rate.

"For female help there have been minimum wages in effect for some time for certain lines of trade, and, as you know, this question is receiving considerable attention at the present time. I discussed the matter with the Government official in charge, who informed me that regulations have not been put into printed form recently because of the changes that are being made. Stated briefly, however, the situation is that there is a minimum wage of $6 per week for female workers in our territory outside of Montreal which rises to $10 per week at the end of 2 years' experience for qualified workers. The Department recognizes that there are some girls who could never earn $10 per week in competition, and a strict enforcement of a rule that a girl with 2 years' experience had to be paid not less than $10 per week would make it impossible for some girls to get work. There is a provision made, therefore, that 70 percent of the total female working force must be paid not less than $10 per week, 20 percent of the force may be paid not less than $8 per week, and the remaining 10 percent not less than $6 per week."

You will note that the Canadian authorities very wisely recognize that it is perfectly right and proper to pay lower wages in the small country towns, outlying districts, etc., than in the great cities like Toronto and Montreal.

This is one of the fundamental weaknesses of the N. R. A. We in the small town of ——— have to pay the same wages as we would have to pay if our factories were located outside of New York City, our chief market.

I am hopeful that in some way, in the face of all kinds of unreasonable union labor demands for uniformity, it will be possible to continue manufacturing in this country and to pay a prevailing wage rate dependent upon the rate of wages paid in the community in which the place of employment may be located. If present regulations are continued under the N. R. A., there can be but little question but that industrial establishments located now in the small country towns will gravitate toward the cities because the chief advantage of locating in the small towns, namely, a cheaper and more abundant labor supply, has been destroyed.

Also, if across the border in Canada we can hire men for 20 cents per hour but here are compelled to pay a minimum of 35 cents per hour, and we can hire in Canada female labor for as low as $6 per week while we are compelled to pay $12, unless a very high protective tariff is put into effect at once it will mean two things: 1. Manufacturers will seek establishments in Canada, or 2. They will go out of business altogether and the Canadians will take over the markets.

Doubtless you are fully aware of the keen competition that we are meeting with at the present time from the cheap-labor countries like Japan, Germany, and Czechoslovakia, where employers are not restricted as to wages or hours of labor; yet up to this time our Government has not seen fit to protect American industry, which is subject to all the provisions of the N. R. A., from the cheap labor of these countries. This is one of the big factors which is keeping men on the unemployed list. We cannot buy our merchandise abroad and keep men employed here.

I also quote from another letter which I received, the following:

In woodworking there is a high percentage of labor in the finished product. In the industries that are continuing, carrying on, developing, prospering, like automobiles, there is a low percentage of labor in the finished product. An automobile has 18 percent; in our work it runs from 30 to 60 percent. Therefore when a wage is raised arbitrarily it falls with particular severity on all industries where there is a high percentage of labor content. This usually means the small industries.

One other thing: Wood-working industries are usually located in small towns for two reasons: 1. A cheaper labor supply due to the lower cost of living in the country towns, and 2. That they may be near a source of supply for their raw material—lumber and wood.

When the codes require that woodworking pay the same wage rate as is paid in the cities they are denying the wood-working industry the benefits of their geographic location and placing upon them an additional burden, namely, that of transportation. Our chief market, for example, is New York City. After our merchandise is completed it is necessary to truck from here to New York. This is a considerable item of expense a continuance of which is justified only if there is some compensation in way of lower wage rates or cheaper raw material.

Not content with imposing uniform wage rates on all parts of the country, the Government is going one step farther in the reciprocal-trade agreements in which the small industries suffer by having the tariff removed or reduced. At present there is under consideration at Washington a reciprocal agreement with Canada.

In former years American factories manufactured practically all the brush handles used in Canada. The Canadians put on a tariff making this impossible and factories, one at St. John, New Brunswick, and the other at Gravenhurst, Ontario, are now making the handles used there. In addition, the Gravenhurst factory is now furnishing practically all the handles used by a company at Newark, N. J.

Just how it is in the least fair or a good business policy to impose a higher-wage and shorter-hour arrangement and all the other burdens of the code on the American manufacturers of wood products and other industries as well and then reduce the tariff now in effect so as to make it easier for the Canadian manufacturers to enter the American market is a question difficult to answer.

Wood-working factories over the country are encountering financial difficulties on all sides.

Mr. Chairman, when the Chief Executive of the United States made his inaugural address he said to the American people: "We are going to give you those things which will make everybody happy and which will cause everyone to feel joyous, and that will give you a new and abundant life." I think the President of the United States was sincere when he made the statement, but I believe that he is being so ill-advised today that things are becoming confused. They do not know what they are doing. I decided some time ago to criticize where criticism was due. May I say to the members of the Democratic Party that if you permit to continue the program that has been started by the President of the United States, we in this country will discover in a very short time that instead of helping the country to be a better place to live in, conditions will be the worst that this country has ever known. This is because the President of the United States is not carrying out the promises that he made to the people in his platform. If you will read the platform, then take notice of what he is trying to do and what he is trying to have this Congress enact into law, you will find there is no comparison between promises and accomplishments. He is doing the opposite from what he promised. Why? Why is he doing it?

I say in all sincerity and with the utmost desire to stop some of this program that is leading us into utter failure and ruin that we must not continue the movements that are going on today. They are dangerous because we are making regular bureaucrats out of our departments. We are making them departments that are going to rule or ruin, and the freedom of the American people enjoyed under the Constitution of the United States is going to fade away from the American people, and the freedom that you and I have enjoyed will be no more. Instead there will be a millstone around the necks of the coming generation on account of a great national debt, and because we are permitting ourselves to be hamstrung by regulations that are impossible to be met by the people in our generation and in future generations, we are setting up the greatest of dictatorships, we are doing away with constitutional government, we are destroying all vestige of the government that made this the greatest Nation on the face of the earth.

We should get rid of the professors and the untrained youths without experience who are writing the administration bills that you are passing here in the House of Representatives. Thank goodness the Senate is a buffer at least for some radical measures, but it is not strong enough to stop some of the wild legislation proposed by the administration. Restore confidence in the hearts of the American people. Return to constitutional government, and do so at once, before it is too late.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, when I speak today about this Navy bill, I want it understood first that I am not criticizing the members of the committee, nor am I criticizing their policy. I am a member of the Military Affairs Committee, and I know what committee chairmen and committee members have to do. I would not come into court with clean hands if I criticized them for the bill they have brought out. However, I have certain objections to this bill. One is an objection to the enormous and staggering amount of money which will burden so heavily the American people. That has been covered. I shall not make any specific statement on that feature, except the thought of so huge an amount, coupled with some of our policies, may lead us into war, and this is horrifying.

I have another small objection, and that is the increase in the number of midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy. I want the committee to fully explain why an increased number of midshipmen is necessary at Annapolis. We have colleges all over the country that can give the boys training; after some service in the Navy they could be efficient officers. It is true of the Army, so why not the Navy? The military and naval authorities want to get enough boys so that they can put them in a sort of iron foundry and pour the hot youthful metal into casts, then dump them out and put them into the service of the Army and Navy, to think, talk, and act only with a military education; and even after these young men leave Annapolis they have to go to universities to study marine engineering and various other subjects.

I have another objection, not to this bill particularly but to some of the naval policies. That is, that our admirals pay too much attention to foreign policies. What business is it of theirs?

The State Department is in charge of foreign policy, and under the able direction of Secretary Cordell Hull. The State Department has the Foreign Relations Department and the Diplomatic Service and are well able to do their part. Let the admirals stay on their ships where they belong.

Now, what is an admiral? I do not ask this in a demagogic or mean sort of way, but he is a more or less glorified policeman of the United States, who is supposed to protect our borders and not have anything to do with foreign policy. Like policemen, they should do their duty and keep their mouths shut. We have signed the Kellogg Pact, but what do they do? They get out a book every year on "naval policy", which is really foreign policy, and they say:

To maintain the Navy in sufficient strength to support the national policies and for commerce and to guard the continental and overseas possessions of the United States.

I do not object to this, except we have renounced war as an instrument. We did this in the Kellogg Pact, and we have done it time after time. Then they also request a development of the Navy to the maximum in battle strength, and to control the sea—which, of course, means all the seas—and for defense. They are always talking about battle strength and talking about warfare; the implications are that we are sure to go to war. I am now going to read a few of the things that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY] said:

To my mind there is but one course for us to pursue, and that is to maintain an Army that is unequaled.

An army that is unequaled! Russia has an army of 15,000,000 men, so the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY] did not mean that.

A navy that will be the mistress of the Seven Seas.

I went over to the Library, having forgotten my geography, and I looked in the Almanac and I find that that means the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the Indian Oceans, the China Sea, the Arctic, the Antarctic Oceans, and the Baltic Sea; so he did not mean that either. In other words, the thing I object to with respect to our military and naval appropriations is the false psychology of our grandeur—the grandeur of the United States. The idea is we are the biggest cock of the walk. What I want to do is to be purely defensive and talk defensive, because as a big cock of the walk we might get knocked off. I prefer that we be really defensive, not offensive, either in national habits or in manners.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Is it not the object and purpose of the Washington Treaty and the London Treaty to be merely defensive?

Mr. MAVERICK. I think so, but I do not know enough about that to state.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Does not the gentleman know there is no effort being made by this Government to go beyond the provisions of those treaties, and therefore everything in this bill is defensive, is it not?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes; I think the material part is defensive, but I do not like this psychology of war. I was talking about war psychology and the meddling habits of admirals.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Nevertheless, it is true that these treaties do insure to the United States a Navy as large as any other in the world under the 5–5–3 ratio.

Mr. MAVERICK. Of course; and we are going the limit, apparently, spending huge sums, and talking too much about war.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Does not the gentleman think this country should have a navy equal to that of Great Britain?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I do not think we need as large a navy as Great Britain, because we do not maintain a world-wide empire as does Britain. Furthermore, we are self-contained. We are not living on a little island that has to receive all of its raw materials from the five continents of the earth.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Then the gentleman is of the opinion that the defense of this country must be dependent upon the peace and good will of other nations and not our own defense?

Mr. MAVERICK. You gentlemen are taking too much of my time.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I would like to answer that question.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I would like to have an answer.

Mr. MAVERICK. I do not know how large a navy we ought to have, but I know we are spending a lot of money, and I know that there is a fundamental question involved in our international policy. It involves domestic policies also, and I know this much, and I am not saying this for any Republican to feel happy over, but I am saying it from the viewpoint of a liberal. What are we doing with our money? We want to have a subsidy for our merchant ships. A shipbuilding concern builds a million-dollar ship; then we are to spend $400,000 of Government money, or the taxpayers' money, as a part of that subsidy and then subsidize the employees. Then we spend the rest of our money on relief, and for the Army and the Navy. We must have relief, but it is certainly not satisfying to self-respecting Americans. We need more economic thought and less military thought.

I say, as an economic principle, and as a matter of international policy, this is foolish. I think the money we spend should be spent on things that are productive for this Nation.

Now, where is the bill on the Tennessee Valley Authority? Where is the holding-company bill? Where are the fundamental problems that we had before us and that the Democrats promised the people of the United States? Are we going to scuttle the Tennessee Valley, or let the Republicans do that?

Are we going to throw the Wagner labor-disputes bill in the trash can? Are we going to forget all of the fundamental issues before us and spend all of our time building an army and a navy, making subsidies that do not profit the Nation, spending relief money, which only keeps people alive and, in other words, spending all our money on nonproductive pursuits? What are we here for anyway?

The people of America expect us to do something besides spend money on nonproductive pursuits. The Tennessee Valley Authority is one of the greatest things and most constructive ideas ever originated in this country. It will bring a higher standard of living to millions of people, and when the Government spends money on T. V. A., it is productive money, where you get money back, where you give cheaper electric rates, decent wages, and help people to live like human beings; whereas, the money we are spending may be necessary but certainly cannot be termed money spent for a constructive purpose.

We have vital legislation which we should pass and have not passed. There is no trouble about huge appropriations for nonproductive purposes, but all of the really constructive, forward-looking, humane bills lie molding in pigeonholes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The Democratic Party promised the people a navy up to treaty strength, and the gentleman has no objection to that?

Mr. MAVERICK. In that particular respect, I am not familiar.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. I would like the gentleman from Georgia to find that in the Democratic platform. The Democratic platform in 1932 denounced the Republican administration for spending about $700,000,000 on the Army and Navy combined and here we are committed to a policy of spending over $1,000,000,000!

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If the gentleman will become familiar with the Democratic Party, he will find it has always stood for adequate national defense, and an adequate national defense in this instance means a treaty navy.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to yield any more, if it is all right with these gentlemen. Everybody is for defense; let us not argue about that.

I believe every Member of this House has exactly the same idea. I think every Republican, Democrat, Farmer-Laborite, or Progressive wants to have national defense, and I may say that I believe every Member of Congress is entirely conscientious, but we must admit some committeemen want Congress to spend too much money and we may differ on methods.

I simply wanted to make these observations and to state that I have introduced in the House today, and I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this may appear in the RECORD, House Joint Resolution 259, which states in effect that if we are going to be a defensive nation, that we must be a defensive nation.

The title of the resolution states—

To define a national policy of peace and neutrality; to prohibit certain transactions with belligerent nations; to protect American sovereignty, and for other purposes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the last war we went into the war, I think, because British propaganda was better than German propaganda and probably because the British had a better navy and Germany was blockaded, and further because we thereby loaned our money to the Allies.

Now, there are two theories with respect to this. One of them is to have such a gigantic navy that we can trade at will with all the belligerents and our manufacturers can get temporarily rich and we can issue bonds which the taxpayers of the United States can pay, and then we can go "busted" afterward just as we did in this war.

What did we get out of the last war? Death and destruction, unpaid debts, almost financial ruin which may yet lead to it, hatred, greed, selfishness, broken morale, starvation.

I want to stay out of war. I do not say anything against defense, but I am against this war psychology and I am against the idea of being the big cock of the walk.

I know about the Kellogg Pact, but this resolution, which I hope you gentlemen will read tomorrow, goes into all the details and has been studied by 10 or 12 distinguished international lawyers, and I may say it is a well-written document, because I did not write it all myself. I got a lot of help on it. The resolution states first:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States that the United States maintain peace and good will to all nations.

What is wrong with that?

This, of course, is not going to stop any war, but it may help with the other provisions. Then the resolution goes on with a definition of a belligerent foreign nation, a prohibition on contracts and loans, and provides that we cannot lend money to other nations engaged in war or sell them munitions, and then it puts a limitation on exports and shipping. It hits at the causes of the last war; it is a move to keep us out of another.

Mr. Chairman, as I see it today, the whole world, just as the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky said, is in a maelstrom of horror. They are getting ready for war. I hope this Nation defends itself but does not needlessly send its boys off to be killed in another war on foreign fields. I hope that in our desire to be a defensive nation we do not become an offensive nation, and I would like for the gentlemen on the Naval Affairs Committee and on the Appropriations Committee to tell me all about the Navy and why it is not sufficient to protect our property from the Aleutian Islands to Hawaii and down to the Panama Canal, and if that is not enough, why is it necessary to have ships to go all over the world.

The segment or area that I have mentioned seems to me to be entirely enough for defensive purposes in the Pacific. If we actually have to have a Navy big enough to control and go into all the "Seven Seas", and to be the mistress of all of these seas, it will have to be much bigger even than the present Navy. Why do we want to dabble into other people's business all over the world? We have a homogeneous continent, and it is quite proper that we should protect all of our own country or territorial possessions and the Panama Canal. But that is enough, and it seems to me that we are going beyond that.

Some day we are going to have to stop spending all our money on preparedness for war, for subsidies, for relief that is not relief, and for all kinds of enterprises which are merely tax burdens and do not help in any way in the productive enterprises of this Nation or of its industries, its commerce, and agriculture. It is certain that we would not spend as much money on schools, it is certain that the expenditure of this money is not properly called "constructive." So I hope that the gentlemen on the Naval Affairs Committee and the Appropriations Committee will give full reasons for these expenditures and will tell us how this Nation, with all these great expenditures, can get back on a productive basis, eliminate unemployment, educate our children, and live with a decent standard of living.

Mr. MAVERICK asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and to include therein the joint resolution referred to, which is as follows:

[House of Representatives, H. J. Res. 259, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

Joint resolution to define a national policy of peace and neutrality, to prohibit certain transactions with belligerent nations, to protect American sovereignty, and for other purposes

Whereas the United States should maintain its neutrality in the event of armed conflict between foreign nations; and

Whereas the United States should, prior to any such armed conflict, define by law its policies in such event; and

Whereas the United States should, prior to any such armed conflict, prescribe by law the provisions applicable to its nationals and others in such event: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That—

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SECTION 1. (a) It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States that the United States maintain peace and good will to all nations.

(b) It is further declared to be the policy of the United States that the military and naval forces of the United States shall not be used in aid of or against any foreign nation except to protect the United States and places subject to its territorial jurisdiction against armed invasion thereof, and that no part of the military or naval forces of the United States shall be transported to or used upon the soil of any foreign nation for the purpose of engaging on behalf of or against any foreign nation in armed conflict.

INFORMATION TO FOREIGN NATIONS

SEC. 2. The President is authorized and requested, by such messages as he may deem appropriate, to inform foreign nations of the policy and provisions of this joint resolution.

DEFINITION OF BELLIGERENT FOREIGN NATION

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this joint resolution—

(a) The term "belligerent foreign nation" shall mean any foreign nation which has declared war against any other foreign nation, any foreign nation which is engaged in armed conflict with any other foreign nation, and any foreign nation which the President of the United States determines and proclaims is engaged in armed conflict with any other foreign nation; and

(b) No such foreign nation shall be deemed a belligerent foreign nation after such nation has, by declaration of peace or otherwise, terminated the state of war or armed conflict existing between it and all other nations and the President of the United States has so proclaimed.

PROHIBITION ON CONTRACTS AND LOANS

SEC. 4. (a) Neither the United States nor any State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States, or political subdivision thereof, or any citizen of the United States, or partnership, association, or corporation organized under the laws of the United States or of any State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States, or political subdivision thereof shall:

(1) Enter into any contract with any belligerent foreign nation, or national thereof, to furnish, or furnish such belligerent foreign nation, or national thereof, any munitions of war or article declared to be contraband of war by it or by any foreign nation with which such belligerent foreign nation is engaged in armed conflict; or

(2) Make any loan or otherwise extend credit to any belligerent foreign nation or national thereof, or acquire, during the time such nation is a belligerent foreign nation, any evidence of indebtedness of such belligerent foreign nation or any national thereof issued during the time such nation is a belligerent foreign nation.

(b) This section shall not apply to any extension, renewal, or adjustment of indebtedness existing prior to the time when any such foreign nation became a belligerent foreign nation if the Securities and Exchange Commission approves such transaction as a bona fide business transaction not entered into for the purpose of evading this section.

PROHIBITION ON ENFORCEMENT OF OBLIGATIONS

SEC. 5. (a) No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction of any cause of action arising out of any transaction entered into in violation of section 4.

(b) No agency or executive department of the United States Government shall recognize the validity of any transaction entered into in violation of section 4 or enter into negotiations or representations with any foreign nation or national thereof for the enforcement of the terms of or remedies in connection with any such transaction.

LIMITATIONS ON EXPORT AND SHIPPING

SEC. 6. (a) There shall not be exported from the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, directly or indirectly, to any belligerent foreign nation or national thereof any munitions of war or any article declared to be contraband of war by such belligerent foreign nation or by any foreign nation with which such belligerent foreign nation is engaged in armed conflict.

(b) No military vessel or military aircraft or armed vessel or armed aircraft of a belligerent foreign nation shall navigate the waters or air space of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, nor shall any such vessel or aircraft be allowed entry (except in case of distress) to or clearance from any port of the United States or place subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

(c) No vessel or aircraft registered under the laws of any belligerent foreign nation shall navigate the waters or air space of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof if any vessel or aircraft registered under the laws of such belligerent foreign nation has been authorized or permitted by such belligerent foreign nation to fly the American flag.

(d) No vessel of American registry shall be chartered to or used for the purposes of any belligerent foreign nation or national thereof and for violation of this subsection, in addition to other penalties, the registration of such vessel shall be canceled.

SERVICE OF CITIZENS OF UNITED STATES IN ARMED FORCES

SEC. 7. Any citizen of the United States who enlists for military or naval service in or remains in the military or naval service of any belligerent foreign nation shall be deprived of any right or protection based upon his American citizenship.

PASSPORTS FOR TRAVEL IN BELLIGERENT AREAS

SEC. 8. No passport shall be issued to any cititzen of the United States for travel in any belligerent foreign nation, or in any area in which the President deems military or naval operations are or may be carried on by any belligerent foreign nation, except under such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe.

RECRUITING IN UNITED STATES

SEC. 9. No individual, partnership, association, or corporation shall engage in the United States or in any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof in recruiting or procuring individuals for the military or naval service of any belligerent foreign nation.

PENALTIES

SEC. 10. Any individual, partnership, association, or corporation violating the provisions of sections 4, 6, 8, or 9 of this joint resolution shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not exceeding $100,000 or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

Mr. CARY. Madam Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FIESINGER].

Mr. FIESINGER. Madam Chairman, I want to take a few minutes' time to express a kick that some of my people have against the New York Navy Yard. The matter I am complaining of is set forth in the hearings on page 914 and continuing through to page 924.

In my district in Ohio there is a concern by the name of the Sandusky Foundry Machine Co. that manufactures propeller-shaft sleeves for the Navy. It has been engaged in that business for a good many years. It is not the only business of that kind in the United States, for, as a matter of fact, the hearings reveal that there are six competitors in that line of business.

The business was founded on patents issued to a man by the name of Mr. Millspaugh. For a good many years his company, now the Sandusky Foundry Machine Co., did all the business of that kind with the United States Navy.

Quite some time ago the patents expired, and there are a number of competitors now engaged in the business. To show the relation of this business to the Navy, I want to read briefly from the hearings:

Mr. LAKE. Our company until 1920 supplied all the sleeves that were manufactured for all the navy-yard vessels.

Mr. DITTER. Up to what time did you continue to supply any sleeves for the Navy direct? I do not mean for private yards.

Mr. LAKE. Up to 1932.

Mr. DITTER. Was there any complaint at any time lodged by the Department of the Navy with respect to the quality of the product you were putting out?

Mr. LAKE. No, sir.

Mr. DITTER. Was any complaint lodged with respect to the prices they were paying for the product they secured from you?

Mr. LAKE. No, sir.

Now, I am not finding any fault with the navy yard as a competitor engaged in this line of business. We do not claim that we have a right to the business just because these people are private contractors. We do claim, however, that we have a right to do the business if we are the lowest bidder.

The Navy Department advertises for bids. They get the bids from competitors, from these private people who submit bids. Then the Navy comes in and puts in a secret bid after they know what the other bids are and get the business because they stand behind the law that is set forth by Mr. Cary on page 917 of the hearings, as follows:

And no part of the moneys herein appropriated for the Naval Establishment or herein made available therefor shall be used or expended under contracts hereafter made for the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, of any naval vessel, machinery, article, or articles that at the time of the proposed repair, purchase, or acquirement can be repaired, manufactured, or produced in each or any of the Government navy yards or arsenals of the United States, when time and facilities permit, and when, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, such repair, purchase, acquirement, or production would not involve an appreciable increase in cost to the Government.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIESINGER. Yes.

Mr. DITTER. The gentleman will also allow the further observation that the same conditions do not prevail in making up cost prices at the navy yard as prevailed in this instance so far as a private company is concerned.

Mr. FIESINGER. I was coming to that, and I will say that the observation of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] is exactly correct, and I thank him for the same, and further permit me to say that I, in company with Mr. Lake, have made vigorous protest to the responsible Navy heads about this practice, and Mr. Lake has made protest during former administrations, and the Navy heads have uniformly recognized the justice of these protests, but claimed they were powerless under the above-quoted law, except one former Secretary of the Navy did rule that putting in secret bids by the navy yards was an unfair practice. That is not the only unfair practice the navy yard is responsible for. The business of making these cylinders is a highly specialized business. It was developed with great care and expense. The incident I speak of goes back to 1920, and I quote again from Mr. Lake's testimony at the hearings:

He said:

We were at that time manufacturing and selling centrifugally cast gun-recoil cylinder liners. We had been manufacturing them for some years, and the New York Navy Yard wrote us a letter asking if one of their officers would be permitted to visit our foundry in order to see how we made those castings. When we went into it with them we believed that their curiosity had been aroused because of the high quality of the product that we made. They told us that all they wanted to do was to make some small bushings for the use of the navy yard in its own work. We prophesied at that time that if they built a machine, which some of them were talking about, it would not be long before they would be in the game with both feet.

Well, Mr. Lake's predictions came true. The New York Navy Yard is in the business with both feet and is now engaged in monstrously unfair competition. Not, let me say, on price, because their costs are higher than these private manufacturers' prices, product delivered to the navy yard, but because they put in secret bids after the other bids are in and then put in fictitious prices. The hearings which I have alluded to, develop the story about these practices, and time does not permit me to repeat them here. There is, however, a more important point, which concerns the national interests. During time of war the Nation will need all of these highly specialized manufacturers, for during the last war they had to operate 24 hours a day. If the navy yard persists in its practices, it will put these private manufacturers out of business, and if war comes—and I hope it will never come, but if it does come—the Navy will be unable to supply the needs, and then there will be no one else to manufacture these much-needed things.

In conclusion, and in the national interest, I hope the committee will see fit to amend or accept an amendment to the paragraph of the bill above quoted so that the practices I have complained of will be stopped. And to those of us interested in labor, permit me to say that these manufacturers pay the best of wages, and so far as the company which is located in my home city is concerned, it signed the President's code within 24 hours after it was promulgated and has been meticulous in its observance ever since.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, in my 10 minutes, I am not going to address myself to any particular important feature of the bill. I prefer to wait until the bill is read under the 5-minute rule. However, at this time, I take the opportunity of calling to the attention of Members present, and I hope to the country at large, a very illuminating item which appears on page 61 of the hearings, and which reads as follows:

Admiral STANDLEY. I will take up next the item covering "Navy activities abroad", including relief work, since the last hearing.

Then the items are listed until he comes down to no. 5 and in item no. 5 we find the following:

5. Yangtze Patrol: Communism and banditry in Szechuan, Hunan, Kueichou, and other Yangtze River Provinces have continued to demand the presence of the Yangtze Patrol, which affords protection to Americans in the Yangtze Valley between Chungking and Shanghai. The landing of a party from one of the gunboats at Foochow in conjunction with other nationalities undoubtedly did much to maintain the peace of that city during the Fukien rebellion.

I thought it was the unusual prerogative of my good friend from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] to defend the United States against communism, but I see the Navy Department is competing with the activities of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. In other words, we have now made it our business not only to protect the United States, through Mr. DICKSTEIN, against communism, but we have seen to it that it is our naval policy to protect China against communism.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman from New York never attempts to defend any other nation against communism but his own.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Then the gentleman agrees with me that the Navy should not be competing with the gentleman from New York, in China?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The Navy should mind its own business and look after the United States.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I agree with the gentleman that the Navy should mind its own business. I certainly do not criticize the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] for resenting the competition which the Navy has given him on the subject of communism. He has an exclusive monopoly on that business. The hearings do not indicate how many ships we have in China protecting China from Chinese communism, and also, incidentally, from rebellions. We are determined that China can no longer have a rebellion of its own. Pretty soon we will be sending the Navy there, I suppose, to keep the Chinese pigtails within a certain length, and to keep their chop sticks not too particularly thick. I do not know why the hearings do not disclose how many ships we have down there, but I submit to gentlemen of the committee on both sides of the House that that is important. I had to get the information from one of the clerks of the committee. I find we have six gunboats in China today, and that for 1934 these gunboats cost the United States $676,031.49. Right here, I think that the gentlemen of the committee who have been preaching naval defense, who have been saying these enormous expenditures are absolutely and vitally necessary, will find opportunity to economize to a certain extent.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. And does the gentleman not think it conceivable that those same gunboats might get us into international complications?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Not only that, but what might also happen is this. One of these days if some Japanese started to shoot down some Chinese, and one of these American gunboats should get in the way and the gunboat is sunk, it would not be a question of remembering the Maine, but it would be a question of remembering one of the Yangtze gunboats. Patriotic fervor will rise high and we will find the United States in another war. It may be argued of course that we need these ships over there to protect our missionaries. Nobody will say that we need them to protect the Standard Oil interests or other commercial interests. Of course not. They always give us a holier-than-thou defense.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Did Livingston in Africa need any protection from the British Navy when he was down there as a missionary?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Not that I know of.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Then why should our missionaries need any protection from the Navy?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I should like to say this on the question of missionaries. I think they are splendid people, with high ideals; but what would the people in your district say if, some one of these days, a group of Chinese mandarins, in order to square themselves and salve their guilty consciences before their gods should get together and collect a fund and send some Chinese missionaries to Minnesota, say, or up into my district to reform and convert the Christians to the religion of the Chinese? I know what would happen in my district. The surgeons in the hospitals in my district would be busy sewing up Chinese scalps. Then I suppose, once that would happen, the Chinese Government would be justified in sending some gunboats up the East River to bombard us. I think we ought to stop being silly about this matter and revert, for instance, to the policy as contained in a statement of President Roosevelt and also in a statement of the Secretary of State.

The Secretary of State on December 19, 1933, said as follows:

Under the Roosevelt administration the United States Government is as much opposed as any other government to interference with the freedom, the sovereignty or other internal affairs or processes of the government of other nations. No government need fear any invasion on the part of the United States under the Roosevelt administration.

Then we have the statement of the President himself on December 28, 1933. At a dinner of the Woodrow Wilson Foundation, President Roosevelt declared as follows:

The definite policy of the United States from now on is one opposed to armed intervention. The maintenance of constitutional government in other nations is not, after all, a sacred obligation devolving upon the United States alone.

In view of that statement of policy on the part of President Roosevelt, in view of that statement of policy on the part of the Secretary of State—and I presume they meant what they said when they said it—I submit that we could very well save $676,031.49 by taking those gunboats and sending them back home where they belong. I am not interested in making China safe from communism. I am not interested in protecting sellers of religion or sellers of products. I am not interested in those who go to China for huge profits. They take the profits; let them take the risks. I am interested in minding our own business and protecting the American youth by keeping out of war.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. The gentleman certainly would take no exception to sending good Republican missionaries into Democratic districts for the purpose of securing salvation for them?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. No; not at all. At the same time I wish those Republican missionaries that go over there would not advocate sending patrols over to China, and I do hope that the gentlemen on the Republican side will help me when I offer an amendment on this subject tomorrow. I also hope that the Republican missionaries will not need gunboats to protect them in the campaign of 1936.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. The gentleman will certainly admit that the same good purposes would prevail as prevail with the missionaries that are sent abroad?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Once in a while, despite their good purposes, they chop off their heads. I hope that will not happen to my Republican colleagues.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman has no doubt made a careful study of this bill. I judge from his remarks that he has no other criticism to offer to the bill?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Oh, yes. I will offer a lot of criticisms to this bill under the 5-minute rule, because I do not want to be so presumptuous as to discuss an important subject like this before such a large gathering of the Membership of this House, to wit, 24 Members present. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARY. Madam Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. KELLER. Madam Chairman, two things impressed me greatly in the discussion that has taken place here today. The first one is that most of the gentlemen whom I have heard talk on this subject would have us believe that our great difficulty at the present time and in the past has been due to the costs of war and the terrible cost of preparedness. They would have us believe that that is our principal difficulty. That is not true at all. The costs of war as compared with our other costs are so small that I am going to give you a few figures out of my recollection, but which you will find practically correct when you check up on them. Our trouble is not the cost of war. Our trouble is the cost of panics and the depressions which inevitably follow them.

The total cost of the World War to the United States was twenty-six and one-half billion dollars.

The cost to this country in the loss of wages alone to the wage earners since October 23, 1929, the day the panic broke, is $65,000,000,000, nearly two and a half times the entire cost of the World War to this country. The cost to the people of this country in the loss on stocks and bonds on the stock exchanges of America during that same period is $95,000,000,000. The cost to the American people of other property losses since that time is another $120,000,000,000. Those three items alone, in dollars and cents, amount to $280,000,000,000, more than 10 times the cost of the World War to this country.

I am not for war. I believe in peace as much as any man in this House, maybe more, because it has been my necessity to study what war has cost in the broadest possible sense; but I am not going to delude myself nor sit here idly any longer and permit a misunderstanding of our difficulties. Our difficulties are not the costs of war nor the cost of preparedness. They are the costs of our panics and our depressions, and we are doing nothing about it. That is the misfortune of it.

The second subject I want to take up with you is this: Our strategists on the floor of this House sit here and tell you that the proper strategy in case of war is to sit down and stay at home. Just defend our shores from outside attack. The man who undertakes to advise this body to adopt such a policy as that ought, out of respect to himself as well as out of respect to this body, to enter into the study of and get some understanding of what military strategy means, what such a policy might bring upon us; because whoever makes a statement like that never has read, never has studied, never has had any great desire to study the facts of history that stick out under the nose of every man who has studied it. I issue that as a challenge to any man on the floor of this House who wants to take up the other side of it. The truth of the matter is, America has from the very beginning, stood for the things that were American; has stood for American interests in China the same as every place else. America has always stood for the rights of her citizens wherever they may have been. The facts are that America is going to go on doing that, and if it is necessary to send more gunboats to China or any place else to protect American interests, we will send them. The American people will be behind us to a man when we do it.

The pacifists in this country are good hearted, lovable people who abhor war, as I do when it can be avoided, but who overlook the fact that there are things even worse than war. But I do not know of a single one who can stand up and defend the proposition to outlaw war. I have never heard a single speech in my life that in good common sense successfully defended that misleading slogan; and if any man on the floor of the House believes he can defend it, I shall be delighted to debate that proposition with him. Because America is America—is our Nation, yours and mine, with national rights, national interests, and national obligations to defend those rights, protect those interests, and we are going to do what America ought to do, no matter what it costs. [Applause.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to see any possible reason why we should expend an appropriation of $457,000,000 in peace times for the maintenance of the Navy. If war is not contemplated, there is no occasion to continue building up our Navy. Under our agreements with nearly every nation on the globe, we will not declare war against any nation. Other nations have more than once declared agreements nothing more or less than scraps of paper, but our standing among the nations of the world cannot be maintained as a nation of honor and integrity if we, too, must resort to dishonorable repudiation of solemn promises duly made and entered into in writing.

Here is the solemn obligation we entered into on August 27, 1928. The document is known as "a general pact for the renunciation of war", commonly called the "Kellogg Pact." In all 64 nations agreed to this pact.

Mr. Chairman, at this point I ask unanimous consent to insert in my remarks the text of the pact, which does not cover more than two short pages.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

GENERAL PACT FOR THE RENUNCIATION OF WAR.—SIGNED AT PARIS AUGUST 27, 1928

The President of the German Reich, the President of the United States of America, His Majesty the King of the Belgians, the President of the French Republic, His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland and the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, His Majesty the King of Italy, His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, the President of the Republic of Poland, the President of the Czechoslovak Republic,

Deeply sensible of their solemn duty to promote the welfare of mankind;

Persuaded that the time has come when a frank renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy should be made to the end that the peaceful and friendly relations now existing between their peoples may be perpetuated;

Convinced that all changes in their relations with one another should be sought only by pacific means and be the result of a peaceful and orderly process, and that any signatory Power which shall hereafter seek to promote its national interests by resort to war should be denied the benefits furnished by this Treaty;

Hopeful that, encouraged by their example, all the other nations of the world will join in this humane endeavor and by adhering to the present Treaty as soon as it comes into force bring their peoples within the scope of its beneficent provisions, thus uniting the civilized nations of the world in a common renunciation of war as an instrument of their national policy;

Have decided to conclude a Treaty and for that purpose have appointed as their respective Plenipotentiaries:

The President of the German Reich:
Dr Gustav Stresemann, Minister for Foreign Affairs;
The President of the United States of America:
The Honorable Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State;
His Majesty the King of the Belgians:
Mr. Paul Hymans, Minister for Foreign Affairs, Minister of State;
The President of the French Republic:
Mr. Aristide Briand, Minister for Foreign Affairs;
His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland and the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India:
For Great Britain and Northern Ireland and all parts of the British Empire which are not separate Members of the League of Nations:
The Right Honourable Lord Cushendun, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, Acting Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs;
For the Dominion of Canada:
The Right Honourable William Lyon Mackenzie King, Prime Minister and Minister for External Affairs;
For the Commonwealth of Australia:
The Honourable Alexander John McLachlan, Member of the Executive Federal Council;
For the Dominion of New Zealand:
The Honourable Sir Christopher James Parr, High Commissioner for New Zealand in Great Britain;
For the Union of South Africa:
The Honourable Jacobus Stephanus Smit, High Commissioner for the Union of South Africa in Great Britain;
For the Irish Free State:
Mr. William Thomas Cosgrave, President of the Executive Council;
For India:
The Right Honourable Lord Cushendun, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, Acting Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs;
His Majesty the King of Italy:
Count Gaetano Manzoni, his Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at Paris.
His Majesty the Emperor of Japan:
Count Uchida, Privy Councillor;
The President of the Republic of Poland:
Mr. A. Zaleski, Minister for Foreign Affairs;
The President of the Czechoslovak Republic:
Dr Eduard Benès, Minister for Foreign Affairs; who, having communicated to one another their full powers found in good and due form have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE 1

The High Contracting Parties solemnly declare in the names of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

ARTICLE 2

The High Contracting Parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means.

ARTICLE 3

The present Treaty shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties named in the Preamble in accordance with their respective constitutional requirements, and shall take effect as between them as soon as all their several instruments of ratification shall have been deposited at Washington.

This Treaty shall, when it has come into effect as prescribed in the preceding paragraph, remain open as long as may be necessary for adherence by all the other Powers of the world. Every instrument evidencing the adherence of a Power shall be deposited at Washington and the Treaty shall immediately upon such deposit become effective as between the Power thus adhering and the other Powers parties hereto.

It shall be the duty of the Government of the United States to furnish each Government named in the Preamble and every Government subsequently adhering to this Treaty with a certified copy of the Treaty and of every instrument of ratification or adherence. It shall also be the duty of the Government of the United States telegraphically to notify such Governments immediately upon the deposit with it of each instrument of ratification or adherence.

In faith whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this Treaty in the French and English languages both texts having equal force, and hereunto affix their seals.

Done at Paris, the twenty-seventh day of August in the year one thousand nine hundred and twenty-eight.

Mr. BURDICK. Articles 1 and 2 are the ones which settle the war business. Article 1:

The high contracting parties solemnly declare in the name of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

Article 2:

The high contracting parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts, of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them shall never be sought except by pacific means.

If we intend to adhere to this agreement, just in what way will a bigger Navy help us?

I cannot conceive of any substantial benefits accruing to the mass of the American people from increasing our Navy. I name the following possible benefits:

First. It can give some assurance of protection to the war minded of this Nation, who know now that they do not intend at the proper time to abide by the Paris Pact. It will give security to the munition makers and their associates.

Second. It will be a source of revenue for manufacturers of war munitions.

Third. It will develop employment for those who are called in to build ships.

Fourth. It will furnish an operating field for graduates of the Naval Academy.

I list as among the disadvantages of an increased Navy the following:

First. Increase of taxes at a time when we cannot pay the taxes we now owe.

Second. Under the administration policy of financing the Government the funds to increase the Navy will be borrowed. We will go still farther into debt, when everyone knows that publicly and privately we now owe over twice as much as we are worth and more than we can ever pay.

Third. The Navy is valueless as an instrument of international commerce, and in war time our battleships will probably be run up some river, out of danger, as they were in the last war. Under the improvements of modern science a fleet of battleships can be put out of existence in a few minutes.

Fourth. The flourish of a fleet of battleships by this country is nothing more than a demonstration of power and encourages rather than discourages other nations to build more battleships; further than that, fleet demonstrations are an invitation to war.

Fifth. This program of increased building of battleships is nothing more or less than an absolute waste at a time when we have 20,000,000 people on public relief and as many more receiving private relief.

Sixth. A big navy is the dream of munitions makers—they are for it; they want it—and for the reason that it means "profits for them."

Seventh. Before the munition makers can cause the American people to repudiate the Kellogg Pact and influence Congress to illegally declare war every battleship built in the next 4 years will be obsolete and the money wasted.

No war is justified as far as this country is concerned but a defense war. A war in which we are defending our own shores against the invasion of some other power. I am not a pacifist, I believe in defending this country, and I believe in being always ready to defend it. I believe in peace at all times, even if we have to fight for it. The greatest defense which this or any other country can have for its self-protection is the defense of food. That is the instrument that wins wars. It is not our Navy nor our Army, it is food and the disposition of the people to want to defend this country. Does anyone think starving people, starving in the very government which they are asked to defend, are the kind of soldiers who will want to defend this country?

I have asked this Congress to pay the feed and seed loans of the farmers out of the Army and Navy appropriations, because I know from an intimate knowledge of history that the greatest element of national defense any country can have is an inexhaustible supply of food. The farmers are doing this work. We should have food supplies on hand, segregated, for defensive purposes, to be used in time of defensive warfare and in times of drought, flood, or other devastating causes over which we have, at this time, no control. Can anyone in this House say that to supply destitute farmers with seed and feed is not in defense of this country? Can anyone in the House say that it is better to build battleships that cost $50,000,000 each, and let a whole State go seedless, or having furnished seed, take the homes away from the farmers because they cannot pay the bill?

We have, after much wrangling and effort, secured an appropriation of $60,000,000 for seed to relieve the destitute farmers of the Nation. How much have we expended for them—loaned them with a first mortgage on every acre, as compared with the expenditures under this bill? We have, through great effort, loaned them the price of less than two useless battleships, that cannot add to our benefit in peace times or defend us in war.

As this bill comes before this House it is an extravagant and unnecessary expenditure of public funds, and I reserve the right to vote "no" at the conclusion of this debate.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON].

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, 18 years ago we undertook "a war to end war", 7 years ago we pledged 44 nations to outlaw war as a means of settling international differences, and this year we demonstrate the sincerity of our past professions by voting nearly $1,000,000,000 to prepare the Nation for the next war.

So strong is our present determination to let the world know that we have turned our backs on all pacific intentions that we miss no opportunity to show our contempt for those idealists who still dream of peace. Recently, when the Secretary of War visited Philadelphia to spread preparedness propaganda, two young Quakers were presumptuous enough to engage in some harmless counterpropaganda, and were put in jail as a warning to others who might be disposed to take the Sermon on the Mount and other peace literature too seriously.

Secretary Dern was quoted as having said on that occasion that the United States Army is "microscopic" and comparable with the armies of Turkey and Portugal. We have been told in the course of the present debate that our Navy is inadequate and inferior.

If we are unprepared, in comparison with other nations, whose fault is it? Where does the responsibility lie? Surely not with Congress, for the funds it has appropriated for national defense exceed those provided by any other Government.

In 1930 our expenditures for the Army and Navy aggregated $727,000,000; those of Russia, $579,000,000; those of Great Britain, $535,000,000; those of France, $455,000,000; those of Italy, $258,000,000; and those of Japan, $232,000,000. Our expenditures were more than three times those of our neighbor across the Pacific.

From 1913 to 1930 our expenditures for preparedness trebled, and next year we purpose to spend $200,000,000 more than in 1930 and almost four times as much as during the last year before the beginning of the World War.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania explained that it was necessary for us to spend more for preparedness than other nations because it costs us more to maintain armies and navies on account of the higher wages that we pay. That may be true so far as personnel expense is concerned, but should not be true in the building of armaments, for a nation that can undersell others in automobiles, farm implements, and those things which are built by machinery, should be able to produce guns and ships as cheaply as any other.

If we could assume that expanding our military and naval armaments actually increased our security, there might be some justification for what we are doing, but there is no foundation for such an assumption. Preparedness is relative. If nations were to forego battleships and submarines, airplanes and tanks, machine guns and poison gases, and go back to fighting with sticks, they would be relatively as strong as they are today if they distributed the sticks in proportion to the effectiveness of their present weapons; and if a nation provided each fighting man with 2 sticks instead of 1 it would not thereby improve its position if every other nation likewise gave each man 2 sticks. Last year we passed the Vinson navy bill. Almost immediately Japan countered by announcing an enlarged program, as did Great Britain. After we have built the ships authorized by the Vinson bill we shall probably find our increased strength neutralized by comparable additions to the fleets of other naval powers.

Recent developments in Germany demonstrate the folly of the race of armaments. The Treaty of Versailles, one of the most stupid state papers of all time, decreed the disarming of Germany. Germany's consent to the agreement was won by the promise that other nations would reduce their forces, in anticipation of a day of virtual disarmament throughout the world. Germany's former enemies not only failed to keep their promise, but increased their armies and navies. Chancellor Hitler was on solid ground when he declared that the failure of other signatory nations to keep their promises absolved Germany from keeping hers.

The competition in arms has made the Treaty of Versailles a scrap of paper; it has brought Europe to the brink of another crisis. Instead of preventing war it has again, as always in the past, become provocative of war. The late Allies are now confronted with a dilemma which they might have avoided by keeping their pledge to disarm; they must either acquiesce in Germany's scrapping of the treaty or accept the responsibility of starting another war to enforce it.

Against what enemy are we preparing? Whom do we fear? Is it Japan? There has never been any likelihood of a war with Japan, and there is none now if we will mind our own business and keep our fleet in our own waters.

I know that I speak the thought of millions of American people when I say that I wish the President would reconsider his decision to put on a big Navy show in the Pacific this summer. It can do no good, and it may result in much international ill will. The man who has a chip on his shoulder, or carries a big stick, sometimes gets what he invites. If we want war, the surest way to get it is to make a vulgar display of our strength.

Japan is not looking for trouble. She does not want a war with us. Last January the Japanese foreign minister, in a speech before the Diet, declared, "There exists no question between the two countries which is intrinsically difficult of amicable solution." Japan can have no territorial designs in this hemisphere. Why should she want to take California away from the retired Iowa farmers who own it, when there are lands several thousand miles nearer home that do not need irrigation? Why should the Japanese have designs on Hawaii or the Philippines, which are already crowded, when the Asiatic mainland has millions of square miles of sparsely populated territory capable of yielding all the raw materials they will need for all time to come?

If Japan needs land in Asia and proceeds to take it, how can we consistently object? We got our own Manchukuo from Mexico a little less than 100 years ago! If Japan wants to play the part of "dog in the manger" in the Far East, we can hardly protest without expecting to be asked how a Monroe Doctrine is wicked in the Orient and altruistic in the Occident.

There is not much likelihood that we shall get into trouble in the Far East, or elsewhere, if we will get rid of our Messiah complex and decide to concern ourselves exclusively with our own affairs. It is not our job to police the world. It is not our job to wage "wars for humanity" or wars to "make the world safe for democracy." It is our job to make things so tolerable within our own borders that it will not be necessary to divert the attention of the people from their troubles at home by executing naval maneuvers in the Pacific. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, there are millions of thoughtful people in this country who deplore the readiness of this Congress to increase military and naval appropriations, who deplore the failure of the President to follow the example of his predecessors in urging the nations to abandon this wild race of death, who deplore the diversion of hundreds of millions of dollars voted for relief to the building of implements of war.

They deplore this diversion not only because it presents a provocative challenge to other nations but because it constitutes a base surrender to the Executive of powers which, in the development of Anglo-Saxon liberty, the law-making and tax-levying branch of the Government captured only after a prolonged and bitter struggle.

The institutions we have, the checks and balances we have established, represent the gains of a hard-fought contest extending over a thousand years. Zealously our fathers guarded the prerogative they had exacted from reluctant kings. The power to levy taxes and to appropriate money for armies and ships was the lever by which the people lifted, first one stone and then another, into the structure of free government. By acquiescing when the Executive diverts relief funds into his war chest, we have reversed the process by which democracy came into being.

You, sincere Democrats, who came to this House with such high hopes and buoyant enthusiasm 2 years ago, must have experienced a great disillusionment. Every effort to bring the nations together for the accomplishment of the disarmament promised at Versailles abandoned; appropriations for preparation for war lifted above all peace-time records; abject surrender to the President of the exclusive power of Congress to determine military and naval budgets; young men put in jail for advocating peace; an apparent willingness to join the jingoes and patrioteers of every nation in the mad rush into the next war—the war to destroy civilization—that is a record to make men and angels weep. [Applause.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, several weeks ago I sat on the floor of this House and received a verbal spanking for consorting with Members on the minority side and the various other parties in a discussion of proposed legislation and things in which we are interested. I was told at the time that the thing for me to do as a good Democrat was to follow the leadership of the Democratic Party. I more or less made up my mind that perhaps I should do that as long as the Democratic Party continued to do the things I thought they should.

Now, I am a little bit upset after what I heard on the floor today. It is my opinion, or at least my understanding, that the administration is in favor of the retention or extension of the N. R. A. But I heard it attacked by a Member from this side. From the applause that came as the result of the remark that was made I believe the Republican Party, or those who are here, at least, are opposed to that extension. It was the chairman of my own committee who said he is not in favor of the retention of the N. R. A. I grant him the right to stand by his own convictions. I think he should. Is it possible, then, that I too every once in a while may get away from the leadership under which I am serving? I think so, and I think I can come back again to my political creed, namely, to stand with anybody that stands right; to stand with them while they are right, and to part with them when they go wrong.

Mr. Chairman, I am not entirely sure about this naval bill. I know that in general our naval policy and program have been provided for by past legislation, and I know also that to carry this particular program into effect it is going to be necessary to appropriate this money. I have heard enough of the hearings of the Naval Affairs Committee to know that is true. At the same time, $450,000,000 sounds like an awful lot of money to me. It did, at least, until I heard the gentleman from Illinois refer to billions and hundreds of billions.

Perhaps I may be talking about piker sums. But I wonder what could be done with $450,000,000. What could our public school system do with this much money?

Is it possible that the Federal Government could come to the aid of the public schools, so that Dr. Studebaker's prediction that 3,500,000 school children will be denied educational training after this month shall not become a reality? Approximately one teacher in every three is now paid less than $750 per year. Nearly 40 percent received less than $1,000 and over 15 percent received less than $700 in 1926, when the same average salary level existed as at present. Nearly one-fifth are in the ranks of the unemployed. Thousands are unable to take post-graduate work and other special training necessary to meet average growing educational demands. How many teachers are there whose salaries have been unpaid for many months? How many have completely exhausted such small savings as they have been able to make? How many have only part-time employment? How many are unable to meet the cost of needed medical care and are forced to maintain high standards of continuous service under severe physical hardships? To what extent could we remedy these conditions with $450,000,000? We have an insufficient number of school buildings. Thousands are poorly equipped, understaffed, or overcrowded. Many are antiquated, insanitary, or unsafe. Many children are handicapped or deprived of schooling through inability to buy required textbooks. Schools are closing. Many others will have to close. Last fall only two States in the Union opened all their schools, and had not the National Government come to the aid of education it would have been set back a generation. As it is, 22,600 schools closed last term. Five hundred and sixty-three million dollars was cut from education. State budgets reduced varied from 25 to 40 percent; city budgets, 75 percent. My own State of California has been one of the most-favored States, yet this is her record:

School expenditures reduced 27.54 percent. Elementary enrollment has increased 14,200, but elementary teachers have been reduced 1,045. High school increase has been 29,102, while the number of teachers has been reduced 1,209. California is one of the brightest educational spots in the Nation. It is so because of the desperate fight of the friends of education 2 years ago. If it remains so, its friends must be continuously on the alert. But what could not our schools do with a sum comparable at least to $450,000,000? This bill we are discussing is a pretty big bill. It takes in a lot of other things besides money that have not been mentioned as yet. For instance, what effect is this bill going to have on our international relations and on other countries that note how much money we are spending on our Navy? Will not other nations start building, too? Is it a naval race we are in?

And in this connection I want to add my expression of regret to the decision of the administration to stage naval maneuvers in the Northern Pacific.

Here is something else to consider. How much of the money is going to be wasted? We heard from the committee investigating armaments over in the other wing of the Capitol that there is considerable collusion between the different companies in getting this money. How much is going to be wasted? Will we get our money's worth?

Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of the Government spending money, and I will vote for all those measures that call upon the Government to spend money in order to put people to work, but I want the Government to get its money's worth; I want it to get back dollar for dollar what it pays out of the taxpayers' money. Will we get $450,000,000 worth of value out of this appropriation?

I wonder also if we should not give consideration to other remarks made on the floor on the subject of the school system of the country? Is it not time to begin to appropriate some money from the National Treasury to assist the school system in the United States before we appropriate money for armies and navies? I also wonder what effect this is going to have on those people in the United States who are very much opposed to war, as has been evidenced by the fact a lot of students all over the country have been holding antiwar strikes. Perhaps we should take those people into consideration and give some thought to their opinion. They will go to the extent of resorting to violence themselves to insist upon the fact they are opposed to violence. We have had in different colleges and high schools throughout the country in the last few months violence of all kinds and descriptions by these kids who are protesting against what they see or what they think they see as the rapid descent of the United States into the war-scare attitude.

I want to tell you about the antiwar strike in the Los Angeles Junior College. It was just like all the rest of the strikes up to a certain point. The students left their classes and went out on the campus to have a meeting. One of the professors stood in front of the student speaker and blew on a tin whistle. Now, I grant any teacher the right to make a fool of himself, but a full-grown man blowing on a tin whistle, in my opinion, turns the privilege into license. What a spectacle he must have been with his bulging cheeks and reddening face.

I wonder sometimes how school men can expect to get any kind of respect from their students when they pull such asinine tricks as this. But the whistle did not work so the professor called the cops. A plain-clothes man, assertedly an officer, grabbed a night stick and started weilding it right and left. He hit two girls. Both of them were knocked unconscious and had to be carried from the campus. Then a riot started—it should have. Can any man on this floor justify the action of this plug-ugly? How much more sensible it would have been if the authorities had just told the students to go ahead and hold their meeting and when it was over to come back to class. Do you suppose the two girls, when they regained consciousness, were any better patriots as a result of the bumps on their heads?

Now, what will those young people think about spending $450,000,000 for war material in face of their protests when their schools are closed or they have to go to school without sufficient equipment or their teachers tell them day after day, " We have not been paid this month ", or " We have not been paid for the last 3 months." Those young people are citizens. Give their views some consideration.

Mr. Chairman, before we commit ourselves completely, I want to know how much effect the propaganda that was spread in the newspapers had to do with the so-called " Vinson bill " of 2 years ago and with the appropriation bill this year. I remember, although I was not a Member of the House, that during the time the Vinson bill was before Congress a certain publisher every day carried pictures of the horrors of war and above the pictures he said, " The only way to prevent the horrors of war is by preparedness."

Every day this same kind of propaganda appeared in the papers. Then the Vinson bill passed, and then there was no more propaganda. We did not see any more pictures on the horrors of war. You know as well as I do there was only one reason for it, and that was to help put over that big Navy bill. How much does propaganda enter into this bill? As far as I am concerned, I think this is the biggest item for you to turn your attention to with respect to this particular bill. Propaganda is always used to put over something of this nature, and when I speak of propaganda I speak not only of that directed to the subject of naval preparation. This same publisher, and I refer to William Randolph Hearst, and his string of papers over the country, and in my district, has been showing pictures of Russians that have been starving to death all over Russia. At the same time he is carrying in the other columns of his paper the most damnable attack upon the public-school system that we have had to withstand for years.

He is trying to convince the American public that teachers in the public-school system, and in the institutions of higher learning, are indoctrinating their students with what he refers to as subversive propaganda. He is evidently trying to prove that teachers seek to overthrow our Government and establish in its place the Russian system. Hence the pictures of starving Russians. In this connection, I remember well the pictures made on the different movie lots of transients seeking entry into California just prior to the gubernatorial election race last fall.

Hearst is going into the colleges with snoopers; he is sending hired men in there as spies to see if they cannot get some teacher in an unguarded moment to say something that will give the Hearst papers an excuse to attack them for their beliefs. He tries to get them to say that there are some things of the Socialist dogma or the Communist belief that the teacher believes in.

Something like this happened at Syracuse and Columbia. He sent a couple of reporters masquerading as prospective students into these schools. They led different teachers into discussions. Then some chance remark was twisted as only Mr. Hearst can twist it to make it appear that these men were teaching Marxist doctrines. He put this in his papers and sent it to the American people to read. Quite naturally, they immediately said, " What are the teachers doing, teaching our children communism? "

A man by the name of Walgreen up in Chicago evidently read a lot of this stuff. His niece, a student at Chicago, in a breakfast conversation with her uncle, told him some of the things she was learning about our economic order. Mr. Walgreen withdrew his niece from the university and called the president of that school a Communist. Now, Mr. Walgreen, like the professor, has a right to be foolish, but he did not have the right to condemn the whole Universtiy of Chicago as a communistic institution.

What is causing this attack on the schools? I do not know that anybody in a sane moment would refer to Mr. Hearst as an outstanding patriot. I do not believe that he is particularly interested in the people who are going to these schools. My own opinion is that this is part of the propaganda that is being put together to cut down on the amount of money that is to be spent in the form of taxation to build up these schools.

I think he is going into this to prevent the sentiment that has led students, not only high-school but college students and teachers and older people, to protest against warfare. It is almost axiomatic that Mr. Hearst is one of the greatest exponents of the desirability of war. He has put on some wars before. Let me ask you a question. Just exactly what should a teacher in a school teach?—and, remember, the few people who are listening here today will not find any more patriotic people in the world than the public-school teachers and the college teachers. They have given considerable study to the economic difficulties that we are in, and are beginning to say that something is wrong with the economic order or the open-market system that makes it necessary that the conditions we are experiencing today should continue to exist.

According to Julien Huxley, one aim of education should be to teach people to discard the unconscious prejudices that their social environments impress upon them. Charles Beard says that teaching ought to be a scholarly, balanced presentation of the facts. Ex-Superintendent Dorsey, of Los Angeles, used to tell teachers:

We must please the business men; otherwise they will not vote to keep our schools going.

Various organizations try to force teachers to indoctrinate children with correct views. They go further and try to suppress as radical or prejudiced any contrary views a teacher may hold. If they are successful, education will become a process of memorizing shibboleths, going through outward forms of patriotism, such as flag salutes and oaths of allegiance, and learning to render blind, unthinking obedience to the behests of a small minority, who have taken upon themselves an un-American censorship of the speech and ideas of all of their fellow citizens.

Teachers are too likely to accept the best families' condescension, the business man's contempt, and the community's "he's only a teacher" attitude as valid appraisals of themselves. Teachers, like other human beings, are extremely sensitive to community opinion. They want the community's respect and good will. Often they compromise with their own best instincts and their intelligence in order to win the good opinion of men whose good opinion they know has no value. Before the schools can assume leadership the teachers in them must be freed from control by the ideology, the prejudices, the conventionalities of the community he is now urged to lead.

The creation of a better social order requires critical analysis, great faith, intense labor, and trained intelligence. Our schools are indispensable in the cultivation of these qualities. The creation of such an order also involves change. This would necessarily disturb powerful elements which benefit from the old order. It is these elements that control the schools, and they have always opposed change. They seek to use the schools to "develop character", to instill "respect for law and order", to make "good citizens", and to teach "patriotism", but, when analyzed, these terms all mean to the interested groups unquestioning acceptance of things as they are. Men who control the schools object to teachers who stimulate thought and create critical attitudes. Teachers may express views on questions that do not matter, but on anything that does affect vital interests the schools must be "neutral", which means that they may and inevitably do support present conditions but must not criticize or try to improve them.

One superintendent who prides himself on the freedom in his schools recently protested vigorously against freedom for teachers to use the classroom to impose their biases and prejudices upon children. He fails to realize that his own views and the views of his teachers, whose ideas he regards as safe, are merely, in turn, their biases and prejudices. Who, after all, is not prejudiced by his background and experience? Yet history has often proved that it was the prejudice of an extremist and not the orthodoxy of the multitude that posterity regarded as truth. The only freedom that matters is the freedom that allows others to express views you know are dangerous or untrue. The very essence of freedom is belief in the power of truth, if left free, to overcome error. This makes wrong views harmless—yes, even serviceable—in determining and strengthening right views. Children trained under teachers who are not free will not suddenly attain freedom themselves by graduation into adulthood. Only children subjected from early childhood to the conflicts and buffetings of the perpetual conflict of truth and error will ever live free lives. The dangers inherent in lack of freedom for the teacher are infinitely worse for the child than the most dangerous ideas a free teacher may express to him.

Hypocrisy is called "proper professional conduct." If one instills unconventional views into children, that is "indoctrination." If one indoctrinates children, as most teachers do most of the time, with conventional attitudes, it is called "teaching." Educators do not even know what they mean by "education"—whether it means indoctrination with community prejudices, indoctrination with what left-wing educators want children to believe, drilling children in textbook learning, or finally creating a new generation themselves capable of intellectual integrity and independent thinking.

More and more teachers today are throwing off their fears and saying, "We must teach these children how to live in the environment in which they will find themselves."

When they talk that way Mr. Hearst says that they, the teachers, are Communists, that they are threatening the overthrow of the Government. I have had 10 years experience as a high-school teacher. I resigned my job as a high-school teacher to come here, I have dealt with young people and being pretty close to their own age, they talk rather openly to me. I have stood in front of graduating classes year after year, and after listening an entire semester to what I had to say they asked me, "Now, we are graduating, what are we going to do? Is there going to be a job for us? Is this a land of equal opportunity under our economic system?" What could I tell them? They had seen their parents out of work for 2 or 3, or 4 or 5 years. Do you think they would pay any attention to me if I said to them, "Yes, under our open-market system all you have to do is to graduate from school, apply for a job and you will have one." They had seen their parents out of work. They had seen other boys graduate from school and they knew they did not get anything to do. Do you think they would listen to those time-worn platitudes about equal opportunity. I told these children that there was not a place for them, that they were a surplus generation, that the country did not need them because it had too many unemployed. Do you think I was trying to wreck the Government or that I was a Communist or a Socialist or something of that kind? And yet that is what Mr. Hearst calls communism.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not have very much time and I would rather not yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think the gentleman is going rather far in saying that because he did that the Hearst papers would class him as a Communist. Is it not a fact that we found a number of teachers in our schools were teaching the philosophy of Karl Marx and the philosophy of Hitler and the philosophy of nazi-ism?

Mr. SCOTT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Then why do you not give him some credit for doing some real American work? I do not agree with everything that is charged, but I say that he is an outstanding American and that he has rendered some service to the country by exposing some of the people connected with our school system.

Mr. SCOTT. But why indict the whole public-school system and all the universities and bring all of that criticism on the schools by putting this stuff in the papers? You see it every day. I grant you there are some who are overenthusiastic and go to extreme lengths, but that is not the way to get at this particular problem—to attack the whole school system.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. As a school teacher with all your experience, does the gentleman believe it would hurt our children if somebody did mention Karl Marx in the classroom? They would not get measles from it.

Mr. SCOTT. Not at all.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does not the gentleman from California think that the attempt to abridge the right of freedom of speech and assemblage is laying the foundation for a dictatorship in this country?

Mr. SCOTT. Absolutely. We have a bill offered here in Congress to force the school teachers to take an oath to support and defend the Constitution of the United States. Why pick out the school teachers to make them do that? I do not believe I know a single teacher in this country that would not gladly take the oath to support the Constitution. I did it when I started to teach school. They have a law like that in California.

But why pick out the school teachers? It is the same thing as walking up to a man and saying, "Are you a gentleman?" If he says, "I do not think I am obliged to answer that question", must we then tell him that he cannot teach in the public schools of this country unless he says, "I am a gentleman"?

Teachers are willing to support the Constitution, but why pick them out as a group? It is a condemnation of the entire teaching profession. If Congress makes them take an oath to support the Constitution at this particular time, it is a condemnation of the entire profession. You blacken the school-teaching profession by even offering a bill of that kind in this House.

Before I finish let me serve notice that in the near future I expect to again take the floor to tell more of the Fascist activities of the man whom several hundred college students, by resolution, condemned as public enemy no. 1, and the students of Michigan hanged in effigy, and about whom Dr. Charles Beard said:

In the course of the past 50 years I have talked with Presidents of the United States, Senators, Justices of the Supreme Court, Members of the House of Representatives, Governors, mayors, bankers, editors, college presidents (including that great scholar and thinker, Charles W. Eliot), leading men of science, Nobel prize winners in science and letters, and I have never found one single person who for talents and character commands the respect of the American people, who has not agreed with me that William Randolph Hearst has pandered to depraved tastes and has been an enemy of everything that is noblest and best in our American tradition. Alfred Smith—a true friend of public education—added to his many deserved laurels when before a cheering multitude in New York City he defied Mr. Hearst. The answer of the people of New York was final and conclusive.

There is not a cesspool of vice and crime which Hearst has not raked and exploited for money-making purposes. No person with intellectual honesty or moral integrity will touch him with a 10-foot pole for any purpose or to gain any end. Unless those who represent American scholarship, science, and the right of a free people to discuss public questions freely stand together against his insidious influences, he will assassinate them individually by every method known to yellow journalism—only cowards can be intimidated by Hearst.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF].

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I want to voice my protest against this appropriation, because I recollect that when we had the Army appropriation bill up we tried to get a roll call on it, and we could not get sufficient Members to rise and ask for a roll call.

I am apprehensive lest the same thing may occur when it comes time to vote on this bill. I want my people to know where I stand on it. Inasmuch as I am afraid that we cannot get a roll call, I am taking this opportunity to let them know that I am against it.

The reason why I am against this bill is threefold. First, because of our national financial situation. Second, because we want more money for the public schools, and I agree with my colleague, Mr. SCOTT, of California, fully in that respect.

Third, because I feel that the amount we have appropriated for old-age pensions, dependent children, and for crippled children is insufficient and inadequate, and we ought to have some of this money appropriated here in order to meet more appropriations for social security.

What is the situation in regard to the present national financial affairs? Taking the report of the committee, we have four items: The War Department appropriation bill, which has already been signed, carries $402,000,000, and $135,000,000 more from the Public Works bill; $38,098,000 for the Navy Public Works bill; $488,000,000 for the Navy appropriation, making a total of $1,063,098,000 to date. If this were all, it would be bad enough, but this is not all.

There will be more coming after this has been disposed of and the result will be that before we get through there will probably be a couple of hundred million dollars more. It will mean a total of somewhere between $1,250,000,000 and $1,300,000,000, and that in the face of the chairman's statement made yesterday, appearing on page 6231 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

The total indebtedness at the close of the fiscal year 1936, the Budget has estimated, will be $44,239,000,000.

Why, the interest rate on that alone will amount to a billion dollars a year, and in face of that we are here considering the passage of a bill which almost doubles the appropriation of last year. We are told by the same gentleman in his statement, and it was a thorough and exhaustive statement, that in order to get our appropriation up to the full treaty strength of the Navy it will cost $550,000,000 a year, and that is our objective. He also said on page 6231 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and this amazed me:

Not a single penny of the increase may be said to be influenced by any thought of the imminence of war.

Who is it, then, that we are preparing against? Is it against this crew that the annointed and self-appointed defender of the faith, William Randolph Hearst, is preaching about every day to the millions of his circulation? Who is there in this House who has enough faith and confidence in Hearst to take him as a guide, in patriotism, Americanism, or anything else? I for one would no more think of following Hearst's lead in that respect, or any other respect, than I would that of Mussolini, Hitler, or Stalin over in Russia. They are all in the same class; they all belong to the same group. All that Hearst is trying to do is to raise enough dust so as to be ready to become the Fascist leader when fascism comes, if he can possibly bring it about.

But my argument is not to talk about Hearst. I would need an hour or two, if I were going into that subject, to tell all that could be told about him. My object is more particularly to refer to the social-security bill, in which I feel we should have several hundreds of millions of dollars, and I think that we should get those several hundreds of millions of dollars by taking them out of the appropriations for the Army and the Navy. We are giving them entirely too much. My thought is to take away two or three hundred million dollars from those appropriations and raise the benefit for old age from $15 a month to $50 a month. But the aged are not all we must safeguard. In addition to them, we have 9,000,000 children for whom something ought to be done, and for whom we have done next to nothing. I feel that it is entirely unjustifiable to spend such vast appropriations as these and be so niggardly in our social-security program.

In addition to that, I again call the attention of the Members of the House to our public-school situation. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] introduced a bill—and that bill was introduced some months ago—appropriating $30,000,000 for the public schools so that they might open this last term of the school year. That bill has not come out of committee, and I venture the assertion that it does not come out this year. Why do we need $30,000,000 for the schools? Because one-eighth of the school children of this country are now deprived of an opportunity to attend school; because the schools have been closed for lack of funds.

Yet in the face of that situation involving only $30,000,000, the price of one cruiser, we are allowing one-eighth of our school population to go without schools. Teachers are getting $24 a month salary, on which they are supposed to support themselves as respectable citizens of their community and hold up their heads even though some of them have had to go on relief. One hundred million dollars in back salaries are owed to the school teachers of this country. What are we doing for them? All we are doing for them is demanding of them that they take an oath of allegiance, because Hearst says they should. Why not make the lawyers take an oath of allegiance, why not the doctors and the dentists, why not ministers, priests and rabbis, why not newspaper publishers, why not everybody else just as much as the school teachers? I see no reason why we should not. Why not fingerprint them at the same time? Then we would have a good opportunity to run them all down if there were any aliens that "snuck" into the country while we were not looking. Some Members forget that our parents were aliens, and they have become excellent citizens. The thing that appeals to me in all this discussion is this: I have not much use for the witch burners who throw up their hands in holy horror about communism—superpatriots, who place the stamp of approval upon themselves and condemn everybody else. My advice to those gentlemen is to spend less time shouting "communism" and more time seeking out and removing the causes of communism.

I prophesy that when the Democratic relief money goes to work and these poor, homeless, unclothed, unfed unfortunates get jobs three-fourths of them will become Democrats at the next election, stop men like Morgan from making hundreds of millions at home while they support an alien government abroad and evade their just share of the tax burden of the United States; stop war profiteers from making vast fortunes coined from the ebbing blood of our boys, gasping their last breath on the battlefield. Stop these glaring inequalities and communism would wither and die. Continue them and no man can foretell the consequences. Out in my country we do not know what a Communist is and we care less. We have no interest in communism. We do not need it at all. If you talk to a farmer out in the Mississippi Valley about communism he would laugh at you. Why? Because he has never had any contact with it; because he has more pressing problems; because he is interested in getting the cost of production for what he raises; because he has his family to provide for; because he has taxes to pay and the interest on his mortgage to meet. Because he faces the realities of life, stern and stark realities, and not nonessentials which do not concern him in the least. [Applause.]

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARY. I yield myself 1 minute to answer the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Under the increase in the Navy, will alternate ships in this increase apply in navy yards and in private yards?

Mr. CARY. Yes. You will find that in the hearings that matter was brought out fully and that that division will be lived up to.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is that in Admiral Land's testimony?

Mr. CARY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCORMACK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 7672, the Navy Department appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

AMERICAN RETAIL FEDERATION

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, there have appeared in the public press in the last few days drastic statements with reference to the organization of a superlobby, the largest lobby that this country has ever known, to bring pressure to bear upon Congress and its Members.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution—House Resolution 203—which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

House Resolution 203

Whereas the Associated Press on April 16, 1935, and the New York Times of April 17, 1935, reported that a superlobby to be known as the "American Retail Federation" was recently formed to promote the business of chain stores throughout the United States and to influence the actions of Members of Congress with reference to legislation affecting chain stores and their holding companies; and

Whereas one Louis E. Kirstien, of Filene's Department Store, in Boston, Mass., one Clarence O. Sherrill, who was a high-salaried vice president of the Kroger Grocery & Baking Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio, and one Harold R. Young, chief Washington representative for the National Retail Dry Goods Association, are purported to be the organizers thereof, with the understanding that said Clarence O. Sherrill will be the president and active head of said superlobby, with direct responsibility for conducting its propaganda and lobbying activities in the city of Washington, D. C., before the United States Congress and the committees thereof; and

Whereas it is stated in the public press that the executive committee of this superlobby, which has been named the "American Retail Federation" is to be composed of officers and directors of the principal gigantic retailing establishments of the Nation, dealing primarily in the fundamental necessities of everyday life, as follows: Louis E. Kirstien, representing E. A. Filene & Co., of Boston, Mass.; Lessing J. Rosenwald, chairman of the board of Sears, Roebuck & Co.; Fred Lazarus, Jr., of F. & R. Lazarus & Co., of Columbus, Ohio; Percy S. Straus, representing R. H. Macy & Co., of New York City; C. W. Kress, of S. H. Kress & Co., of New York City; Albert H. Morrill, president of the Kroger Grocery & Baking Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio; George M. Gales, president of the Louis K. Liggett Co., of New York City; John A. Hartford, president of the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., of New York City; and

Whereas it is apparent that said American Retail Federation is organized for the purpose of increasing the profits of big business through lobbying tactics, designed to prevent small businesses from securing competitive opportunities, equal to those enjoyed by corporations representing vast aggregations of capital; and

Whereas it is apparent that the achievement of any or all of the purposes of said American Retail Federation will react to the detriment of the farmer, the wage earner, and the consumer on the one hand, and will serve to injure the employers of labor and the laboring man on the other hand; and

Whereas the said superlobby has already opened palatial headquarters in the city of Washington, D. C., and has attempted, and is now attempting, to force and coerce thousands of small retail merchants, dealing in the necessities of life, into the ranks of this superlobby, so that it may thereafter hold out to Members of Congress and to others in the Government that it represents a completely centralized and authentic voice for all retailers of the Nation; and

Whereas the following national associations of retailers, whose executive committees and boards of directors are in almost every case controlled by representatives of large corporations, are already listed in the public press as having already offered or pledged their support to the superlobby plans of the American Retail Federation, to wit: The National Association of Retail Clothiers; National Retail Dry Goods Association; National Association of Retail Grocers; National Retail Furniture Association; National Retail Hardware Association; American National Retail Jewelers Association; National Association of Retail Druggists; National Shoe Retailers Association; Limited Price Variety Stores Association, Inc.; Mail Order Association of America, Inc.; National Council of Shoe Retailers; National Retail Association of Music Merchants; Food and Grocery Chain Stores of America, Inc. An invitation will be extended this week to the International Grocers Alliance of Chicago, a cooperative organization of grocers; and

Whereas the gigantic sum of $750,000 has already been pledged or contributed to this superlobby by the greatest aggregation of rich and powerful department stores and chain stores of America ever brought together for the purpose of directly or indirectly nullifying the effects of the N. R. A., the A. A. A., the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, and other antitrust laws now on the statute books of this Nation, and by propaganda and other methods inimical to the public welfare to attempt to control and influence the Congress of the United States in its legislative deliberations; and

Whereas it is further reported that this superlobby, the American Retail Federation, is now proceeding upon a plan designed to force the small independent retail merchants of America, engaged in the sale of the necessities of everyday life, to contribute an additional $2,000,000 annually to the funds available to this organization in its lobbying activities, and for the further purpose of permitting it to disseminate propaganda among the consumers and producers of the United States; and

Whereas it is inimical to the welfare of the citizens of the United States to permit the organization and functioning of such a superlobby, designed for the purpose of intimidating and influencing Members of Congress through direct and subversive lobbying activities, as well as through coercing hundreds of thousands of underpaid employees throughout the Nation to flood the respective Members of the United States Congress with letters, petitions, and propaganda designed to improperly and untruthfully represent the public sentiment of the respective constituencies of said Members of the Congress: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That a special committee of seven, to be named by the Speaker, be created and hereby is authorized and directed to investigate the aforesaid American Retail Federation, its capitalization, its membership, its objectives, the sources of its funds, its financial connections, and its officers and agents, and to investigate the record of stock dividends, officers' salaries, profits, interlocking directorates and banking affiliations of all corporations directly affiliated with, or contributing to, the said American Retail Federation; and be it further

Resolved, For the purpose of this resolution the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places in the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books and documents, to administer such oaths, and take such testimony as it deems necessary and advisable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WARREN. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if this carries any appropriation?

Mr. COCHRAN. It does not.

Mr. WARREN. How much are you going to spend?

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not know anything about who the Speaker will appoint or what they will want, but I think the investigation should be concluded in 2 weeks.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, the gentleman from Missouri is a member of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. COCHRAN. I can assure the gentleman it will take very little money, if any.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, I know nothing about the matter except what I have just heard.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, it is my understanding that the Chairman of the Committee on Accounts has made the statement heretofore that at no time has any legislation come about from one of those investigating committees. Is that true?

Mr. WARREN. I would not say at no time, but I say that in my opinion 95 percent of these investigations are absolutely worthless and nothing has been accomplished by them.

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman from Missouri kindly tell us what this outfit is and something about it, because I never heard of it?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes. It is composed of mail-order houses and chain stores of the United States. They have selected Colonel Sherrill to head their superlobby in Washington. They are going to try to coerce and bring into their organization all national retail organizations. It has been published in the New York Times and all over the country. The claim is made that they have $750,000 already to start on. I will say to the gentleman this is simply to get some information as to this matter. We should be able to complete it in 2 or 3 weeks, with hardly any cost to the Congress at all. It might stop a repetition of what we have just gone through with in connection with the utility-holding bill. This superlobby announces that its purpose is to bring pressure to bear upon Congress and its committees in connection with pending legislation.

Mr. TABER. It is some super N. R. A., organized by these chain stores, is it?

Mr. COCHRAN. Well, the gentleman knows what the chain stores and the mail-order houses do to the individual merchant. They are not getting into this business for their health. I think it is the duty of this House to find out what they intend to do and let the people of the country know about it.

Mr. TABER. Has this resolution been to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. COCHRAN. It has not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I think I shall object. I do not know anything about it, and it ought to go to a committee.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN MUNICIPAL BUILDINGS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2035) to amend an act approved June 25, 1934, authorizing loans from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mrs. NORTON, Mr. ELLENBOGEN, and Mr. DIRKSEN.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, this morning we arranged for 8 hours of general debate on the Navy Department appropriation bill, which has been under consideration throughout the day. There are so many requests for time on both sides that we shall need a little more time.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the time for general debate be extended 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD] and myself.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee if during that hour some member of the committee will tell us against what nation we are preparing by the expenditure of this $457,000,000?

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

WASHINGTON—THE FARMER

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD an article entitled "Washington—the Farmer", by Maurice J. Connor, of Omaha, Nebr.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

[From the Midwest Wool Growers News of Mar. 11, 1935]

WASHINGTON, THE FARMER—THE FATHER OF OUR COUNTRY WAS ONE OF THE MOST SUCCESSFUL AGRICULTURISTS OF HIS TIME, A MAN KEENLY INTERESTED IN HIS GREAT ESTATE AND SHEEP—HE LAID DOWN A TRAIL ALL SHOULD FOLLOW

By Maurice J. Connor, attorney at law, Omaha

If ever farmers, wool growers, livestock breeders, gardeners, arbor culturists, agricultural economists, and all other soil-loving people of America decide to set aside 1 day of the year in grateful tribute and solemn observance to that most essential and indispensable of all human occupations, agriculture, that day should be the 22d of February.

Because it was on that day in 1732, at the little town of Wakefield, Westmoreland County, Va., a merciful Providence gave to a handful of long-suffering, long-abused royal colonies George Washington, a farmer, who hazarded all that he had, and all that he hoped for in this life, that those sovereign-ridden colonies might be free and mold themselves into a Union, which, within 161 years, has bloomed and blossomed into, if not the greatest, one of the greatest and wealthiest nations of ancient and modern times, demonstrating the Athenian and Roman classical theory that an organized society, when popularly, faithfully, and vigilantly administered, is the most successful and lasting form of government on this earth.

A GRATEFUL PEOPLE

In his day a loving and thankful people elected George Washington their first President, then reelected him, and down through all the years between the millions who have, and the millions who now are, enjoying the fruits of his relentless labors and sacrifices, in perpetuation of that early devotion, unanimously proclaim him "Father of His Country."

But all this glorious renown of hallowed memory in the life of Washington concerns his fame and accomplishments as a warrior and a statesman. Had George Washington not been drawn into the vortex of the American Revolution, if we are to judge from his immense holdings, 70,000 acres in Virginia (exclusive of the 40,000-acre congressional reward for military services), and the capital he possessed with which to finance his operations, and if we are to judge from a careful perusal of an exhaustive, priceless legacy which he has bequeathed to posterity in the form of books of accounts, notes, correspondence, documentary evidences, he nevertheless would have a just claim to the distinction of first patron of husbandry in colonial times.

When Washington was 27 years old, in 1758, he took his newly married, devoted Martha to his estate on the Potomac and settled down to the occupation of a farmer; from that date until 1775, 17 years, he was exclusively engaged in the most improved forms and methods of agriculture of the day. He was a book collector, had an extensive library, and kept an enthusiastic communication with such men as Arthur Young and Sir John Anderson, the two most noted writers and authorities on rural life and improved farm practices at that time in Europe.

HEART ALWAYS AT HIS FARM

During the 24 years that followed, from 1775 to 1799, 8 were spent on the battle line, 8 in the Presidency, and 8 were also devoted to his all-absorbing operations, studies, and experiments in the field of agriculture. Washington's love and interest, in home- and farm-life values never diminished during his campaigns. We find him in the springtime sending orders to his manager, Anderson, in letters penned while in sight of the enemy, how and when to break ground and to prepare seed bed, what seed best suited to certain characters of soil, especially clovers and sanfoin that should follow every 2 crops of corn, wheat, and barley to replenish fertility; timothy and clover that must be sown on meadows and ditches and to avoid overgrazing of pastures.

In autumn, when and how to harvest and store crops. In winter, how to feed and care for livestock, to repair buildings and equipments. In another, he advised how to handle and improve the quality of his herds and flock. One letter to Lund Washington directing additions to be made, and hurried, at Mount Vernon. Another letter to him on planting shade trees and shrubbery about the premises.

But, returning to the years of actual activities at Mount Vernon, Washington was neither cad nor snob. He was delighted when called "Farmer Washington." He longed to be considered the best farmer in America, and even while President classed himself as a planter. At 40 years he was 6 feet 2 inches in height, weighed 210 pounds, sandy haired, blue eyes, large hands and feet, and rarely ill.

He was a shrewd trader as well as a big farmer. He ran a distillery, a grist mill, and even a ferry. He sold flour, feed, and liquor. He divided his plantation into five farms, each with a name, placed an overseer in charge of each, and exacted a thorough accounting from them. He practiced the strictest economy. He had more than 300 slaves. He raised enormous crops and fed and clothed everyone on his place. He liked horse racing, he raised excellent horses, he raced them, and loved to ride them. He liked company, played cards, held house parties, rode far and near to dances in the neighborhood. He was a lavish entertainer. His home was the Mecca for famous visitors from other colonies and foreign countries. La Fayette, during his second tour, made a long visit with Washington. He had one of the finest herds of black cattle in the country.

PROUD OF HIS SHEEP

But there was one branch of livestock of which Washington was especially fond and proud, and that was his sheep. He was the leading breeder and flockmaster in Virginia, and preached the gospel of sheep husbandry everywhere. According to his voluminous letters and notes, Washington maintained that sheep were by far the most profitable of all farm animals, yielding on the scantiest fare three most valuable crops every year—lamb, wool, and the richest of fertilizers.

He also contended that every sheep bore several grades of wool and as such that all fleeces should be graded and marketed accordingly, for two reasons, so that the farmer might obtain the most for the care and quality of wool, and also that our own manufacturers might successfully compete with the fine woolens and broadcloths of Europe. At his first inauguration he was the proudest man in the assemblage when he wore his woolen suit grown by an American sheep, sheared by an American farmer, and made by an American manufacturer, Hon. Jeremiah Wadsworth, of Hartford, Conn.

Washington's flock numbered 800 to 1,000. He spared no pains or money to procure the finest ewes in the Colonies and abroad; he was very partial to Bakewell and Persian rams. He labored long and successfully to produce a dual-purpose creature, one that would grow the heaviest fleece with longest staple, on the smoothest and largest frame possible, and it was his flock which in later years formed the foundation stock of one of the most noted breeds in the country, the Arlington sheep.

LOOK BACK 160 YEARS

My fellow countrymen, during these trying times, don't be too impatient. Just stop and consider these few high lights in the life of an American farmer which history claims for her own. In 8 years with the aid of his poorly maintained, loyal, home-loving neighbors, and foreign friends he wore down, whipped, and drove into the sea one of the best equipped, best trained armies of Europe. In 8 more years, by the magnetic power of his sublime character, he drew the scattered American Colonies around him and welded them into a confederation, on a foundation so enduring, that today it sustains a world power.

And then, obeying the still small voice of that one love nearest his heart, he noiselessly, sweetly, and beautifully returned to his home, his fields, and his flocks. His estate was valued at over $5,000,000, an immense fortune for his day, which will "page him" through the files of time as a genius in business.

He had only two enemies, the tyrant and the scandalmonger, because he left nothing for them to prey upon. His earthly glories were concluded December 14, 1799—those of his faithful Martha 3 years later, on their farm at Mount Vernon, Va., where both still live!

Truly, it can always be said, What a soldier! What a founder! What a farmer! Yes, what a man was our beloved Washington!

AMERICAN RETAIL FEDERATION

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York has withdrawn his objection to the consideration of House Resolution 203, which I brought up a few moments ago.

Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for the present consideration of House Resolution 203, authorizing an investigation with respect to the American Retail Federation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? It has already been reported.

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

(Mr. MARCANTONIO asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

HOUR OF MEETING

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

SILVER JUBILEE OF THE KING OF GREAT BRITAIN

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 23, 1935.

The Honorable JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I am sending you herewith copy of a letter which I have received from His Excellency the Ambassador of Great Britain stating that a celebration of the King's Silver Jubilee will be held at the National Cathedral on Monday morning, May 6, at 11 o'clock, and requesting the good offices of the Department of State in notifying different branches of the Government that, so far as seats are available, American officials will be welcomed. It may be noted in this connection that the tickets are not limited strictly to the officials of the House of Representatives and their wives, but may also be used by relatives and friends, generally keeping in mind the number of tickets allotted to the House of Representatives.

If you will be so good as to have Mr. A. F. H. Wiggin, First Secretary of the British Embassy, informed not later than Monday, April 29, as to the total number of seats desired, they will be sent to you for such distribution as you may desire.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. FERNANDEZ for 10 days on account of serious illness in family.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 7054. An act to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1209. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to relinquish an easement for a water main at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii; and

S. 1610. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States a certain strip of land from the State of South Carolina.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7054. An act to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, April 25, 1935, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

311. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the legislative establishment, United States Senate, for the fiscal year 1936, in the sum of $2,500 (H. Doc. No. 165); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

312. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting draft of a proposed bill to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

THURSDAY, APRIL 25, 1935

(Legislative day of Monday, Apr. 15, 1935)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, April 24, 1935, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2035) to amend an act approved June 25, 1934, authorizing loans from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mrs. NORTON, Mr. ELLENBOGEN, and Mr. DIRKSEN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 254) providing for an investigation by the United States Public Health Service of the plumbing and sanitary systems in Federal Government buildings, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 1209. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to relinquish an easement for a water main at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii; and

S. 1610. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States a certain strip of land from the State of South Carolina.

SERVICE IN CELEBRATION OF KING GEORGE'S SILVER JUBILEE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of State, relative to a service to be held at the National Cathedral in Washington, D. C., on the morning of Monday, May 6, in celebration of the Silver Jubilee of King George V of Great Britain, which, with the accompanying copy of letter from His Excellency the Honorable Sir Ronald C. Lindsay, Ambassador of Great Britain, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 23, 1935.

The VICE PRESIDENT,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: I am sending to you herewith copy of a letter which I have received from His Excellency the Ambassador of Great Britain stating that a celebration of the King's Silver Jubilee will be held at the National Cathedral on Monday morning, May 6, at 11 o'clock, and requesting the good offices of the Department of State in notifying different branches of the Government that so far as seats are available American officials will be welcomed. It may be noted in this connection that the tickets are not limited strictly to the officials of the Senate and their wives but may also be used by relatives and friends, generally keeping in mind the number of tickets allotted to the Senate.

If you will be so good as to have Mr. A. F. H. Wiggin, First Secretary of the British Embassy, informed not later than Monday, April 29, as to the total number of seats desired, they will be sent to you for such distribution as you may desire.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

BRITISH EMBASSY,
Washington, April 17, 1935.

The Honorable CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: Bishop Freeman has most generously invited me to use the National Cathedral for a service which we are holding on the morning of Monday, May 6, in celebration of the King's Silver Jubilee—an offer which I have gratefully accepted.

This service, which will start at 11 a. m. and last approximately 35 minutes, will be official only insofar as British subjects are concerned. No formal invitations will be issued. Uniform will be worn by British subjects only.

I need not say, however, that any Americans who might care to come of their own accord privately and unofficially would be very welcome, and that we should feel highly honored by their presence.

I fully appreciate the fact that a large proportion of the official world will in any case be precluded by their duties from attending an informal celebration of this character at such an hour. Perhaps, however, in such cases wives, relatives, or immediate friends, in some instances, might care to come, within the limits of the seating available.

In order to insure that any who do honor our service with their presence should have suitable seating, it has been suggested to me that we should provisionally reserve the first 17 rows of the right side of the main block of seats in the cathedral for their accommodation. As there are 9 seats in each row, this makes a total of 153 seats in all.

The tentative proposal is that these rows of seats might perhaps be placed at the disposal of the Government services quite impersonally in the following order and proportions:

	Rows	Seats
Supreme Court	2	18
Cabinet and other leaders of the administration	3	27
Senate	3	27
House of Representatives	3	27
State Department	1	9
War, Navy, and other departments	4	36
Government of the District of Columbia	1	9

It would be of the greatest assistance if your Division of Protocol would be so good as to help us in bringing this suggestion quite unofficially to the attention of these departments.

I would suggest, finally, that to save trouble the tickets required should be sent direct by the Embassy to the various departments concerned for distribution on an intimation from the competent official in each department. Such intimations could be addressed by telephone or otherwise to the first secretary of the Embassy. I should be grateful if they could be received here as soon as may be conveniently possible, at the latest by the end of the month.

Believe me, my dear Secretary of State,
Yours sincerely,

R. C. LINDSAY.

MARCH REPORT OF THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, submitting, pursuant to law, a report of the activities and expenditures of the corporation for March 1935, together with a statement of authorizations made during that month, showing the name, amount, and rate of interest or dividend in each case, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from the Central Council of District Clubs (Federated Civic Clubs of Ramsey County), St. Paul, Minn., praying for the enactment of the so-called "Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage relief bill", which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of several citizens of the States of North Carolina and North Dakota, praying for the enactment of old-age-pension legislation, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALSH presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Selectmen of North Andover, the Turn Verein of Lawrence, and the City Councils of Lowell and Revere, all in the State of Massachusetts, favoring the repeal of the processing tax on cotton manufactures, and the taking of adequate measures for the protection of the textile industry, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented letters in the nature of petitions from Local Union No. 2401, of Charlton City, and Local Union No. 2325, of North Oxford, both of the United Textile Workers of America, in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of the so-called "Wagner labor-disputes bill" and the "Black 30-hour work week bill", which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Retail Drug Trade Authority for the Sixth Congressional District of Massachusetts (Beverly, Mass.), favoring the extension of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and the strengthening of the code of fair competition for the retail drug trade, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Branch No. 182, of Lowell, and Branch No. 340, of Revere, both of the Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund, in the State of Massachusetts, favoring the enactment of the bill (H. R. 2827) to provide for the establishment of unemployment, old-age, and social insurance, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Boston (Mass.) Section of the National Council of Jewish Women, favoring the enactment of economic-security legislation, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from the Marlborough (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, remonstrating against the enactment of sales-tax legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Springfield (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, protesting against the enactment of the so-called "Wheeler-Rayburn public-utility regulation bill", which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Springfield (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, protesting against the enactment of the so-called "Wagner labor-disputes bill", which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from the traffic manager of the American Tissue Mills, of Holyoke, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of pending railroad legislation that would tend to increase freight rates and the cost of commodities, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a letter from the Westfield (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, relative to the bill (S. 1631) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, and for other purposes, and opposing various changes made therein in the existing law, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Washington (D. C.) Federation of Churches, opposing the proposed holding of United States fleet maneuvers in the Pacific Ocean, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from the Fitchburg (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called "Black 30-hour work week bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented resolutions adopted by Aerie No. 941, of Elmira, and Aerie No. 1031, of Mount Vernon, both of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, in the State of New York, favoring the enactment of Senate bill 1130 and House bill 4142, providing Federal monetary assistance to the States paying old-age pensions, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Bronx County (N. Y.) Pharmaceutical Association, favoring the extension of the National Industrial Recovery Act, with particular reference to the unfair-trade and loss-limitation provisions of the Retail Drug Code, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the State of New York, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation threatening to civil liberties, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a telegram from Hon. Louis A. Cuvillier, a member of the New York State Legislature, embodying a concurrent resolution submitted by him in the assembly of that legislature, favoring the prompt enactment of Federal legislation setting up emergency relief boards for home and work relief in every county throughout the Nation, which was ordered to lie on the table.

PREVENTION OF LYNCHING

Mr. WAGNER presented a letter addressed to him by the national secretary of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, enclosing copy of a letter addressed to the President of the United States by the international secretary of that league, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE FOR PEACE AND FREEDOM,
Washington, D. C., April 22, 1935.

DEAR SENATOR: We are attaching a letter written to the President on November 15, 1934, by the international secretary of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, who is an American citizen.

We believe that she has raised one of the most important questions in regard to a Federal antilynching bill, which everyone traveling in Europe becomes aware of only too quickly. We ask your serious consideration of this legislation from an international point of view.

Respectfully yours,

DOROTHY DETZER,
National Secretary.

WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE FOR PEACE AND FREEDOM,
Geneva, November 15, 1934.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,
White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ROOSEVELT: I am writing you not as an American citizen, which I am, but as the international secretary of this organization represented not only in the United States but in most of the important countries.

It is our principle and belief, on which we consistently act, that all questions of humanity are the concern of men and women everywhere and not only in the country immediately in question.

We, therefore, desire to lay before you our deep concern in the whole matter of lynching, as it occurs sporadically in the United States, and in the specially flagrant case reported recently in Marianna, Fla.

The discredit abroad brought upon the whole country by such occurrences must be, and doubtless is, present to the American mind, even if only very imperfectly realized as to its extent and intensity.

But it is not on this ground that we appeal to you, Mr. President, to use your personal influence to insure that every possible means to put an end to lynching is employed to the utmost. It is not for us to present any idea of our own how this should be done.

We do, however, want to point out that, apart even from the question of human suffering, every example of lawlessness and violence in one country reacts in every other, and intensifies existing tendencies to resort to intolerance, cruelty, and tyranny.

The Nazi justifies his persecution of Jews by reference to the American attitude to Negroes; and the abuses in concentration camps and prisons, which shame mankind, are interrelated with excesses in other countries.

Yours very sincerely,

EMILY G. BALCH,
Honorary International Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3896) to provide for the immediate payment to veterans of the face value of their adjusted-service certificates, for controlled expansion of the currency, and to extend the time for filing applications for benefits under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 550) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2616) for the relief of the estate of Joseph Y. Underwood, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 551) thereon.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2644) for the relief of the estate of Harry F. Stern, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 552) thereon.

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6323) to provide for the custody of Federal proclamations, orders, regulations, notices, and other documents, and for the prompt and uniform printing and distribution thereof, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) establishing a commission for the participation of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Colony of Connecticut, authorizing an appropriation to be utilized in connection with such observance, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 553) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 147) authorizing the erection of a monument to Grover Cleveland in Washington, D. C., reported it with an amendment.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 24th instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 93. An act to authorize certain officers of the Navy and Marine Corps to administer oaths;

S. 1208. An act authorizing personnel of the naval service to whom a commemorative or special medal has been awarded to wear in lieu thereof a miniature facsimile of such medal and a ribbon symbolic of the award;

S. 1210. An act authorizing certain officials under the Naval Establishment to administer oaths; and

S. 2197. An act to permit construction, maintenance, and use of certain pipe lines for petroleum and petroleum products in the District of Columbia.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2676) to require contractors with the Government to pay fair wages, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

A bill (S. 2677) to purchase and erect in the city of Washington the group of statuary known as the "Indian Buffalo Hunt"; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. DICKINSON:

A bill (S. 2678) granting a pension to John H. Epperson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McADOO:

A bill (S. 2679) granting a pension to William Henry Kelly; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BARKLEY:

A bill (S. 2680) to authorize an increase in the annual appropriation for books for the adult blind; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. GIBSON:

A bill (S. 2681) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain at or near West Swanton, Vt., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 2682) for the relief of Chief Carpenter William F. Twitchell, United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. THOMAS of Utah:

A bill (S. 2683) to authorize the selection, construction, installation, and modification of permanent stations and depots for the Army Air Corps, and frontier air-defense bases generally (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MURPHY:

A bill (S. 2684) to amend section 4747 of the Revised Statutes to provide for the exemption of certain pensions from taxation; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. OVERTON:

A bill (S. 2865) to authorize a preliminary examination and survey of Bayou Dupre, La.; and

A bill (S. 2686) to authorize a preliminary examination and survey of Grand Bayou Pass, La.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WAGNER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 108) to provide for participation by the United States in the Eighth International Congress of Military Medicine and Pharmacy to be held at Brussels, Belgium, in June 1935; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 254) providing for an investigation by the United States Public Health Service of the plumbing and sanitary systems in Federal Government buildings, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Finance may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1763) to amend the act entitled "An act to adjust the compensation of certain employees in the Customs Service", approved May 29, 1928, as amended by the act of December 12, 1930, and that it be referred to the Committee on Civil Service. So far as I know there has been no adverse report on the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL

Mr. METCALF submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 121), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized during the Seventy-fourth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

NEW YORK STATE UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have received with considerable gratification a telegram from the Governor of my State, which I ask may be read at the desk and printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate:

I know you will be deeply interested in learning that I have just signed the unemployment-insurance bill which was passed by the legislature on my recommendation. I am sure you will be happy that our State has once again taken the lead in progressive social legislation. It is my earnest hope that the benefits of unemployment insurance will soon be made available by Congress to the people of the whole Nation.

(Signed) HERBERT H. LEHMAN.

EXCERPTS FROM LECTURE ON THE FORGOTTEN MAN

Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a few excerpts from Prof. William Graham Sumner's celebrated lecture entitled "The Forgotten Man", which was delivered at Yale in 1883.

What he has to say is so very pertinent and so very clear as bearing on our present political and economic conditions that I believe this material should be given widest possible circulation.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Let us put down now the cold, hard fact and look at it just as it is. There is no device whatever to be invented for securing happiness without industry, economy, and virtue. * * *

Now, who is the "forgotten man"? He is the simple, honest laborer, ready to earn his living by productive work. We pass him by because he is independent, self-supporting, and asks no favors. He does not appeal to the emotions or excite the sentiments. He only wants to make a contract and fulfill it, with respect on both sides and favor on neither side. He must get his living out of the capital of the country. The larger the capital is, the better living he can get. Every particle of capital which is wasted on the vicious, the idle, and the shiftless is so much taken from the capital available to reward the independent and productive laborer. * * * In these last years I have read hundreds of articles and heard scores of sermons and speeches which were really glorifications of the good-for-nothing, as if these were the charge of society, recommended by right reason to its care and protection. We are addressed all the time as if those who are respectable were to blame because some are not so. * * * The silly popular notion is that the beggars live at the expense of the rich, but the truth is that those who eat and produce not live at the expense of those who labor and produce. * * *

I want to call to mind the "forgotten man", because, in this case also, if we recall him and go to look for him, we shall find him patiently and perseveringly, manfully and independently struggling against adverse circumstances without complaining or begging. If, then, we are led to heed the groaning and complaining of others and to take measures for helping these others, we shall, before we know it, push down this man who is trying to help himself. * * *

We all seem to be under the delusion that the rich pay the taxes. Taxes are not thrown upon the consumers with any such directness and completeness as is sometimes assumed; but that, in ordinary states of the market, taxes on houses fall, for the most part, on the tenants, and that taxes on commodities fall, for the most part, on the consumers, is beyond question. * * * Who pays for it? Undoubtedly the people who have not been guilty of folly, vice, or recklessness. Out of nothing comes nothing. We cannot collect taxes from people who produce nothing and save nothing. The people who have something to tax must be those who have produced and saved. * * *

By jobbery I mean the constantly apparent effort to win wealth, not by honest and independent production but by some sort of a scheme for extorting other people's product from them. A large part of our legislation consists in making a job for somebody. Public buildings are jobs—not always, but in most cases. The buildings are not needed at all or are costly far beyond what is useful or even decently luxurious. Internal improvements are jobs. * * * The silver miners, finding that their product is losing value in the market, get the Government to go into the market as a great buyer in the hope of sustaining the price. * * * We are called upon to squander twenty millions on swamps and creeks; from twenty to sixty-six millions on the Mississippi River; one hundred millions in pension—and there is now a demand for another hundred million beyond that. This is the great plan of all living on each other. The pensions in England used to be given to aristocrats who had political power, in order to corrupt them. Here the pensions are given to the great Democratic mass who have the political power, in order to corrupt them. We have 100,000 Federal officeholders, and I do not know how many State and municipal officeholders.

[NOTE.—At the beginning of 1935 the number of regular Federal Government employees was probably more than 1,100,000, while State and local public employees of all sorts were probably in excess of 2,300,000. This makes a total of around 3,500,000 of regular public employees who, with their immediate dependents probably constitute at least ten to twelve million of our population. In addition there were 3,100,000 employed by the Government on "emergency" work of various sorts. This makes a total of around 6,500,000 adults who are now directly on Government pay rolls and who, with their immediate dependents, probably constitute at least 20,000,000 of our population. At the same date there were upward of 3,000,000 more "cases" receiving direct relief from the Government without doing any work. These, with their immediate families, constitute at least 12,000,000 more of our population. Also, most of the farmers in the United States, who, with their families, constitute one-fourth of the population, or upward of 30,000,000, are receiving subsidies or payments from the Government, usually for restricting production. Through these various groups it appears that the Public Treasury is now wholly or in part, and directly or indirectly, taking care of more than 60,000,000 people, or virtually one-half of our entire population.]

Or course, public officers are necessary and it is an economical organization of society to set apart some of its members for civil functions, but if the number of persons drawn from production and supported by the producers while engaged in civil functions is in undue proportion to the total population, there is economic loss. If public offices are treated as spoils or benefices or sinecures, then they are jobs and only constitute part of the pillage. * * *

On every hand you find this jobbery. The Government is to give every man a pension, and every man an office, and every man a tax to raise the price of his product, and to clean out every man's creek for him, and to buy all his unsalable property, and to provide him with plenty of currency to pay his debts, and to educate his children, and to give him the use of a library and a park and a museum and a gallery of pictures. On every side the doors of waste and extravagance stand open; and spend, squander, plunder, and grab are the watchwords. We grumble some about it and talk about the greed of corporations and the power of capital and the wickedness of stock gambling. Yet we elect the legislators who do all this work. Of course, we should never think of blaming ourselves for electing men to represent and govern us, who, if I may use a slang expression, "give us away." What man ever blamed himself for his misfortune? We groan about monopolies and talk about more laws to prevent the wrongs done by chartered corporations. Who made the charters? Our representatives. Who elected such representatives? We did. How can we get bad lawmakers to make a law which shall prevent bad lawmakers from making a bad law? That is, really, what we are trying to do. If we are a free, self-governing people, all our misfortunes come right home to ourselves and we can blame nobody else. * * *

Now comes the question, Who pays for it all? The system of plundering each other soon destroys all that it deals with. It produces nothing. Wealth comes only from production, and all that the wrangling grabbers, loafers, and jobbers get to deal with comes from somebody's toil and sacrifice. Who, then, is he who provides it all? Go and find him and you will have once more before you the forgotten man. You will find him hard at work because he has a great many to support. * * * The forgotten man is delving away in patient industry, supporting his family, paying his taxes, casting his vote, supporting the church and the school, reading his newspaper, and cheering for the politician of his admiration, but he is the only one for whom there is no provision in the great scramble and the big divide.

Such is the forgotten man. He works, he votes, generally he prays; but he always pays—yes; above all, he pays. * * * He is a commonplace man. He gives no trouble. He excites no admiration. He is not in any way a hero (like a popular orator); or a problem (like tramps and outcasts); nor notorious (like criminals); nor an object of sentiment (like the poor and weak); nor a burden (like paupers and loafers); nor an object out of which social capital may be made (like the beneficiaries of church and State charities); nor an object for charitable aid and protection (like animals treated with cruelty); nor one over whom sentimental economists and statesmen can parade their fine sentiments (like inefficient workmen and shiftless artisans). Therefore, he is forgotten. All the burdens fall on him or on her, for it is time to remember that the forgotten man is not seldom a woman. * * *

It is plain enough that the forgotten man and the forgotten woman are the very life and substance of society. They are the ones who ought to be first and always remembered. They are always forgotten by sentimentalists, philanthropists, reformers, enthusiasts, and every description of speculator in sociology, political economy, or political science. * * * If it is desired to bring about social improvements, bring us a scheme for relieving the forgotten man of some of his burdens. He is our productive force which we are wasting. Let us stop wasting his force. Then we shall have a clean and simple gain for the whole society. The forgotten man is weighted down with the cost and burden of the schemes for making everybody happy, with the cost of public beneficence, with the support of all the loafers, with the loss of all the economic quackery, with the cost of all the jobs. Let us remember him a little while. Let us take some of the burdens off him. Let us turn our pity on him instead of on the good for nothing. It will be only justice to him, and society will greatly gain by it. * * * Certainly the philanthropists and sentimentalists have kept our attention for a long time on the nasty, shiftless, criminal, whining, crawling, and good-for-nothing people as if they alone deserved our attention.

The forgotten man is never a pauper. He almost always has a little capital, because it belongs to the character of the man to save something. He never has more than a little. He is, therefore, poor in the popular sense, although in the correct sense he is not so. I have said already that if you learn to look for the forgotten man and to care for him, you will be very skeptical toward all philanthropic and humanitarian schemes. It is clear now that the interest of the forgotten man and the interest of "the poor", "the weak", and the other petted classes are in antagonism. In fact, the warning to you to look for the forgotten man comes the minute that the orator or writer begins to talk about the poor man. That minute the forgotten man is in danger of a new assault, and if you intend to meddle in the matter at all, then is the minute for you to look about for him and to give him your aid. Hence, if you care for the forgotten man, you will be sure to be charged with not caring for the poor. Whatever you do for any of the petted classes wastes capital. If you do anything for the forgotten man, you must secure him his earnings and savings; that is, you legislate for the security of capital and for its free employment; you must oppose paper money, wildcat banking and usury laws, and you must maintain the inviolability of contracts. Hence you must be prepared to be told that you favor the capitalist class, the enemy of the poor man.

What the forgotten man really wants is true liberty. * * * It follows that the forgotten man, who is hard at work at home, has to pay both ways. * * * Now, since we, the people, are the state, whenever there is any work to be done or expense to be paid, and since the petted classes and the criminals and the jobbers cost and do not pay, it is they who are in the position of the child, and it is the forgotten man who is the parent. What the forgotten man needs, therefore, is that we come to a clearer understanding of liberty, and to a more complete realization of it. Every step which we win in liberty will set the forgotten man free from some of his burdens and allow him to use his powers for himself and for the commonwealth.

OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS IN THE WORLD WAR

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address by Dr. Arthur Louis Day, Director of the Geophysical Laboratory, Carnegie Institution, before the Society of the Genesee, at Washington, D. C., January 23, 1935, which, I think, will be of general interest.

There being no objection, the address is as follows:

There is always a certain romance about war stories which not only lends to them attractiveness but often insures to them a longer life than is granted to those who shared in the incidents themselves. Stories from the front have dominated our firesides for some 15 years since the close of the Great War and are even more welcome today than at the beginning. Stories from behind the lines, so to speak, are less common and are perhaps somewhat lacking in dramatic quality. Notwithstanding this, the atmosphere was not less tense nor was concerted effort anywhere more vigorously put forth than in the organization far from the front which determined and supplied the needs of our troops. The share in this great organization which fell to the lot of our guest of honor this evening was the manufacture of optical glass and optical instruments of high precision for the control of gunfire. Regarding optical-instrument manufacture, whether for war or other purposes, no word of mine can add anything to the brilliance of the record of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Co. through two long generations.

I suppose there are few in the audience this evening to whom optical glass has significant meaning. For this reason I may perhaps review briefly the counsels and actions of a small group of men gathered in Washington in late March of 1917, after it had become apparent that this country might be drawn into the Great European War. In this group were members of the General Staff of the Army, a few officials of Government bureaus, and a number of scientific men—in all perhaps 20 persons, few of whom had been together before. To these men a very brief and very startling story was told—told in bare fact and in short sentences, with the atmosphere becoming more highly charged with every moment. The civilian members of the group had probably no other background through which to appraise the situation there presented than the stories of the Civil War, where the enemy and his fortifications could be plainly seen and artillery fire was directed point-blank from the gun emplacement at an earthwork in plain view and rarely more than 3,000 yards away. The Great European War, which had been going on for 3 years, had already developed a wholly different technique. The objectives of heavy gunfire were never in plain view, ranges had increased to 10 or 12 miles, and unless extreme precision could be attained such effort must obviously be wasted.

Thus bluntly were we made to see that unless a number of optical instruments—gun sights, range finders, periscopes, field glasses—and these of the highest precision, could be had quickly, our effort at the front, if we should enter the war, could be of but little help. These instruments were not then available, at least not in quantity, and some of you will doubtless remember the call which was sent out soon after for the loan of all field glasses suitable for officers' use.

Optical instruments meant optical glass, and optical glass is by far the most refined product of the glassmaker's art. How were we to obtain optical glass of suitable quality and quantity for the production of fire-control instruments, and could our officers in the field be furnished with these instruments in time to be of service at the front? Such were the preliminary deliberations of this group.

A canvass was immediately instituted by the Naval Consulting Board, by the General Munitions Board, and by the National Research Council to ascertain the actual situation which then confronted us. The results were ominous; optical glass before this war was not an American product; most of it had been imported from enemy countries, some from our allies. Stocks of this glass in the hands of American instrument makers were practically at zero, because of the fact that during 3 years they had accepted contracts from the Canadian Government and from the British field service and our stock was completely exhausted. It was difficult even to obtain samples of it. And so in April of 1917 when we entered the war there was practically no optical glass available, and without it plainly there could be no fire-control instruments unless our allies could provide them.

Our courage stirred again, however, when two evidences of forethought came to light. As early as 1912 Mr. William Bausch had recognized as a matter of business expediency that an optical industry in the United States could not safely depend for its most indispensable raw material upon foreign sources alone. He had in fact built a small plant and had made some attempts to produce optical glass. Unfortunately the building burned down soon after, with but a small record of accomplishment. In 1914, however, when the European war had precipitated the catastrophe by cutting off the foreign supply almost completely, the plant was rebuilt and further experimentation begun. In this plan experience accumulated under the energetic direction of Mr. William Bausch until by 1917 certain glasses could be dependably made, but the total capacity of the plant, assuming complete success, was no more than 2,000 pounds per month, while the war need which we confronted in that fateful April amounted to 2,000 pounds per day.

Some few others were found who foresaw during the years between 1914 and 1917 insuperable embarrassment to the business of lens making as soon as the existing supply of foreign-made glass should be exhausted. None of their efforts had yet yielded glass of a quality equal to Government standards (except the Bausch & Lomb Co., first named), but there was encouragement in the thought that they were at work.

There was also another difficulty, prosaic perhaps, but insistent. Optical glass must be melted in clay pots which must be reasonably free from iron, for the presence of iron means low transparency, even when present in quantities no greater than a few tenths of 1 percent. Pots of this quality had been made in this country, but always from German clay, and German clay also was no longer available. American clays were abundant but comparatively untried and their properties unknown.

On further limitation and the situation which confronted our military authorities in April of 1917 will be plainly before you. For the optical instruments required by the Government to control its gunfire on the sea and at the front, 9 different varieties of optical glass were necessary, and but 2 of these had ever been successfully made in this country at any time. The seven others remained enshrouded in mystery.

This final limitation brings us face to face with a further difficulty realized by but few people then or now. Optical-glass manufacture is inherently a secret industry, regarding which at the time of the war almost no authentic information had ever been printed. In France it was a Government monopoly, in England practically so. In Germany the industry was virtually concentrated in a single firm whose secrets were its own. Optical-glass formulas were never allowed to become known even within the plant in which it was made. It used to be said in Europe, with some humor but perhaps more of bitter realism, that such formulas were never written down except on the inside of a man's shirt, which was the only thing he never parted with. In the face of this array of discouragements the outlook for a supply of this indispensable part of our war equipment was not bright.

To meet this situation scientists with some knowledge of silicate chemistry (but, of course, no knowledge of optical-glass making) were called upon to help as early as April 12, 1917. Two groups were formed, one from the Carnegie Geophysical Laboratory in Washington, which was to associate itself with the Bausch & Lomb Co. in an effort to extend and perfect its output, another from the Bureau of Standards, which was to operate in part in its own Pittsburgh laboratory (to which the Government contributed $75,000) and in part of the Charleroi plant of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. To each of these groups of collaborators was assigned the task of providing one-half of the requirements of both Army and Navy in the shortest possible time.

This is not the place to record the tears and the blood sweating which were the chief output of the following months, but suffice it to say that the Bausch & Lomb Co., at the end of 4 months, was successfully producing all of the varieties of glass necessary for the Government service, and had multiplied its total output by 4. At the end of the year 1917 this output had increased to 40,000 pounds per month, properly apportioned among the varieties needed.

The Pittsburgh group had not been equally successful and no glass was yet available from that source.

Early in 1918 a reorganization occurred in Washington which brought into existence the War Industries Board and the now famous "dollar-a-year man." This Board was a very strong body and its pressure was immediately felt in this as in most other war industries. One of its early decisions was that the group which had so far succeeded at Rochester should be divided and assigned to two other plants, the Spencer Lens Co. at Buffalo and the Charleroi plant of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. Without entering too intimately upon the details of these additional burdens and experiences, equally harrowing, particularly at the Charleroi plant, which, though very large, was never intended for the precise control necessary in optical-glass manufacture, it may be sufficient to say that eventually these efforts also succeeded; and at the time when our troops in the field were ready for service at the front to take their active share in the crucial fighting of 1918, the optical-glass supply of the United States was substantially equal to the demand for it.

One or two incidents will bring into this picture our distinguished guest of honor this evening. A sudden demand was presented to the War Industries Board to prepare an entirely new glass for an entirely new purpose. Airplane activity had become so far developed and so indispensable that photographic mapping over enemy lines had become a most important responsibility of the Army staff in the field. This meant airplane cameras of wide sweep and extremely high precision—indeed, of a quality considerably beyond anything of the kind which had been attempted before. The necessary optical requirements for such lenses had been figured out, but it was not then known whether any glass could be made to meet these exacting requirements. The time was critical, the pressure high, and the need insistent. This situation was brought to the attention of Mr. Edward Bausch and his group with the simple statement that it must somehow be done. Mr. Bausch asked no questions and considered no details; his reply was simply that if it could be done he would do it. It proved to be the hardest task yet encountered, and it needed all of the inspiration which Mr. Bausch could bring to bear. The glass was a barium glass, thin as water when melted, and totally different in its behavior from any glass hitherto attempted. It soaked into the melting pots like coffee into a lump of sugar and ran out through the sides. In every detail it required totally different treatment from the glasses thus far developed. Nevertheless it was successfully made in 4 weeks' time, and it saw service at the front.

One further incident and I am done. Early in 1918, when it came to be realized by the War Industries Board that up to that time practically all of the glass available to the Government had come from the Bausch & Lomb Co., and the other group set up to produce an equal share had been unsuccessful, the present speaker was sent to Rochester with instructions to wield a battleax if necessary to increase that output to the limit. I entered Mr. Bausch's office that morning with some misgivings. His cooperation up to that time had known no limit, and in point of fact he was fulfilling every requirement which had been laid upon him. My proposal was that he prepare again to double his output and within 30 days. I shall never forget his reaction. He made no direct answer, but took with him a piece of chalk and let me into the glass plant. There he marked out on the floor with his own hand the vacant spaces which could be made to hold additional glass furnaces and gave orders for the immediate construction of those furnaces. No single question was raised. No moment was lost. It was a spirit to overcome all obstacles, and it did just that.

As a conclusion I may add very briefly that the total amount of glass made for the use of the American Army and Navy during the war was about 650,000 pounds, of which about 450,000 pounds were made under the immediate direction of Mr. Edward Bausch and his associates. And this was accomplished in spite of the fact that new sources of supply had to be found for every raw material used in order to insure its purity; new clays must be found and new processes developed for making the pots in which these could be melted; the mysteries of wholly secret processes must be unravelled, and that without any help whatever from our allies, who maintained monopolies of this art, even in spite of undoubted sabotage which occasionally cropped out, notwithstanding all precautions. All this was successfully accomplished under war pressure in time to be of service. It may even be mentioned that small quantities of optical glass were exported from this country to help out before the war was over. It must not be overlooked that Mr. Bausch alone has continued to manufacture optical glass since the war; he has kept alive the experience then gained so that our Army and Navy need never again be caught without "eyes" in its hour of need.

So long as war stories are told and the vital position of key industries for our defense is recognized, this country can never forget Mr. Edward Bausch, of Rochester.

PREVENTION OF LYNCHING

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 24) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing, and punishing the crime of lynching.

Mr. CONNALLY obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask the Senator from Texas to yield to me in order that I may suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Johnson	Pittman
Ashurst	Coolidge	Keyes	Pope
Austin	Copeland	King	Radcliffe
Bachman	Costigan	La Follette	Robinson
Bailey	Couzens	Lewis	Russell
Bankhead	Cutting	Logan	Schall
Barbour	Dickinson	Lonergan	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Dieterich	Long	Sheppard
Bilbo	Donahey	McAdoo	Shipstead
Black	Duffy	McCarran	Smith
Bone	Fletcher	McGill	Steiwer
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Gerry	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	Gibson	Metcalf	Trammell
Bulow	Glass	Minton	Truman
Burke	Gore	Moore	Vandenberg
Byrd	Guffey	Murphy	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hale	Murray	Wagner
Capper	Harrison	Neely	Walsh
Caraway	Hastings	Norris	Wheeler
Carey	Hatch	O'Mahoney	White
Clark	Hayden	Overton

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is absent because of illness, and that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] are necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield the floor for the purpose of enabling the Senator from New York to explain the bill, the consideration of which has been moved?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is agreeable to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York is recognized.

W. M. DUNCAN

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I send to the desk two telegrams and ask that the clerk read them. They are short.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

NASHVILLE, TENN., April 23, 1935.

Senator K. D. MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Those who know Will Duncan, including myself, deeply resent vicious attack made on him by Senator LONG. A cleaner, more competent, and more honorable man could not be found. It would be hard indeed to find a man more worthy and dependable to occupy the position he now fills. Would appreciate your defending Duncan to the limit if afforded an opportunity.

L. G. DURR.

NASHVILLE, TENN., April 23, 1935.

Hon. K. D. MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.:

Senator LONG'S attack today on W. M. Duncan, E. R. A. finance director for Tennessee, does great injustice to a citizen of high standing and efficient, honest public servant. Mr. Duncan is a member of an outstanding accounting firm in Nashville who number among their clients many leading business concerns, and he himself is a man of unquestioned integrity and has the full confidence of this community. Mr. Duncan did not solicit employment with either C. W. A. or E. R. A., but was asked in each instance to serve, his present connection being the direct result of a request from A. Ross Fox, regional field examiner F. E. R. A. Mr. Duncan is secretary of the Tennessee Society of Certified Public Accountants and a member of the American Institute of Accountants.

GEORGE H. ARMISTEAD, Sr.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to say in connection with the two telegrams that it will be recalled that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] brought up the matter concerning Mr. Duncan several days ago by reading a report of a man by the name of Watson. These are voluntary telegrams. I did not know Mr. Duncan at the time the Senator from Louisiana was reading the report. I think I never had met him. At any rate, I did not recall him at the time and so stated. But I do know, very intimately, Mr. L. G. Durr and Mr. George H. Armistead, Sr. There are no two better men in my State or in any other State. Mr. George H. Armistead, Sr., is the editor of the Nashville Banner, one of the strongest newspapers in the State of Tennessee and one of the best-edited papers anywhere. Mr. Durr is one of the finest business men in Nashville and one of the best characters I know. I take pleasure in stating that, in my judgment, any man who meets the approval of these two gentlemen must be all right.

I notice that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] is present this morning, and I think that he, as well as myself, will take pleasure in subscribing to the high character of Mr. Duncan and in admitting that a very great injustice was done him.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I inquire if this discussion is going to result in a long debate?

Mr. LONG. I hope not. I hope the Senator will not allow me to be unjustly criticized without giving me an opportunity to reply.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well; I yield.

Mr. LONG. I did not attack Mr. Duncan. I never said a word against Mr. Duncan nor in favor of Mr. Duncan. What happened was that I rose on the floor of the Senate—and I want the Senator from Tennessee to look in the RECORD and see what I said—and read a letter written by the Federal Emergency Relief Regional Division Administrator, in which it was said that this man Duncan was incompetent, unfit, and allied with an unscrupulous political ring in Tennessee. I did that in order that the public might know that the Emergency Relief Administration was not talking about me alone. I do not have anything to do with them one way or the other. Although they still talk about me a little, yet I never have associated with them, will not associate with them, and will not have anything to do with them, topside nor bottom.

I happened accidentally to get hold of a letter written by these people, saying they went down to Tennessee and uncovered a diabolical, dirty political ring there which had a man named Duncan running the E. R. A., with another man by the name of Menzler, whom they alleged to be unscrupulous, inefficient, incompetent, and almost everything else they could think of. I submitted that public document and I defended Mr. Duncan. It will be found in the RECORD that I defended Mr. Duncan and I defended my friend from Tennessee. I defended the political organization of Tennessee, because I am on friendly terms with the politicians down there and want to remain on friendly terms with them.

What I want done now is to have a motion made by my friend from Tennessee—because it will be adopted if he makes it and will be defeated if I make it—to expel from the E. R. A. the man named Watson, who wrote that letter about Mr. Duncan. That is what we ought to do. The man Watson, who unjustly defamed the man Duncan and the politicians in Tennessee, should be put out of the administration, and now is the time to do it. Let us take action and adopt a motion to keep this good man Duncan from having this kind of aspersions cast on his character from this quarter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield for a further brief statement?

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. The trouble about the Senator from Louisiana having defended Mr. Duncan is that he read a report, or an alleged report, which very greatly reflected upon Mr. Duncan and other people of Tennessee. As I said, I did not know Mr. Duncan at the time at all, and I know him now only from what other people have said. I am confident the Senator's statement just made, that Mr. Duncan is a good man and that he was not attacking him, is true to the extent that Mr. Duncan is a good man; but when the Senator from Louisiana read that report it was an attack upon Mr. Duncan. I think the Senator ought not to have read the report reflecting on Mr. Duncan unless he had known something of what was back of it, which he did not.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am trying to show that good men are being unnecessarily mired down by the various bureaucrats issuing such reports. They had one on me. As the Senator from Tennessee knows, it was bound to be unjust because I did not have anything to do with the administration of E. R. A. relief in Louisiana. I just wanted to show that these fellows go around the country and whenever they find a good man, like me or Duncan and others, they attack him.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator can protect himself when an unjust charge is made against him, but Mr. Duncan is an employee of the Government in Nashville, who does not have that opportunity on the Senate floor. I desire to say that, in my judgment, that attack, however indirectly made, was wholly unjust and unfair to a good man. I commend these telegrams in his defense.

I think the Senator from Louisiana ought to make an apology to Mr. Duncan.

Mr. LONG. From what I know of these Federal bureaus, any person attacked by their reports is due an apology.

Just a word further, if I may, with the permission of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. WAGNER. I hope the Senator will not take very long.

Mr. LONG. The trouble with the Senator from Tennessee is that he is defending the very administrators who are attacking the man Duncan. The man Watson is a big high mogul running the E. R. A. relief. He is on record as saying that Duncan is a bad man connected with a worse set of men, and the Senator from Tennessee is offended, but he is not protecting his friend Duncan. He is allowing Watson to remain in office. There ought to be something done with the men who are running the E. R. A. in this manner.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know Mr. Watson. I never heard of him until the Senator read the alleged report made by him. I do not know anything about Mr. Watson and I do not care anything about Mr. Watson. The Senator brought into the discussion two people from Tennessee, and that is a very different proposition, because I shall defend at any time any good man from Tennessee. The letter the Senator read severely criticized Duncan. The other man whom the Senator mentioned, Simpson, is wholly unworthy, and the Senator was undertaking, as I thought, to defend this unworthy man, and I objected to the best of my ability then and I object now.

Mr. Simpson was an emergency relief administrator who was discharged, and I respect and uphold the relief authorities here for having done it. The letter the Senator from Louisiana read praised Simpson. I have nothing to do with Watson. I am not defending him. I believe him to have been wrong in praising Simpson, and even more wrong in criticizing Duncan.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. WAGNER. I decline to yield further at this time. I think I have been rather generous.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator allow me to say about 20 words?

Mr. WAGNER. Very well; 20 words, and no more. I shall count them. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. The letter from a United States Government official to Duncan will be found on page 6133 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I shall join with my friend from Tennessee to see that the man Albert B. Watson, regional field examiner, is dismissed. With the influence which I have with the Roosevelt administration, I am satisfied it can be done. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator where he got that letter? Where did the Senator get this remarkable letter from Watson? Did he get it officially? Does he know it to be a correct report? Does he know that Mr. Watson wrote the letter? Where did the Senator get the letter which he brings in here and uses as a basis for an attack upon citizens of my State?

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator from Louisiana decline to answer?

Mr. LONG. Oh, no; I am perfectly willing to answer the Senator.

Mr. WAGNER. How long does the Senator want?

Mr. LONG. Just a moment or two.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I think I shall decline to yield further at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York declines to yield further.

PREVENTION OF LYNCHING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. COSTIGAN that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 24) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing, and punishing the crime of lynching.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate listened to what I regard as not only a very eloquent and brilliant address but a very convincing address by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN]. He has left very little for me to add to the argument in support of the proposed legislation; so I shall content myself with giving, as briefly as possible, my reasons for introducing the measure in cooperation with the Senator from Colorado, and urging as strongly as I can its enactment into law.

Mr. President, the flight of time brings changes in laws, in manners, and in morals; but there is one birthright of Anglo-Saxon law that, dating from Magna Carta, should remain imperishable so long as civilization shall survive. That is the right of every man to a fair trial by his peers in order that he may escape punishment without proof of guilt. The crime of lynching, which punishes without trial and without conviction, is thus the most fundamental of all attacks upon our Government and our ideals of life.

Viewed even in its narrowest aspects, punishment without law means punishment of the innocent. Dr. George Fort Milton, a distinguished southerner and editor of the Chattanooga News, who served as chairman of the Southern Commission for the Study of Lynching, said of the 21 mob killings that occurred during 1930:

> Two of the 1930 mob victims were innocent of crime (they were not even accused), and there is grave doubt of the guilt of 11 others. In 6 of these 11 cases there is considerable doubt as to just what crimes, if any, were committed, and in the other 5 in which there is no question as to the crime committed there is considerable doubt as to whether the mob got the guilty man.

No less distressing than punishment of the innocent is the infliction of punishment out of all proportion to the crime. Of the 28 victims of lynchings during 1933, 15 were charged with only minor offenses. Of the 16 names upon the roll of infamy last year only 10 were even accused, much less proved guilty, of major crimes. Five were tortured for such trivial departures from good taste as writing an insulting note, using opprobrious language, fist fighting, talking disrespectfully, and stealing. To cap the climax, one unfortunate was shot during the sport of a man hunt for another.

I have heard the claim that horrible crimes provoke whole communities to uncontrollable bursts of passion; but this plea can never rectify the severe punishment of the trivial offender, or the torture of the innocent. Besides, the passion which a civilized code of law recognizes is confined to the individual and is unpremeditated in inception and swift in execution. But the crime of lynching is all too frequently accompanied by planned and prolonged orgies of mob brutality that would have shocked the soldiers of the Inquisition.

We may read the lurid stories of the blood-lusty Roman tyrants without finding anything more horrible than the stories of whip, of lash, and of flaming brand that accompany our modern exhibitions of primitive torture. Even the hardened gladiator in the arena would customarily turn to his emperor for some sign that cruelty should cease; but there is no check when the fury of a maddened mob is unleashed upon its helpless victim.

But it is only when we turn from its individual to its social implications that we grasp the full menace of the crime of lynching. There is no concealing the fact that this practice is directed primarily against the members of a single race, which has suffered 503 of the 554 outrages inflicted since 1918. This discriminatory suspension of civil rights is breeding a terrible resentment among over 12,000,000 people of the United States, who live under and not apart from our Constitution and who have demonstrated their willingness to die heroically in its defense. The shadow of Judge Lynch is obscuring our proudest motto, "Equal justice under law."

I do not desire to harp even upon the effects of this injustice upon a single race. Violating all American principles, the crime of lynching is a defiant assault upon government itself. When the killing of George Armwood took place upon the Eastern Shore of Maryland the Governor and the State troops were helpless before the fury of the mob. The attorney general was threatened with death because he sought to obtain the arrest of the culprits. In another recent case the lynchers burned the courthouse itself. This destruction of a temple of justice was more than a concrete example of contempt for law. It was symbolic of the inconsistency between the concept of law and the practice of lawlessness.

There is no better evidence that lynching is an attack upon law than the claim boldly made by some of its apologists that it is necessary to cure the law's delay. What could be more grimly ironical than this lawless impatience with the slowness of the law? What could refute this contention more completely than the proof that since 1928 over half of the people lynched have been snatched from the custody of peace officers or dragged from the cells of battered jails where they were already in the hands of justice? What evidence is there that those so anxious to hasten the law have been eager to prosecute those who interfere with its processes?

This lawless practice is alarming not only because it oversteps the boundaries of government. It is particularly serious because it corrupts government and inoculates public officials with the virus of the mob. Not long ago a high executive extolled the mass killing of two men and promised executive pardon to anyone convicted of the crime. When representatives of the State condone the subordination of law to lawlessness, then, indeed, the time for remedy is at hand.

Even more significant is the effect upon the atmosphere breathed by the general public. When Claude Neal was tortured to death four to seven thousand people, responding to a 15-hour notice by wire, by radio, and by the press, gathered to watch the sport. Who can measure the lifelong effect of this spectacle upon the little children who were present at the scene, and who shrieked with crazed delight as they plunged their sharpened sticks into the burning flesh?

Events of this nature cannot be localized in their effects. We are living in a trying age. In every nation of the world force is now at war with reason, the reign of despotism is contending with the reign of law, while violence and persuasion are struggling for mastery. In such a period of flux, prejudice and hatred recognize no arbitrary bounds. It is but a short step from summary treatment of those suspected of crime to supression of every shade of economic or political opinion that disagrees with a transitory majority. A fire cannot be localized until it is extinguished.

The plea has been made that lynching can be ended by State action alone; but the plea crumbles under the weight of the facts that it must carry. There have been 5,071 lynchings in the United States since 1882, and 280 since 1922. Since the turn of the century only eight-tenths of 1 percent of these crimes have been followed by prosecutions, and in only 12 instances have convictions resulted.

Thirteen years ago, upon the theory that the States would stamp out the peril in their midst, the Senate refused to pass the Dyer antilynching bill. Since then only six States have passed laws to restrain lynching, and in only one of these States had the problem been a serious one.

Reliance upon local action alone is wrong in principle. How can local action alone prevent lynchings which occur just when sober public sentiment has become engulfed in the passions of the mob and when the agencies of law enforcement are prostrate or unwilling to intervene? One might as well expect an epidemic to cure itself, or by its own good will prevent its ravages from extending to other parts of the community. Federal assistance is imperative if lynching is to be stopped.

The bill which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] and I are sponsoring rests upon the foundation of State responsibility. Far from depriving the States of their obligation and power to preserve order, it gives them added incentives to do their duty. It is supplementary rather than exclusive in character. It provides that any State or local officer whose neglect of duty leads to the killing or injury of a person by a mob shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or both. Similar penalties are provided for any officer who is derelict in his responsibility to apprehend and prosecute to a conclusion those who participate in these inhuman diversions. In addition, the bill carries the prospect of from 5 to 25 years' imprisonment for any officer who actually conspires with the mob in the pursuit of its illegal ends.

Secondly, the bill provides that those who have participated in a mob for the purpose of inflicting injury or death may be tried in the district courts of the United States. But such transfer from State to Federal forum is permissible only when State prosecuting agencies have failed or neglected to do their duty or when the jurors obtainable for service in the local courts are so strongly opposed to punishment that justice would be denied. Moreover, the Federal courts, when called into action, are to apply the State law. This makes it clear that the Federal Government is to extend its arm only when the State falls down. Every State can retain its autonomy simply by shouldering its responsibilities.

A very important provision of the bill is contained in section 5. This states that the county in which a person is seriously injured or put to death by a mob, by reason of the fact that officers of the State have been negligent in their duty to protect or punish, shall be liable to the injured person or his legal representative for a sum ranging from $2,000 to $10,000. Such a provision is neither novel nor unjust. Eleven States have already passed laws allowing recovery against the city or county in which a lynching occurs, and six of these allow redress in cases of injury as well. Similarly the United States has frequently paid indemnities to other sovereign powers in cases in which aliens have been killed in this country.

The preventive effects of such laws have been well demonstrated. According to an eminent authority, in not even one county which has been subjected to such a fine has a single additional lynching occurred, while the average for the whole State has declined sharply after each penalty. Uniform application of this principle on a Nation-wide scale should serve as a powerful deterrent and an exemplary influence.

The argument has been made that a Federal law would not end lynching. This might be dismissed flippantly by stating that the laws against homicide have not ended murder. But experience tells us that even the threat of a Federal antilynching law has proved effective. Until 1923 lynchings in the United States numbered above 60 every year. In that year, however, following the presentation of the Dyer bill to Congress in 1922, the number fell to 28; and in 1934, when the forerunner of the present bill was before Congress, lynchings practically stopped throughout the United States. But when it became apparent last June that the measure would not pass, a new flood of mob executions began, extending throughout the remainder of the year and chalking up three additional victims since January 1. There could be no better indication of the value of Federal action.

Precedents are at hand. In 1932 we enacted and in 1934 we strengthened the kidnaping law, although the States had been much more successful in preventing and punishing the offense of kidnaping than in dealing with a crime which cuts even more deeply into the roots of our institutions.

There remains only the question of whether this bill embodies a valid exercise of Federal power. The fourteenth amendment to our Constitution provides in section 1 that no State shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws"; and in section 5 that "Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article."

It is true that the fourteenth amendment does not empower the Federal Government to deal with persons in the States who are acting in their individual capacities. It is well settled, however, that the national power may protect the Constitution from violation, not only by States as organic entities or by State laws but also by agents of the State who are derelict in their discretionary or ministerial duties. To hold otherwise would be to deny that, while laws form the framework of government, men are its flesh and blood. Thus, in Home Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Los Angeles (227 U. S. 278 (1912)), Mr. Chief Justice White said:

> The provisions of the (fourteenth) amendment as conclusively fixed by previous decisions are generic in their terms, are addressed, of course, to the States, but also to every person, whether natural or judicial, who is the repository of State power.

There is ample precedent for Federal intervention when State officers deny constitutional rights. In Ex Parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339 (1879)), the Supreme Court of the United States upheld punishment of a State judge who violated a law forbidding discrimination between white and colored persons in the selection of juries. In Tarrence v. Florida (188 U. S. 519 (1902)), the background of the recent Scottsboro decision, the Court said that administrative discrimination against Negroes in the selection of jury panels was "as potential in creating a denial of equality of rights as a discrimination made by law." In Yick Wo v. Hopkins (118 U. S. 356 (1885)) the Court struck down the unequal enforcement of a statute that was fair upon its face.

When necessary the intervention of the Federal Government may extend to the intrusion of the Federal courts into the administration of State laws. In Frank v. Mangum (237 U. S. 309 (1914)) the question was raised whether the highest Federal court could act to set aside a conviction by a State where the outward form of State procedure had been observed while the substance of constitutional rights had been denied. Mr. Justice Holmes made the following classic statement:

> The argument for the appellee in substance is that the trial was in a court of competent jurisdiction, that it retains jurisdiction, although in fact it may be dominated by a mob, and that the ruling of the State court as to the fact of such domination cannot be reviewed. But the argument seems to us inconclusive. Whatever disagreement there may be as to the scope of the phrase "due process of law", there can be no doubt that it embraces the fundamental conception of a fair trial, with opportunity to be heard. Mob law does not become due process of law by securing the assent of a terrorized jury.
> We are not speaking of mere disorder, or mere irregularities in procedure, but of a case where the processes of justice are actually subverted. In such a case the Federal court has jurisdiction to issue the writ. The fact that the State court still has its general jurisdiction and is otherwise a competent court does not make it impossible to find that a jury has been subjected to intimidation in a particular case. The loss of jurisdiction is not general but particular, and proceeds from the control of a hostile influence.

Mr. Justice Holmes spoke in dissent, for the majority of the Court disagreed with him upon the facts. The present Chief Justice concurred in the Holmes opinion, and there can be no doubt that the words which I have quoted are an accurate expression of the law. In fact, in Moore v. Dempsey (261 U. S. 86) the Supreme Court held that a trial for murder in a State court where the jury was under the domination of the mob constituted a denial of due process of law and equal protection of the laws. The Court said:

> If the State, supplying no corrective process, carries into execution a judgment of death or imprisonment based upon a verdict thus produced by mob domination, the State deprives the accused of his life or liberty without due process of law. * * * If the case is that the whole proceeding is a mask, that counsel, jury, and judge were swept to the fatal end by an irresistible wave of public passion, and that the State courts failed to correct the wrong, neither perfection in the machinery for correction nor the possibility that the trial court and counsel saw no other way of avoiding an immediate outbreak of the mob can prevent this Court from securing to the petitioners their constitutional rights.

This case, of course, involved only the right of the Federal courts to set aside a verdict where prejudice against a defendant made the preservation of constitutional safeguards impossible. But the power must also exist in a second class of cases where the Constitution is ignored because of local prejudice in favor of an offender. Since a conviction can occur only by a trial in the court where conviction is rendered, this second class of cases requires the transfer of certain suits to the Federal courts upon proof of necessity. To that end, the present statute is directed.

This bill does not invade State rights. It interferes only with mob rule. Nowhere is the sentiment against lynching stronger, nowhere is the desire for Federal assistance in combatting the scourge within their midst more predominant than in those areas where lynching has reached its peak. Fifty-three million people, without regard to locality or walk of life, have united in pleading for the enactment of this Federal antilynching law. The sentiment for such a law is as wide-spread as the impulse of humanity; it is as deep-rooted as the spirit of Americanism; it is as imperishable as our Bill of Rights.

In the history of this country no campaign for civil justice has been waged in vain, and public opinion in the United States will never be satisfied until "Judge Lynch" is smothered under a heavy blanket of national resentment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, on the motion to consider Senate bill 24, introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], I desire to submit some remarks. I accord to the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New York the highest motives in presenting the bill and asking for its immediate consideration, and, if I may be permitted, I wish to say that I am as much opposed to lynching as is either the Senator from Colorado or the Senator from New York. As a prosecuting officer many years ago it became my official duty to undertake the prosecution of offenders and to see that all parties before the court not only had a fair trial but had the protection of the court until they were legally either adjudicated guilty or were liberated, and I stand now as I stood then. I am opposed to lynching in any form whatever. It is a crime which deserves punishment. Mr. President, lynching is murder, of course. It is murder whether committed by three men or more than three men, and it is likewise murder if committed by one man.

The bill before us, however, raises very serious issues, not issues of sentiment. We readily agree with the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New York in condemning lawlessness in any form, at any time, by anyone who may participate in the commission of crime. But the bill which these Senators now ask the Senate to take up for consideration constitutes a wholly new departure from all our preconceived conceptions as to the responsibility of the States within their own proper sphere, and of the Federal Government, on the other hand.

This particular bill, Mr. President, in section 1 provides that—

> The phrase "mob or riotous assemblage", when used in this act, shall mean an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert, without authority of law, for the purpose of killing or injuring any person in the custody of any peace officer or suspected of, charged with, or convicted of the commission of any crime.

Mr. President, is it not just as great a violation of the rights of the person involved whether he be murdered by three men or one man? Are not his rights as greatly invaded whether he is assaulted on the highways or in public places by two individuals or whether the injury is suffered at the hands of three individuals? The point I am undertaking to suggest is that if we shall adopt the philosophy and the theory of this bill it will amount eventually to turning over to the Federal Government the prosecution of all crime within the States.

The Senator from New York a moment ago invoked the broad principle that any State which did not, through its officers—not as a State, but through the unauthorized acts of its officers—either by willful act or by neglect, accord to all men the same kind of trial so far as its just results are concerned, ought to come within the sphere of this bill.

What would that involve, Mr. President? In a State court one defendant is tried and acquitted. In another court a defendant is tried and convicted. Would it not in the final analysis involve the question of the Federal Government examining every case which could be tried and determining whether in each particular case the State, through its process of trial, had come to a just or a final conclusion?

Mr. President, this bill is builded on the theory that the fourteenth amendment authorizes its enactment. It will not be contended by these distinguished Senators that there was anything in the Constitution prior to the adoption of the fourteenth amendment which would authorize legislation of this character, but they contend that because the fourteenth amendment was adopted its provisions authorize this proposed legislation.

Let us for the moment advert to the fourteenth amendment and ascertain just what was contemplated by the enactment of that constitutional provision. In order to understand the implication of the fourteenth amendment we must know something of the background and of the purpose actuating those who proposed and secured its adoption. At that time many of the States had laws making distinction between different classes of citizens, and the purpose of the fourteenth amendment was to provide that no State, as a State, should make distinctions between different classes of American citizens.

What does the fourteenth amendment provide? I hope I shall not weary the Senate, but it seems to me that now and then it is a good thing for Senators to go back to the Constitution, read it, meditate upon it, and contemplate the possibilities and the limitations and the restrictions, as well as the power which that great instrument contains. No other time is better than today. In times of crisis and in times of emergency, under the stress often of well-meaning purposes, the greatest strain is put upon the Constitution and governmental processes and today is such a time. There is criticism throughout the land that many of the measures we have adopted are perhaps beyond the constitutional authority. We cannot afford now to inquire into all of those processes——

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Does not the Senator think that it is rather invidious to mention the Constitution on the day following the consideration for over a week of the bill which on yesterday was recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry? It seems to me to be rather late in the day for Senators to be bringing up the subject of the Constitution.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in this Republic, whatever our errors or our sins of commission or omission may have been in the past, I hope the time will never come when it can truthfully be said that it is too late to hold up the great charter of our Government, the great guaranties of the organic law, here in the Senate at least to admonish its Membership that we are still, in theory at least, bound by its provisions, just as we draw from it whatever authority we assume to exercise in this great Chamber.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just one further remark?

Mr. CONNALLY. I gladly yield.

Mr. CLARK. I agree thoroughly with the last remark of the Senator from Texas, and yet I might have hoped that in the case of the measure which has been under consideration for the last week or 10 days in this body, leading up to the action taken on it yesterday, and in the case of other measures which have been before the Senate during the last 2 years, Members had shown as much assiduity in getting out their manuals and studying the Constitution and recalling the constitutional provisions as is shown whenever a suggestion is made that steps be taken to prevent what, by common consent, is an outrageous perversion of the law.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri discloses to the Senate his great skill as a parliamentarian.

Just as one of the greatest tactical acts a shrewd lawyer can employ in the court room is to divert the attention of the court and jury, so one of the greatest pieces of strategy a parliamentarian can exercise is to divert the Senate from the immediate matter under consideration by holding up some other "horrible example" that has already transpired or is threatened in the future.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall yield in just a moment.

So today the Senator from Missouri is anxious to retry the question of the Bankhead bill which was before the Senate and which has already been disposed of for the present by being recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I therefore suggest to the Senator, if he is now more concerned with the Bankhead bill than he is with the measure now proposed and pending before the Senate, that he hie himself to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and there debate the constitutional question which he now raises and fertilize the rich fields of the Agricultural Committee with his oratory and his constitutional arguments.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just one further remark?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CLARK. I think the Senator from Texas is showing his superlative skill as a parliamentarian and as a dialectician by discussing the constitutionality of this measure, which, after all, is a proposition for the courts to determine, rather than discussing the merits of the proposition.

I have heard a great deal in past discussions on measures similar to the one now pending as to their constitutionality and have heard far-resounding and far-fetched theories of government expounded, but have heard very little about the merits of the proposition. It seems to me that the Senator from Texas is showing his superlative skill as a parliamentarian by discussing a very abstract proposition which, as I say, is, after all, for the courts to determine, rather than the merits of the bill which is now before the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Missouri, by his statements now, increases the high estimate which I placed upon his art and skill a little while ago. A few moments ago the Senator from Missouri was lamenting the fact that in the consideration of the Bankhead bill and other measures Senators had not gone back and consulted and pondered over and deliberated upon the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CLARK. No, Mr. President, if the Senator will yield; what I was expressing was amazement at the fact that the first time in months we have heard of our old friend, the Constitution, from the Senator from Texas and from other Senators in this body is when an antilynching bill is brought into the Chamber.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, well, the Senator from Missouri in one breath complains that he has not been hearing the Constitution discussed and now he complains that it is being discussed at all. That is the implication from the Senator's remarks. He asks, "Why have we not before heard of the Constitution?"

Mr. CLARK. Well, why have we not?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am going to tell the Senator. It is because the Senator and others like him have been so concerned with passing measures of a temporary and emergent character that they have probably not been concerned with a discussion of the Constitution. The Senator from Missouri has been lamenting that we have not heard the Constitution discussed, and now, when someone mentions the great charter of our constitutional Government, the Senator from Missouri, who is regretful that discussions of it have not rung through this Chamber for all these months, wants now to shoo it away; he says, "Let us hear no more of this old, outworn document! Why concern ourselves with something that was adopted 150 years ago? Those old fellows, James Madison, Alexander Hamilton, and George Washington, were very good men in their day and generation, but 150 summers have come and gone, 150 snows have descended upon their tombs and their graves, and why bring up in the Senate of the United States this old document which they formed and fashioned and gave to an infant republic?"

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I will not interrupt the Senator any more.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CLARK. I will say that I am glad to see my friend the Senator from Texas returning to the consideration of the Constitution. I am certain that the Senator from Texas, when I first knew him many years ago, had as high regard for the Constitution as had anybody else I have ever known, and I am glad to see him coming back to his pristine views; but I submit that it would appear with better grace if the process of return had been a little more gradual than the time between the action on the Bankhead bill yesterday and the Wagner-Costigan bill of today.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator pays me too great a compliment in saying that I have returned. I stand now where I have always stood.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator means on the bill which is under discussion.

Mr. CONNALLY. I stand now where I have always stood on the Constitution, about which we are talking. The Senator from Missouri says that constitutional questions are purely questions for the courts and not for the Senate. Mr. President, if that be the case, why lift our hands when we are sworn in as Senators and assume an obligation that we will defend and protect and uphold the Constitution of the United States?

I regard the Senate of the United States as being as much bound by the Constitution as are the courts bound by it. Is there anywhere a Senator or a citizen, either within these four walls or out yonder in the provinces, as no doubt the Senator from Missouri would regard the States, who either hears my voice now or may, in some unguarded moment, read my remarks in the RECORD——

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Not at this time; I shall yield in a moment—who would say that the President of the United States in passing upon legislation, in exercising the high functions of his great office, should leave all questions as to the constitutionality of measures to the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I am at a loss to understand why the Senator from Texas should suggest that I regard the States as mere "provinces."

Mr. CONNALLY. I should have said "perhaps."

Mr. CLARK. I did not vote for the Economy Act; I did not vote for the N. R. A.; I did not vote for the A. A. A.; yesterday I was not intending to vote for the Bankhead bill; and I may say further that I do not intend to vote for the amendments to the A. A. A., all of which are measures designed to reduce the States to the status of provinces. The Senator from Texas can make his own explanation, but I do object to his imputing to me any disposition to regard the States as "provinces."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I believe, in view of the Senator's remarks, and the tendency of his mind toward this proposed legislation, and my contention that the proposed legislation does devitalize the courts of the States, that I was warranted in making the reference to the fact that he probably regarded the States as provinces; but I withdraw that remark; I do not want to do any injustice to any Senator, and least of all to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. President, I congratulate the Senator from Missouri upon his courage in voting against the various measures to which he has made reference. I am glad of the opportunity of furnishing the occasion for his being able to put into the RECORD these excerpts, which possibly may be of use to him in future political campaigns. If I have served the country and the democracy by contributing to that favorable result, I shall count myself most happy.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for just one further remark, I thank the Senator, while he is putting into the RECORD statements which he thinks may serve him in the future in a political way, for permitting me the opportunity to express a few real heartfelt opinions.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad the Senator today has expressed his "heart-felt opinions." I had hoped that he had always done that here in the Senate, but I am glad to have them expressed today.

Now, Mr. President, returning to the point of my remarks to which I undertook to direct the attention of the Senate a moment ago, and to reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri that the Senate and the House of Representatives should not concern themselves with the constitutionality of measures which come before them and that all constitutional questions should be remitted to the Federal courts and to the Supreme Court, let me say that I do not subscribe to that doctrine. I do not believe the great men who formed the Constitution ever contemplated that the Senate which they were creating and the House of Representatives which they were creating should close their eyes, put shutters on their minds, and ignore absolutely their conception and their construction of the Constitution and the limitations which that great document placed upon the rights of the people, both in order to protect them and to guarantee them against the invasion of those rights by the Federal Government or any of its agencies.

I conceive it to be the duty of every Senator, I conceive it to be the duty of every Member of the House, when any measure comes before him, first to examine at the bar of his own judgment and at the bar of his own conscience whether or not that measure is within the jurisdiction of the Congress under the terms of the Federal Constitution as it has been construed, not alone by the courts but as it has been construed by the Congress itself in years which have passed.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield further to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Of course, I enunciated no such doctrine as the Senator from Texas has undertaken to put in my mouth. I agree thoroughly with the Senator from Texas that it is the business of Representatives and Senators, sworn on their oaths, as much as it is the duty of the judges of the Supreme Court and the inferior courts, to consider and examine the constitutionality of proposed laws before voting on them. All I was doing was to express again surprise that it is only when such a measure as this, having to do with a subject such as lynching, is submitted that the Constitution, long in retirement, is trotted out, its front repainted, its joints mended, and put in the forefront of the action.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am pained to hear the remark of the Senator from Missouri that the Constitution has long since been put in retirement. That may be the attitude of the Senator from Missouri, though I hope it is not. It may be the attitude of some Senators, but I know it is not the attitude of a great many Senators.

This is not the first measure against which I have voted on the ground that we had no power under the Constitution to enact it. The Senator a moment ago adverted to the fact that he voted against the N. R. A.

Mr. CLARK. On that ground.

Mr. CONNALLY. If I may be permitted to class myself with such distinguished company, I, too, voted against the N. R. A., and one of the chief reasons why I voted against the N. R. A. was that I did not believe that under the commerce clause of the Constitution the Federal Government had the power to go into each community and deal with purely intrastate traffic, deal with barber shops, cleaning and dyeing establishments, garages, hotels, and other facilities of that character which are purely local, which do not produce any article of commerce that is shipped from one State to another, but which are purely service organizations and service industries.

So, Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri is entitled to a Distinguished Service Cross for having voted against the N. R. A., I crave that I may at least be awarded a humble little ribbon to mark my comradeship with him in reverencing the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I have tried rather carefully to observe constitutional questions since I have been in the Senate. It appears to me that when a Senator is for a bill he can always find something in the Constitution which will justify its enactment, and therefore he concludes it is constitutional. But if he is against the bill, he can always find something in the Constitution which he believes renders it unconstitutional, and therefore he is against the bill. After all, we generally bring in the Constitution to support us in our opposition to a bill or in our support of a bill. Is not that true as to all the legislation which comes before us?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Kentucky makes a very sweeping charge. I should not go quite so far as does the Senator from Kentucky. He says he has found that in all cases when a Senator is for a bill he finds constitutional warrant for it, and when he is against a bill he likewise finds constitutional warrant for his position.

Mr. CLARK started to leave the Chamber.

Mr. CONNALLY. I regret that the Senator from Missouri sees fit to leave the Chamber just as I am coming to the most interesting part of the discussion.

Mr. CLARK. I thought the Senator had concluded the most interesting part of his remarks.

Mr. CONNALLY. That suggestion does not comport with the very high compliment the Senator paid me earlier. He suggests now that I have already concluded the most interesting part of the discussion; but since my remarks have heretofore been almost wholly devoted to a discussion of the Senator and his opinion, I am not surprised at all that he considers that the most interesting part of my remarks has been concluded.

Mr. CLARK. Naturally I agree to that suggestion. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to have the RECORD show that while I should greatly deplore the absence of the Senator from Missouri I would not in any wise interfere with his convenience or comfort, and he is at liberty to depart.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to have the RECORD show that the Senator's remarks heretofore have been interesting, but if the Senator thinks he may come to more interesting matter, I desire to remain and hear him.

Mr. CONNALLY. I can relieve the Senator's embarrassment by stating that I expect now to discuss the constitutional questions, in which the Senator has shown so little interest. If I find it necessary or desirable to make any reference to him I shall do so when he shall have returned to the Chamber, in order that he may enjoy that particular portion of my remarks.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator's remarks on the Constitution will naturally be so weighty that I should prefer to read his remarks in the RECORD and have access to the law library when I consider them, rather than to consider them offhand during the debate of the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. I commend the Senator's desire for access to the law library as often and at as great length as it is possible for him to devote himself to it, because anyone who has shown, as he has by his remarks, a lack of appreciation of even a mention of the Constitution of the United States in this Chamber, certainly ought to consult not only that great document itself but some of its interpretations by the courts.

Mr. President, these remarks are submitted with great affection for the Senator from Missouri, but nevertheless with a feeling of sadness. I remember the Senator from Missouri when he was Parliamentarian in the House of Representatives. I remember then how he venerated and almost adored the Constitution of the United States. That was at a time when he was not dependent upon public favor for tenure of the office which he held. He held office by political appointment. He rendered distinguished service in that position.

No one was more gratified, either in the State of Missouri or beyond the confines of that great Commonwealth, than myself when he was elected to the United States Senate—elected at the end of a heated and interesting campaign, elected after the hurly-burly, the confusion, the tumult of contending factions. I regret, Mr. President, after these things have transpired, to find that one who in his youth was devoted to the Constitution, loved every line of that great old document, consulted it daily as he advised the House of Representatives and the Speaker with reference to rulings upon parliamentary questions, with his very soul saturated and permeated by its throbbing principles, after a few political campaigns sees fit to stand on the floor of the United States Senate and speak of the Constitution as an outworn document, one that should not be consulted by the Senate or the House, but should be relegated alone to the courts and the protection of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall in just a moment. Let me observe that when the Constitution of the United States comes to the point where its only defenders are in the Supreme Court, the Constitution and these institutions of ours will soon crumble and disappear. The Constitution, if it is to survive, ought to have the love and affection of every citizen who is capable of bearing arms, of every man who loves Anglo-Saxon institutions, of everyone who has the courage to stand up against the mob, against the fury and the prejudice and the passion of political campaigns, and to resist every movement engendered by expediency which would seek to weaken or to destroy the strength and the fortitude of its great fabrics.

I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, of course I thank, from the bottom of my heart, the distinguished Senator from Texas for his very kind personal remarks about myself, which are simply an evidence of the very sincere mutual esteem and even affection which developed between us many years ago, when the Senator from Texas was a Member of the House of Representatives and I was Parliamentarian of that body.

I hope, however, the Senator will not continue to put in my mouth words which I did not use. I do not wish to delay the Senator from Texas from the very weighty discussion of the Constitution, which he has been promising us for some time, but which he has been postponing by this discussion with me. All I have done in the course of this discussion was to express surprise, after listening to the Senator from Texas on the subject of the Bankhead tenant-farmer bill, and the oil bill, and the A. A. A. bill, and several other bills which have been before this body, to see, after long estrangement, my old friend the Senator from Texas and my old friend the Constitution of the United States suddenly appear arm in arm at the suggestion of an anti-lynching bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri provoked such remarks as the Senator from Texas has made; and I hope the Senator from Texas has not been unfair. It is not his purpose to be unfair. The Senator from Missouri listened yesterday for some hours to the discussion by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] of the constitutionality of this measure. He listened, I assume, this morning to something like an hour's discussion of the constitutional and legal aspects of this bill by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. It is a little curious that the Senator from Missouri should sit and listen and deliberate upon the arguments presented by these Senators on the Constitution and on the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, and then, when one for whom he professes such warm esteem and such marvelous affection essays to spend 30 minutes by the clock discussing the Constitution, the decisions of the Supreme Court, and the motion to take up this particular bill, that his soul should be so disturbed that he cannot tolerate the humble and feeble remarks which the Senator from Texas is undertaking to make to the Senate.

I forgive the Senator, though. I know how anxious he is to enact legislation. I realize that he believes in expeditious action on all these measures. I saw him only a few days ago, when the Bankhead bill was before the Senate, stand upon this floor and urge expedition, urge that prompt action be taken, notwithstanding he spent a considerable period of the Senate's time in proposing amendments, in urging motions, and in similar action.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator will be unable to find in the RECORD that I consumed one moment of the Senate's time, that I discussed any amendment, or the bill itself, or made any motion, or spoke in support of any motion, other than on a question of order for about 2 minutes on yesterday afternoon.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did I say the Bankhead bill? I had in mind the Copeland pure-food bill, Mr. President. I beg the Senator's pardon. I had, in my own mind, reference to the Copeland pure-food bill. As I remember now, the Senator from Missouri was concerned with that bill. He was very much against it. He was opposed then to the Federal Government interfering with advertising with regard to pure foods and drugs.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the Senator again is misstating my position, if he will yield to me.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield. I do not wish to misstate the Senator's position.

Mr. CLARK. I took no such position. I am very much in favor of a pure food and drugs bill. I opposed certain phases of that bill, such as declaring that a crutch or an electrical apparatus for conditioning air in a room was a drug. I opposed such provisions as that after a regulation of the Secretary of Agriculture had been declared invalid by a court, the Secretary of Agriculture should have authority to put the very same measure into effect for 6 months as a temporary regulation. I opposed certain other provisions of the bill; but I have expressed my willingness and desire at all times to be in favor of a proper bill on that subject.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I certainly do not wish to be unfair or even ungenerous to the Senator from Missouri. All I meant to observe was that he was concerned with that bill. He had a right to be. He had a right to oppose it as it was written, and he took up some of the time of the Senate in endeavoring to correct it and criticize it. I commend him for it.

Mr. President, this is the Senate of the United States. This is the place for criticism of legislation. This is the place to discuss legislation. This is the forum ordained by the great Republic under which we live to hammer out and fight out and discuss legislation; and no matter how humble that legislation may be, I, for one, am in favor of its thorough discussion. That is what I am contending for here today.

What I meant to suggest was that the Senator from Missouri, when he was discussing a pure-food bill, was opposed to the Federal Government going in and tinkering with some of the subjects dealt with in that bill. That was a violation of the Constitution. That was a rape of the great organic law; but when it comes to a bill like this, which overthrows the courts of Missouri and of other States in the Union, I am wondering why the Senator from Missouri should be so concerned that a Senator should rise and discuss the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I regret, I may say, to appear in the attitude of assisting in a filibuster on this motion. I regret very much that I made the initial inquiry of the Senator from Texas. So far as I am concerned, I am quite content to let the exchange of compliments and other personalities between the Senator from Texas and myself now pass, if the Senator will proceed to the discussion of the constitutional question which he has been threatening for so long.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be very glad to proceed, and I should have long since proceeded, except for the necessity, in view of the inquiries of the Senator from Missouri, of vindicating the right of every Senator on this floor to discuss the Constitution and the decisions of the courts.

Mr. President, this is the Senate. This is not the same Chamber, but this is the same institution where Clay and Webster and Calhoun and Benton from Missouri itself fought out great constitutional issues and fashioned and shaped the public opinion of the people of the United States in a formative era in American life. Whenever the time comes that the representatives of the people on this floor or on the floor of the House of Representatives are not privileged to discuss at length, if need be, the Constitution of the United States, then indeed will this Republic be in peril.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, is the Senator from Texas talking about the same Constitution that Benton and Webster and Clay and Calhoun discussed?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas does not recognize two Constitutions. He is talking about one. I do not know what the Senator from Virginia adverts to. I am sure the Senator from Virginia is not in the same frame of mind as is the Senator from Missouri, and yet the incident illustrates how valuable it is that we should have in the Senate representatives of every type of thought as to constitutional construction and men with divergent views. The Senator from Virginia is devoted to the Constitution. He tries to cast his votes on the floor of the Senate in accordance with the Constitution; and I am sure he has no objection to the Constitution, as it applies to any pending measure, being discussed on this floor.

Mr. GLASS. Not in the least. I just wanted to know what Constitution the Senator was discussing.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to enlighten the Senator from Virginia. The Constitution which the Senator is discussing is the one found within these leather covers, of which the Senator from Virginia is entitled to one copy; and if he does not already possess it, I shall be very glad to intercede with the Superintendent of Documents to obtain for him a copy of the Constitution.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). The Senator from Louisiana will state it.

Mr. LONG. Ought not these irrelevant matters to be left out of this discussion? Senators will be talking about the Mother Goose Almanac before we get through. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator says "these irrelevant matters." "These" is a very inclusive term. I am wondering if the Senator included what has just transpired. [Laughter.]

The Senator from Texas is not going to discuss the Mother Goose Almanac. He will leave that to the Senator from Louisiana, if he desires, or to other Senators who may be more interested in Mother Goose than in the Constitution of the United States; and, speaking of Mother Goose, she has been one of the most prolific breeders in all the history of the world.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to discuss the fourteenth amendment, and what I conceive to be the lack of authority in the fourteenth amendment to permit the enactment of the pending bill.

This measure is based upon the theory that the Federal Government will not only hold responsible individuals within the States but it will hold responsible counties, municipalities, and political subdivisions, and will assess damages upon the counties and the subdivisions for the violation by individuals of the terms of this bill.

Mr. President, it will not now be contended that when the Constitution was originally formed it contained provisions authorizing such legislation as that now proposed. But it is said that when the fourteenth amendment was adopted authority was thereby granted for the legislation which is sponsored by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] and the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

I wish to congratulate these Senators for their courage in offering a measure which, according to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], will include within the Federal authority labor disputes and riots arising out of labor difficulties.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. In just a moment I shall yield. Recognizing the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] as being one of the foremost representatives of the laboring men of the Union, and recalling that the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has toiled incessantly in behalf of the interests of the laboring men of the Union, I realize that it requires a high degree of courage and is an evidence of outstanding statesmanship when the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New York present a bill to the Senate which would authorize bringing before the bar of Federal courts labor unions, or those who are opposed to labor unions, who may engage in riots or other clashes which may result in bloodshed or serious injury.

I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is certain that the Senator from Texas, who always endeavors to be accurate, has not purposely departed from the RECORD. A careful reading of the RECORD, however, will, I believe, convince him, as it did me, that the Senator from Alabama did not go so far as the Senator from Texas at the moment assumes he went. The Senator from Alabama suggested, after a brief colloquy, which was not concluded, that he thought some plausible excuse would be provided for a pretended drive against members of organized labor. The Senator from New York and I hold the opposite conviction.

I ought, perhaps, to add that in my own State—and I say this in view of the reference made by the able Senator from Texas to some of my experiences—the difficulties encountered by members of organized labor were largely not with Federal courts but with State courts and other State agencies. Nor do I think that experience differs very greatly from the experience of organized labor in other parts of the Union.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I assure the Senator that I do not want to misrepresent him. I heard the colloquy here last evening, and I predicated my statement upon the assumption of the Senator from Alabama. The Senator from Alabama, as is well known, is also a great friend and representative of the interests of laboring man. I do him full justice, I believe, when I class him with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. The Senator from Alabama is anxious that labor unions be not included, and for that reason he pointed out that, under the bill of the Senator from New York and the Senator from Colorado, it would be possible for the Federal Government to take jurisdiction.

Let me suggest this to the Senator from Colorado. He said a moment ago that in the labor disputes in the State of Colorado the troubles the laboring man had experienced had been with the State courts. Of course they have been with the State courts and not with the Federal courts, because under the Constitution and under our present system the State alone has jurisdiction to try those charged with the offenses of riot and assault and murder. But once it is established by such a measure as the one we are discussing that the Federal Government has the right to intervene in any State whenever the State does not accord the same degree of trial and the same kind of trial to every individual, when that precedent is established, Mr. President, is there any reason why it should not extend to the men who belong to labor unions just as it extends to men who do not belong to labor unions?

Mr. President, I am opposed to the whole bill. I am opposed to taking it up. Let me ask the Senator from Colorado a question. If the doctrine is sound that the Federal Government should have jurisdiction to try any three or more men who act together and bring about the injury of an individual, or the death of an individual, then when three or more labor union men are engaged in an unlawful assemblage, or a riot, and do injury to some private individual, or take his life, why should they not be brought before the bar of judgment in a Federal court like every other citizen of this Republic?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment. I frequently vote, and always like to vote, in behalf of labor. There is no sanctity about membership in a labor union, however. It does not give any man a higher privilege than is enjoyed by every other citizen of this Republic. If this bill is to apply to ordinary citizens, three in number or more, then why should it not apply to every citizen regardless of whether be belongs to a labor union or belongs to that great mass of our citizenship who, outside of labor unions, toil and produce and consume throughout the Republic?

I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] is present, and, of course, can enlarge upon his suggestion of last evening.

What I originally rose to suggest was that the Senator from Texas had, quite inadvertently, of course, somewhat altered precisely what the Senator from Alabama stated at the time. This is the language of the Senator from Alabama as reported in this morning's RECORD, referring to the measure under consideration:

> It would certainly give to the peace officers a wonderful excuse for stating that they were afraid they would be tried and indicted in a Federal court.

That apparently is not the statement which the Senator from Texas understood the Senator from Alabama to make.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. In just a moment. I shall say to the Senator from Colorado that I did not undertake to reproduce word for word what the Senator from Alabama said, but I thought I would direct the Senator's attention to what the Senator from Alabama said so that he would know I was relying on the issue which the Senator from Alabama had raised. It may be that the Senator from Alabama was incorrect. It may be that I gave too broad an interpretation to his interruption. I certainly had no intention of misleading anyone, because I made specific reference to the fact that the Senator from Alabama had made the suggestion. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not know exactly what statement was made today, but the question I asked was based upon my belief that the bill as it is written would give the greatest weapon to the opponents of labor organizations that has ever been extended to them since the beginning of the history of this Government.

I base my statement on this fact: I do not believe there is any lawyer who can read this bill and not be convinced that every time three or more members of a labor organization meet, when they are on a strike, and it can be charged that they have the intention of injuring somebody——

Mr. CONNALLY. Suppose they do injure somebody?

Mr. BLACK. And they also do injure somebody; they can then be tried in a Federal court.

This is the point I have in mind: For years and years and years the labor organizations have been seeking to deprive the Federal courts of that very jurisdiction.

Mr. CONNALLY. By injunction, the Senator means.

Mr. BLACK. Yes. It took many years for the Norris-LaGuardia bill to pass. The only jurisdiction which was had under that law was by contempt proceedings. I wish to state that I think the laboring men of this country have had no better friends in the Senate than the two Senators who offer the pending bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I said so.

Mr. BLACK. Five minutes before I asked the question yesterday afternoon, was the first time, I should say, that I had read the bill since it came from the committee.

I was familiar with the fact that the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution was offered by those who desired to protect certain persons whom they thought might be injured on account of race. I knew there were very laudable motives behind a great many who supported the fourteenth amendment. Only recently, however, I have had sent to me, as has every other Senator, a little magazine called "the American Review", referring to corporate growth in this Nation; and I found that although the fourteenth amendment was intended to protect members of the colored race, it had served to protect not them, except in a very few instances, but it had served to protect corporate greed and cupidity. It had served, as we all know, to paralyze the arms of the States of the Union in their efforts to protect the people from corporate cupidity.

The figures are given in the magazine to which I referred, and show in the 20-year period from 1890 to 1910 that there were 529 cases involving the fourteenth amendment. I am reading from that magazine:

> Of these, 19 concerned the Negro race. Two hundred and eighty-nine related to corporations.

The remainder related not to corporations but to those who were standing in their place claiming that there was an injury to a property right. So, while it was the intention of many generous-hearted men and women, by the fourteenth amendment, to bring about relief to the Negro race, instead of that it has been utilized for the purpose of injuring the very people it was intended to protect.

I call attention thereto for the reason I am absolutely sure from my study of this bill, and having represented the United Mine Workers and other organizations in my State in strikes and in various controversies they have had, that if this bill should pass in its present form it would give the strongest weapon that was ever placed in the hands of their enemies to strike them to death. That is what I intend to call attention to. I do not know just exactly what the statement was to which I replied yesterday, but I am sure that this bill will accomplish the very purpose I stated if it should be passed in its present form, and I cannot understand how it is that the attorneys of the great organizations of labor have failed to see up to this date exactly what this bill would do to them if it should be passed.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. With full appreciation of the generous words of both the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] I desire to say that the Senator from New York and I do not share the apprehensions expressed. I desire also to thank the Senator from Alabama for making clear this morning, as I think he did not make clear last night, the extent of his concern and the grounds on which he bases that concern.

Without interrupting the Senator from Texas at this moment, and reserving, of course, the right to refer to the subject at a later time, I merely suggest to the two able Senators, whose admirer I am, that if they will join in the preparation of some constructive amendment which they really believe will protect the reasonable and lawful activities of organized labor, and on the adoption of such an amendment will support the pending bill, I shall, of course, be happy to endeavor to cooperate with them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We are dealing with a very important bill, and we are having a very able discussion of it. I think we should have more Members of the Senate present to hear this able discussion, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Johnson	Pittman
Ashurst	Coolidge	Keyes	Pope
Austin	Copeland	King	Radcliffe
Bachman	Costigan	La Follette	Robinson
Bailey	Couzens	Lewis	Russell
Bankhead	Cutting	Logan	Schall
Barbour	Dickinson	Lonergan	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Dieterich	Long	Sheppard
Bilbo	Donahey	McAdoo	Shipstead
Black	Duffy	McCarran	Smith
Bone	Fletcher	McGill	Steiwer
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Gerry	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	Gibson	Metcalf	Trammell
Bulow	Glass	Minton	Truman
Burke	Gore	Moore	Vandenberg
Byrd	Guffey	Murphy	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hale	Murray	Wagner
Capper	Harrison	Neely	Walsh
Caraway	Hastings	Norris	Wheeler
Carey	Hatch	O'Mahoney	White
Clark	Hayden	Overton

Mr. LEWIS. I regret to announce the absence of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] on account of illness.

I also announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, when I was last interrupted, I was endeavoring to refer to the fourteenth amendment, and to discuss the pending bill in relation thereto.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] suggests that if the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Texas will draw amendments to the bill, which will make it clear that it does not apply to labor unions, and will thereby promise to support the bill, he will also be glad to exempt labor unions. I fear the Senator from Colorado wholly misunderstood the attitude of the Senator from Texas. If this bill is unconstitutional as to one man, it is unconstitutional as to all men. If it is unconstitutional from the viewpoint of the Senator from Texas as to citizens who are not alined with labor unions, it would be likewise unconstitutional when applied to labor unions. On the other hand, according to the view of the Senator from Texas, if it is not wrong, if it is not criminal for a labor union to kill a man, why should it be unlawful for anybody else to kill a man?

The Senator from Texas takes the view that murder is wrong whether it be committed by John Jones or Bill Smith. Murder is wrong whether committed by a man who belongs to a labor union or by a man who does not belong to a labor union. It is wrong whether committed upon a black man by a white man or upon a white man by a black man.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from Texas, of course, understands that the pending bill does not undertake in any way to interfere with the laws with respect to murder. That was clearly stated last night; and there is no purpose whatever under the measure to deal with anything but the crime of lynching. It is quite unnecessary to incorporate in this measure any provision with respect to murder.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the only difference in that respect between the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Texas is that the Senator from Texas thinks that a murder is a murder, whether committed by one man or by three men. He condemns murder in whatever form it comes; and the Senator from Texas has always abhorred and does now abhor the crime of lynching, just as he abhors all other forms of murder. The Senator from Texas is not simply speaking idle words; he has proven them as a public officer time and time again.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question. He states that this bill is intended to deal only with lynching. I should like to ask him to state what is comprehended in the word "lynching"; what is meant by that term?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The purpose of the proposed act is to deal with offenses committed by a mob or unlawful assemblage, as defined in the measure, organized for the purpose of inflicting serious bodily injury or death upon an individual. What I said was that the laws with reference to murder, which inflict severer penalties than those imposed by the pending bill, will be in no sense touched by the proposed legislation.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Texas?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Texas is much better informed in regard to legal matters than am I. I ask him does he know a State in the United States which has not laws against lynching?

Mr. CONNALLY. I know of none, although I have no detailed information as to all.

Mr. GLASS. I know my State has a very severe statute against lynching.

Mr. CONNALLY. And a number of other States have. The Senator from Ohio yesterday called my attention to the fact that the State of Ohio has a strong statute on the subject.

Mr. SMITH. And my State, the State that, I suppose, was the beginning of all this proposed legislation, as it was the first State to secede, not only has a law against lynching but a law which provides for the payment of an indemnity to the family of the person who is lynched.

Mr. GLASS. So does the statute of Virginia provide for such an indemnity, as I recall.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, again referring to the labor angle of this controversy, I wish to submit to the Senator from Colorado a concrete case. In my State a couple of years ago there was a strike of stevedores or longshoremen, or whatever the term is that applies to men who work on the docks. The companies brought in strikebreakers, who were protected by officers, and other men who were on strike organized a group, and there ensued almost a pitched battle, in which one or two men were killed. Under the terms of this bill, with all due deference to the judgment of the Senator from Colorado, it occurs to me that that kind of situation would be covered by the bill. Here was a group of men, more than three; they were organized; they were armed; they went down, and, without knowing which side was to blame, because I do not know, there came about an armed clash; homicide was committed; several men were injured. Why is not that just as much a mob under this bill as any other sort of a mob; and if this bill comprehends other similar acts, why does it not also comprehend that act?

I am not for the measure in any of its provisions, because I wish to leave the exercise of sovereignty with respect to murder and other criminal offenses within the States where they have always resided; but if we are to embrace this doctrine, whether we embrace it now or embrace it at some future time, you are going to set a precedent which will rise up to face you in the years to come, and you will be charged with having set a precedent whereby the Federal Government can go into any State and bring before the bar of justice any private citizen acting in concert with another, in a labor union or out of a labor union, who is charged with any form of violence.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In the case cited by the distinguished Senator from Texas were there subsequent prosecutions for murder?

Mr. CONNALLY. I think so.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator's experience is entirely in line with my own. In every industrial dispute of the type mentioned by him with which I am familiar—and we had one years ago in which hundreds of men were indicted, under a dragnet conspiracy charge, for murder in which they did not participate—in every industrial dispute of that character, my experience is that the charge of murder has been filed against the members of organized labor under State laws.

Mr. CONNALLY. To be sure.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Here is a proposed statute which imposes much less serious penalties, and which would naturally not be resorted to under conditions of that sort, because the purpose in an industrial dispute, under the customary facts, would be to promote better industrial conditions and not to injure or kill by lynching, as provided for by the bill under consideration.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator from Colorado a question. If one man is killed by a mob which is composed of labor strikers or sympathizers and another man is killed by another mob which has no relation to labor, why should not the same rule apply to both? Why is it a crime in the one case and not a crime in the other case?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The purpose of the particular measure is, of course, to deal with a community form of lawlessness which everybody in the country, as the Senator well knows, recognizes under the title of "lynching." That type of community offense promoted by certain psychological factors which are familiar to courts, lawyers, and to the general public, is the crime which is to come under the ban of the proposed legislation. Its terms are moderate. There is no reason to resort to it in any case in which murder is duly and appropriately charged.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator from Colorado is correct, though I do not think he is, does he mean to say that wherever the State indicts a mob, or any member of a mob, for murder, then the bill would not apply?

Mr. COSTIGAN. That was not my intended statement. My statement is that if a mob has been organized to lynch a man and a sufficient number of people participate in the offense, as defined in the bill, the bill would apply; but under the ordinary laws with respect to murder, the ordinary processes of the State courts would be utilized and a conviction for a much graver offense in terms of punishment would undoubtedly be sought by the constituted authorities.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the vice in the attitude of the Senator from Colorado, as it is the vice in the attitude of many others who propose departures from our well-known balances between the States and the Federal Government, is that he proposes to give the Federal Government the power to determine when the State has properly punished people, and if the State has properly proceeded then the Federal Government will not intervene. Does not the Senator from Colorado see that the power to decide when and how the State government has performed its function is the power to oust the State completely, because it is a power to decide when the Federal Government shall intervene?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I cannot follow the argument of the Senator from Texas. Of course, the State has its laws, and for a violation of those laws the State authorities have absolute power; but if a Federal law which has been or can be enacted would give the Federal Government control, then a violation of the Federal law would be a separate offense. It would be an offense against another jurisdiction. I do not see how the State could be ousted of its jurisdiction at all.

Mr. CONNALLY. I regret that it is impossible for the Senator from Kentucky to follow the Senator from Texas.

Mr. LOGAN. I meant on that point only.

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not mean to intimate that the Senator would follow the Senator from Texas on every point. Aside from that, of course, the Senator from Texas recognizes that within its proper sphere the Federal Government may enact any law within its constitutional power, and such a law operates directly on the citizen. It does not operate through the State as a subdivision of the Federal Government. It operates directly on the citizen, and the citizen is amenable to the Federal Government.

The State within its proper sphere may enact a law. It operates, not through the counties but directly upon the citizen himself. He owes two allegiances. There are two responsibilities. For instance, the Federal Government levies income taxes. We do not apportion those taxes to the States, but those taxes operate on every citizen of the Republic, and that obligation is an obligation which he owes to Washington. The State may levy an income tax or other tax, and it operates on the citizen directly in its own way.

When it comes to a criminal law, if the crime is one over which the United States Government has jurisdiction to deal, the citizen is guilty or not guilty, as the facts may indicate. For instance, the Federal Government had a prohibition law and the States had prohibition laws. If a man sold liquor in violation of both laws, he could be punished twice. Why? Because he owed the obligation to the Federal Government to observe its law; and when he violated the Federal law, he was punishable in a Federal court. If by the same act he violated the law of Virginia or the law of Nebraska on the liquor question, he was subject then to punishment in the State courts, and the Federal conviction could not be urged as a bar.

Does the Senator from Kentucky agree with that view?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I never heard a clearer statement of the law as it really is than has just been made by the Senator from Texas. There is no ousting of jurisdiction of the State court, as I understood the Senator to say a while ago. It is simply a punishment for violation of a Federal law which belongs to the Federal courts, and a punishment for a violation of a State law which belongs to the State courts. The Senator has very correctly explained it, and I am entirely satisfied on that point.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator very kindly. I think that is the most sweeping approval I have ever had from any of the higher courts. [Laughter.]

The Senator from Kentucky states that murder is now an act against the law of the State. Of course it is. The Senator from Kentucky contends that if the Federal Government has the power, it may also come along and enact a law which makes that same offense punishable again by the Federal Government. Of course, that is true if the Federal Government has the constitutional power. My contention is, and I hope to demonstrate, not by my edict, not by my fiat, but by the solemn pronouncements of the Supreme Court of the United States, that the Federal Government has not now jurisdiction to do that thing, and never had it under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

To vindicate what the Senator from Texas said a moment ago, if the State indicts and punishes a man for a violation of a State law relating to the crime of murder or personal injury to an individual, he is acquitted or he is convicted, as the case may be.

If the Federal Government can come along after that has transpired and try him again for the same offense, is not that in essence at least an ouster of the jurisdiction of the State? Suppose he is acquitted by the State court. He may then be haled into court and tried for the same crime, for the same murder.

Oh, no; I am in error. That may be done if there are more than three involved. If only one man murders another, the Federal Government, according to the bill now before us, is not concerned with whether the fourteenth amendment has been violated; but if more than three people murder a man, then and then only will the Federal Government seek to vindicate the rights and powers of the citizen under the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. GLASS and Mr. COSTIGAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will yield first to the Senator from Virginia, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. GLASS. Does not the Constitution of the United States provide that a man shall not be twice placed in jeopardy of his life for the same offense?

Mr. CONNALLY. It does. I shall say to the Senator from Virginia in all fairness, that according to my conception of the Federal Constitution that provision relates only to the power of the Federal Government; in other words, the Federal Government shall not put him in jeopardy twice for the same offense.

I believe the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] will agree with me in that statement. The reason why I say that is that all the limitations in the Constitution of the United States, except where it is plainly evident to the contrary, are limitations on the Federal power and not on the State power, except in those cases where it provides that no State shall do this and no State shall do that. The other limitations on governmental power, generally speaking, are limitations on the Federal power.

Mr. GLASS. Has there ever been any determination of that question in the courts? For instance, if a man should be tried for murder in Texas and acquitted, and an attempt were made to reindict him and try him again, would there not be an appeal to the Supreme Court on that constitutional question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know for the moment of any case exactly like that which the Senator suggests, but I will say that the Federal court might inquire as to whether or not the State had jurisdiction of the offense. If it found that it had jurisdiction, it would not go any further; it would stop right there. I think I am correct in that. I will say to the Senator from Virginia, however, that there are cases defining the scope of the clause as to right of trial by jury, as guaranteed in the Constitution.

Mr. GLASS. Does that mean only trial by jury in the Federal courts?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is guaranteed to the citizen only in the Federal courts. I will ask the Senator from Idaho if that is not true?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. For instance, there are police courts in many States, I understand, that have no juries, and a man cannot obtain a jury trial. That is not held to be a violation of the Federal guaranty of a jury trial. The Federal guaranty of a jury trial means that no citizen of the United States shall be tried by the Federal Government without having the right to a trial by jury. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that I think I am correct in that.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In the course of the very enlightening discussion of the Senator from Texas, will he be good enough at some time to state whether he was opposed to the Lindbergh kidnaping law; and whether, at the time of its enactment, he interposed the objections he is now making with respect both to its possible application to members of organized labor and its possible invasion of State sovereignty?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas does not remember how he voted on the Lindbergh kidnaping bill; but let us assume he voted for it. I assume he did. That is wholly a different case in this respect: The Lindbergh kidnaping law was applicable only in cases where the criminals transported the kidnaped person across State lines. While I have never agreed to many of the extreme views of those who contend that under the commerce clause of the Constitution the Federal Government can do almost anything it desires, I feel that the Senator from Colorado will recognize the fact that the interstate-kidnaping law was based solely and alone upon the theory, at least, that the Federal Government, under the commerce clause, had the right to enact that legislation.

For instance, it will be remembered that the Mann Act, a criminal act, was upheld upon the same theory, though the courts afterward held that the question of commerce was not necessarily involved in all cases.

Mr. President, I desire now to read the fourteenth amendment. I should like to have the Senator from Colorado hear this:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State—

Listen to this. Upon whom is this injunction laid? Is it laid upon the individual? The injunctions of the fourteenth amendment are laid upon the States. It is a limitation upon the powers of the State government, speaking through its legislature and its governor.

No State shall make—

I shall be glad if the Senator from Colorado will listen to the reading of the fourteenth amendment.

No State shall make or enforce—any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State—

What?—

Who? Any State—

nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law——

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me conclude this. I was afraid the Senator had not read all of this amendment.

nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

I now yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I request the able Senator from Texas to read the remarks I made yesterday on this subject, which are contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this morning? In those remarks I undertook to discuss the very question to which he is now directing my attention, and cited decisions of the Supreme Court explaining the significance of the language he has just read.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be glad to read the Senator's speech, although I heard him when he made it; but I shall read it if the Senator desires. I know I shall enjoy it again, and remain as much unconvinced after I shall have read it as I was when I heard it.

Mr. President, my contention is that under the fourteenth amendment no power is conferred to enact this measure. Let us see about it.

All of us are familiar with the history of the fourteenth amendment. It was intended to lay a prohibition on all the States of the Union against passing laws which might discriminate between citizens of the United States. It also provided—it was affirmative in one sense, and negative in the other—that no State should deny the equal protection of the laws.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator may recall the history of the fourteenth amendment, to the effect that at the time the amendment was framed there was an attempt to make the jurisdiction of the National Government apply to individuals.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly. I am coming to that.

Mr. BORAH. But that was rejected, and the amendment was confined entirely to action upon the part of the States.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly. I thank the Senator from Idaho. I know the Senator from Idaho is entirely familiar with all the decisions and the history of the fourteenth amendment, and I welcome his contribution to this debate.

In connection with the observation of the Senator from Idaho, I desire to cite some of the transactions at the time of the adoption of the fourteenth amendment.

Thaddeus Stevens, of Pennsylvania, reported the resolution. I am sure no one could be any more zealous on this subject than Thaddeus Stevens, of Pennsylvania. He had a right to entertain his views, just as the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New York have a right to entertain theirs.

Mr. Stevens, in reporting from the Committee on Reconstruction the first section containing the equal-protection clause, used the language I am about to read; and I invoke it here now, back from the land of shades, to contradict and confute the attitude of the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New York:

The Constitution limits only the action of Congress—

He is speaking now of the original Constitution, and this is a partial answer to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The Constitution limits only the action of Congress, and is not a limitation on the States. This amendment—

The fourteenth amendment—

supplies that defect and allows Congress to correct—the unjust legislation of the States, so far that the law which operates upon one man shall operate equally upon all. Whatever law punishes a white man for a crime shall punish the black man precisely in the same way and to the same degree.

What?—

That bears witness to what the Senator from Idaho has said, that the original fourteenth amendment was intended to operate as a limitation upon the acts of the State itself, and not upon individuals. The decisions of the courts following that bear out that statement.

Let me quote James G. Blaine—a man who, as he walked across the stage of public life in America, shed an intellectual luster all about him. What did Mr. Blaine say?

James G. Blaine was a Member of the Congress when the fourteenth amendment was proposed. In his "Twenty Years in Congress" he clearly expresses his view of the purpose and scope of the amendment. These are his words regarding the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments:

Both of those amendments operate as inhibitions upon the power of the State and do not have reference to those irregular acts of the people which find no authorization in the public statutes.

He was thinking of the very things which the Senator from Colorado now says should be prohibited in this bill. Mr. Blaine, who was in the Congress when the amendment was submitted, says that the fourteenth amendment does not confer any power to deal with the irregular acts of individuals which are here sought to be prohibited; that it is purely a limitation upon the power of the States.

Further quoting Mr. Blaine:

The defect in both amendments, insofar as their main object of securing rights to the colored man is involved, lies in the fact that they don't operate directly upon the people.

I should be happy if the Senator from Colorado would listen to James G. Blaine instead of counselors not so wise or so well informed as that great statesman.

The defect in both amendments, insofar as their main object of securing rights to the colored man is involved, lies in the fact that they don't operate directly upon the people, and therefore Congress is not endowed with the pertinent and applicable power to give redress.

James G. Blaine, after he had passed from the stage of public life, while he was writing his Twenty Years in Congress, after the passions and the tumult had passed away, in setting down for Americans a story of the wonderful period in which he lived, placed there his interpretation of the purpose of and the power of the Government under the fourteenth amendment.

Under that statement of Mr. Blaine, the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New York can find no authority for this particular legislation.

Mr. President, we are not without the aid of the construction of the courts. The position of myself and some other Senators does not rest only upon the flimsy foundation of our own personal predilections. We have warrant for our attitude in the sanctions of the highest court of this land.

The fourteenth amendment was first exhaustively treated by the Supreme Court in the Slaughter House cases, with which all Senators who have given attention to the law are of course familiar. It will be remembered that in those cases, through a claim based upon the fourteenth amendment, it was sought to overturn an act of the State of Louisiana and administrative acts thereunder seeking to regulate slaughterhouses in and adjacent to the city of New Orleans. It was strongly urged that such acts discriminated against certain citizens theretofore engaged in such business, and therefore were violative of the amendment.

> Was it the purpose of the fourteenth amendment by the simple declaration that no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the United States (I will add, "Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law") to transfer the security and protection of all the civil rights which we have mentioned from the States to the Federal Government? And where it is declared that Congress shall have the power to enforce that article, was it intended to bring within the power of Congress the entire domain of civil rights heretofore belonging exclusively to the States?

That is the question the Court propounds to itself. I may remind Senators that if the Congress has power to pass the bill now being considered, relating to some rights of an individual under the fourteenth amendment, then it has the right to go in and to assert the right to see that every citizen, as to all of his rights—property rights, personal rights, and rights of every other kind—shall be brought within at least the supervision of the Federal Government over State control.

I quote further from what the Supreme Court said, and I ask Senators to listen to the language. I said a moment ago that my construction was that if the action contemplated could be taken with regard to personal injury it could be taken with regard to any other civil right which a citizen might possess. The Court said:

> All this and more—

All this and more!

> All this and more must follow if the proposition of the plaintiff be sound.
> For not only are these rights subject to the control of Congress whenever in its discretion any of them are supposed to be abridged by State legislation, but that body may also pass laws in advance limiting and restricting the exercise of power by the States in their most ordinary and usual functions, as in its judgment it may think proper on all such subjects, and still further, such construction would constitute this Court a perpetual censor upon all legislation of the States on the civil rights of their own citizens, with authority to nullify such as it did not approve, as consistent with those rights as existed at the time of the adoption of this amendment. The argument, we admit, is not always the most conclusive which is drawn from the consequences urged against the adoption of a particular construction of an instrument. But when, as in the case before us, these consequences are so serious, so far-reaching and pervading, so great a departure from the structure and spirit of our institutions, when the effect is to fetter and degrade—

I hope the Senator from Colorado will note this—

> When the effect is to fetter and degrade the State governments by subjecting them to the control of Congress in the exercise of powers heretofore universally conceded to them of the most ordinary and fundamental character, when in fact it radically changes the whole theory of the relations of the State and Federal Governments to each other and of both these governments to the people, the argument has a force that is irresistible in the absence of language which expresses such a purpose too clearly to admit of doubt.

What else did the Court say with regard to personal rights? I quote:

> It would be the vainest show of learning to prove by citation of authority that up to the adoption of the recent amendments (thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth) no claim was set up that those rights depended on the Federal Government for their existence or protection beyond the very express limitations which the Federal Constitution imposed on the States, such, for instance, as the prohibition against ex post facto laws, bills of attainder, and laws impairing the obligation of contracts. But with the exception of these and a few other restrictions the entire domain of privileges of citizens of the States, as above defined, lay within the constitutional and legislative powers of the State and without that of the Federal Government.

If at the time this decision was rendered the powers lay without the Federal Constitution, when did they come within the Federal Constitution? No amendment, no change, no modification, no alteration of that instrument with regard to these particular matters has ever taken place. The Supreme Court has said that under the fourteenth amendment no such power exists.

Mr. President, the decision from which I have been reading was in the Slaughterhouse cases. Other cases decided, dealing with legislation enacted shortly after the war between the States, were in point. It will be remembered that the Federal Government enacted legislation known as the "civil-rights bill", which sought to guarantee to all citizens of the United States certain rights which the States had to respect. Cases involving that law went to the Supreme Court. The decisions appear in volume 109 of the Supreme Court Reports, at page 3. What did the Court there hold?

It was clearly and convincingly laid down that the prohibitions of the fourteenth amendment were directed at State action and not individual action; that the denial of "equal protection of the laws" meant denial by the State, that abridgment of privileges of citizens must be made by a State and not by its individual citizens before it could be brought within the denunciation of the Constitution.

It was with like clarity pointed out that denial to colored people of accommodations equal to those furnished to whites by railways, theaters, and hotels was not denial thereof by the State but was denial only by individuals.

Mr. President, I quote a portion of the Court's opinion:

> It is State action of a particular character that is prohibited.

State action, not State inaction, not State failure to do something. In other words, the States must affirmatively do something through its regular agencies, through its legislature, or through its Governor, before the inhibition can be invoked.

> It is State action of a particular character that is prohibited. Individual invasion of individual rights is not the subject matter of the amendment. It has a deeper and broader scope. It nullifies and makes void all State legislation and State action of every kind which impairs the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States or which injures them in life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or which denies to any of them the equal protection of the law.

In other words, the State must do some act itself which impinges upon the guaranties before the fourteenth amendment has any application. Again quoting:

> To adopt appropriate legislation for correcting the effects of such prohibited State laws—

The Congress under this decision has only the power to enact such legislation as may nullify or render ineffective State law which violates the guaranty which is secured by the fourteenth amendment.

> To adopt appropriate legislation for correcting the effects of such prohibited State laws and State acts and thus to render them ineffectually null, void, and innocuous. This is the legislative power conferred upon the Congress, and this is the whole of it.

Mr. President, I should like to have that language of the Supreme Court set down in the RECORD, and I should like to have it engraved there, with a border around it, so the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New York, who is so interested in this legislation that he comes into the Senate and reads a prepared address and then immediately leaves, should be forced to see it. He will never hear it by listening to the Senator from Texas nor will he read his remarks in the RECORD. I should like to have it emblazoned there so that, in turning the pages of the RECORD, he could not fail to see it. This is what the Supreme Court said:

To adopt appropriate legislation for correcting the effects of such prohibited State laws and State acts and thus to render them ineffectually null, void, and innocuous. This is the legislative power conferred upon the Congress, and this is the whole of it.

The Supreme Court of the United States says that the only power which Congress possesses under the fourteenth amendment is the power to pass Federal legislation making ineffective, innocuous, and void such acts of the State legislature or of the governor as are in violation of the fourteenth amendment. Mr. President, when that is all the power which is possessed, whence comes this marvelous power to enact the proposed bill? What law of a State is being complained of here? I challenge the Senator from Colorado, I challenge the Senator from New York to go and search the statutes and the constitutions of all the States in the Union and bring back a statute which violates the fourteenth amendment. Of course, not only the courts but the Congress would have the power to make such statute ineffective and void. The Supreme Court says that that is the whole power which the Congress possesses.

I will quote further from the Supreme Court, and I hope some of the Senators who are so deeply concerned with this legislation might listen. The Senator from Colorado has departed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Johnson	Pittman
Ashurst	Coolidge	Keyes	Pope
Austin	Copeland	King	Radcliffe
Bachman	Costigan	La Follette	Robinson
Bailey	Couzens	Lewis	Russell
Bankhead	Cutting	Logan	Schall
Barbour	Dickinson	Lonergan	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Dieterich	Long	Sheppard
Bilbo	Donahey	McAdoo	Shipstead
Black	Duffy	McCarran	Smith
Bone	Fletcher	McGill	Steiwer
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Gerry	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	Gibson	Metcalf	Trammell
Bulow	Glass	Minton	Truman
Burke	Gore	Moore	Vandenberg
Byrd	Guffey	Murphy	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hale	Murray	Wagner
Capper	Harrison	Neely	Walsh
Caraway	Hastings	Norris	Wheeler
Carey	Hatch	O'Mahoney	White
Clark	Hayden	Overton

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, when interrupted, I was quoting from the decision of the Supreme Court in the civil-rights cases. I shall continue that quotation. This is the language of the Court:

It is absurd to affirm that because the rights of life, liberty, and property (which includes all civil rights that men have) are by the amendment sought to be protected against invasion on the part of the States without due process of law, Congress may therefore provide due process of law for their vindication in every case.

The Supreme Court says that such a contention is absurd. Quoting again:

And that because the denial by a State to any persons of equal protection of the laws is prohibited by the amendment, therefore, Congress may establish laws for their equal protection.

The Supreme Court, in the civil-rights cases, held that the guaranty was as against acts by the States and that it was absurd to contend that under that guaranty the Federal Government could take over the jurisdiction of vindicating the rights of the citizen in individual cases.

Quoting again:

If this legislation is appropriate for enforcing the prohibitions of the amendment, it is difficult to see where it is to stop. Why may not Congress with equal show of authority enact a code of laws for the enforcement and vindication of all rights of life, liberty, and property? If it is supposable that the States may deprive persons of life, liberty, and property without due process of law, and the amendment itself does suppose this, why should not Congress proceed at once to prescribe due process of law for the protection of every one of these fundamental rights in every possible case, as well as to prescribe equal privileges in inns, public conveyances, and theaters?

Mr. President and Senators, the Supreme Court has spoken again in a famous decision with respect to the fourteenth amendment. In Barbier v. Connally (113 U. S. 27), Mr. Justice Field, in vigorous fashion, announces this doctrine:

The fourteenth amendment, in declaring that no State "shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws", undoubtedly intended not only that there should be no arbitrary deprivation of life or liberty or arbitrary spoliation of property but that equal protection and security should be given to all under like circumstances in the enjoyment of their personal and civil rights; that all persons should be equally entitled to pursue their happiness and acquire and enjoy property; that they should have like access to the courts of the country for the protection of their persons and property, the prevention and redress of wrongs, and the enforcement of contracts; that no impediment should be interposed to the pursuits of anyone except as applied to the same pursuits by others under like circumstances; that no greater burdens should be laid upon one than are laid upon others in the same calling and conditions; and that in the administration of criminal justice no different or higher punishment should be imposed upon one than such as is prescribed to all for like offenses. But neither the amendment—

It is Justice Field of the Supreme Court speaking—

But neither the amendment, broad and comprehensive as it is, nor any other amendment, was designed to interfere with the power of the State, sometimes termed its police power, to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people.

Mr. President, an examination of these epoch-making decisions of the Supreme Court should convince any searcher for the truth that the first section of the fourteenth amendment applies only to State action and is a prohibition on State action alone; that it does not add to the rights of individuals against other individuals. This bill deals with individuals. It seeks to hold responsible private individuals for individual acts, whereas the whole theory and basis of the fourteenth amendment is that it acts upon the States and upon State action; and that it does not authorize the Federal Government to invade the domain of rights for whose protection the citizen must look to the State and to prescribe the character or the degree of protection to be vouchsafed such rights.

These decisions announce the doctrine that, so long as the State does not itself by some State action deny equal protection of the laws, the Federal power cannot be invoked, and, in the event of such denial by a State, only that degree of Federal power sufficient to correct the action of the States in violation of the amendment may be invoked. The only affirmative Federal right created by that part of the fourteenth amendment is the right to be exempt from discriminatory action on the part of the State.

Such is the general scope and purpose of the amendment. But to demonstrate that it affords no basis for the pending measure, it will be proper to address our attention to its various sections, because in its revolutionary provisions it seeks to cover a wide territory.

Mr. President, this bill, in its first section, provides—

That the phrase "mob or riotous assemblage" * * * shall mean an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert, without authority of law, for the purpose of killing or injuring any person in the custody of any peace officer or suspected of, charged with, or convicted of the commission of any crime.

By what process of reasoning does it become murder because three men kill another and not murder when two men kill another? On what theory is it suggested that the Government should step in and condemn a crime when committed by three men and should refuse to step in when the same crime has been committed by two men?

Mr. President, in order for this bill to be invoked it is provided that the person assaulted or injured, in one case at least, must be in the custody of a peace officer, or he must be suspected of a crime or charged with or convicted of a crime. Is it giving equal protection of the law to the innocent man who is charged with no crime, who has committed no crime, who has not been arrested and charged with a crime to say that if he is assaulted, if he is attacked by a group of three or more and his life is taken or he is injured, the Federal Government will not step in, whereas if he is charged with a crime, if he has been convicted, the Federal Government will step in and bring him under the ægis of its protection? Is it equality of treatment under the Constitution to give a greater degree of protection to one who has violated the laws of his State, who stands charged with a heinous crime, perhaps, and to deny that same degree of protection to the man whose hands are innocent of his neighbor's blood and whose soul is unspotted by the commission of any crime?

The Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New York say it is not their purpose to include within the provisions of the bill a denunciation of a crime if committed in a labor dispute. Let us see what is the situation the Senators have thus presented.

A man working in a factory, or in a shop, or on a railroad, working to gain a livelihood for his family, committing no crime except the crime of working, is assaulted in a labor dispute by a group of more than three men. His life may be taken, or he may suffer bodily injury. Under the terms of the bill the Federal Government would not step into the case. The Senator from Colorado says the Government should not step into the case. The Senator from New York says the Federal Government should not interfere.

However, if those individuals are not engaged in a labor disturbance, if they are acting through malice or passion, if they are acting through the compelling motive of some private grudge, and three or more of them assault or attack another private individual or kill him, then the Federal Government would step in, hail them into court, and try them under the terms of the bill.

Mr. President, the bill does not content itself with making it a crime for individuals who may come within its terms, but it brings within the condemnation of the court the county in which the offense may be committed. It also brings within the compass of the bill's denunciation the county into which those who are guilty may take the victim. Is it fair or is it just to the innocent taxpayers of a county, who may be in nowise guilty of any offense under the bill or under the State law, to have their county penalized by the assessment of fines and of money penalties because certain lawless individuals may take the life of another individual or may inflict bodily injury upon him?

Our theory of government is that the Federal Government is supreme within its own sphere of action and that the State government is supreme within its sphere of action. When did it become constitutional for the Federal Government to drag into a Federal court a subdivision of a sovereign State and lay heavy penalties upon it? If that be constitutional, then we may try a State in a Federal court, because if we can try one subdivision of a State we can try all the subdivisions of the State, and all the parts being equal to the whole, under the theory of the Senators who offer the legislation the Federal court could arraign at the bar a great sovereign Commonwealth and lay upon it penalties and forfeitures because it had not complied with some Federal rule of action.

How would the fathers who wrote the Constitution and those who took part in the early history of the Republic view any such doctrine declared here in the Senate of the United States?

Mr. President, this is a time in which, beyond the borders of the Capitol, we hear many threats against our form of government. We hear those who would change its structure and perhaps destroy it. Others would modify and revise our institutions. Daily and nightly over the radio and in the public forums we hear various groups of doctrinaires who, taking advantage of public dissatisfaction and of unrest among the body of our people, propose their curious nostrums and their new remedies for the ills which they conceive to be besetting us at this time.

I am not surprised to hear those demands beyond the Capitol but, Mr. President, it is alarming when we have other revolutionary doctrines proclaimed here upon the floor of the United States Senate itself. When Senators rise in the Senate and advocate radical departure from the judicial and political policies of the past, it causes me more disturbance than all the wails and outcries by these misguided and misguiding prophets of evil beyond the precincts of the Capitol.

Mr. President, I do not stand on the floor of the Senate or anywhere else to defend lawlessness or lawbreaking. I deplore lynching as much as does the Senator from New York and as much as does the Senator from Colorado. I am opposed to murder in any form, no matter whence it may come.

Yesterday the Senator from Colorado cited the fact that there are 11 States in the Union which have antilynching laws. In that list the name of Colorado does not appear. In that list the name of New York does not appear. There can be no question of the constitutional power of the State of New York to enact an antilynching law. There can be no question of the power of the State of Colorado to enact such a measure. I am wondering why these distinguished Senators, these eminent lawyers, versed in the constitutional law and history of the United States, have not exerted themselves and devoted their efforts and their labors to securing the enactment by the State of Colorado of an antilynching law? Why has the great sovereign State of New York, standing with its shoulders high above the other States in wealth and population, under its acknowledged powers at the present time enacted no antilynching law? Is it any less a crime if the act should be committed in New York than if it should be committed in the State which I, in part, represent? Is there any sanctity which goes with the soil of Colorado which makes an act good in Colorado and a crime in another jurisdiction?

I submit these suggestions only for the benefit of those who, like myself, are against the violation of law everywhere and at all times.

Mr. President, I believe the enactment of this bill by the Federal Congress would not be of benefit in the eradication of the lynching evil. I believe we have been making progress toward the abolition of lynching; indeed, I know we have been making progress in the section from which I come. As the years go by, as a rule, though there may be some exceptions, the number of lynchings is becoming smaller and smaller. Why is that true? It is because the people are becoming educated to abhor lynching. It is because local officers are having a higher sense of their responsibilities, and the people are holding them to a higher degree of accountability for the discharge of the functions of their offices, one of which, of course, is to protect any man in the custody of an officer.

This is a problem which is not going to be corrected by any mere edict which may be issued here in the Congress. We are making rapid and substantial progress in overcoming the evil of lynching.

Mr. President, last year in the 48 States of the Union only 14 persons were lynched. That is 14 more persons than I wish had been lynched. God knows, I abhor lynching. Fourteen persons in 48 States were lynched; and yet the other day at Rockville a train, plunging along in the darkness, struck a bus and wiped out 14 lives at once—14 human lives—as many in that one accident as were lynched in all the 48 States in an entire year.

Mr. President, I believe the Senator from New York and the Senator from Colorado, however noble their purpose, however benevolent their emotions, are misguided in pressing for the adoption by the Federal Government of this revolutionary method of judicial determination over matters never heretofore within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. Let me point out to them and warn them that the possibilities of this policy are not all comprised within the present bill. We know how, when Congress once embarks upon a new departure or a new policy, it is ever thereafter cited as a precedent for the growing and the spreading and the aggressive advancement of that doctrine. Let me suggest to the Senators that if such a bill shall be enacted by the Congress it will not be long until there will be before the Congress other interests seeking to modify and expand the provisions of this bill. There will be those who will come here and advocate that the Federal Government shall see that in every State of the Union there shall be equal laws with respect to marriage and with respect to divorce, and that under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, which guarantees equality of treatment of all citizens, the Federal Government shall go into the States and see that those laws are according to the pattern and the standard of the Federal Government.

The Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New York today protest that this bill cannot be turned into an instrument by which labor unions or their members can be brought before the Federal courts. If not under its present terms, there will come a time when there will be those who will urge that in order to oust local prejudices, in order to have an impartial arbiter step into the various States and localities, the Federal Government alone can perform those functions, and that in every labor dispute or labor clash the Federal Government shall take jurisdiction in the Federal courts.

Mr. President, there is equal argument, equal authority of reason, equal warrant of logic for that sort of a course as there is for the course to which the Senator from New York and the Senator from Colorado now invite us.

I wish to say that over the years we have made, and we are continuing to make, rapid and splendid improvement with respect to the question of lynching. Last year there were only 14 cases. The year before there were 20, showing an improvement, of course, during 1934. In 1932 there were only 8 cases in the entire United States. How many gang murders were there? How many men were killed in other violent clashes? Many, many times as many as were killed by lynching.

Mr. President, why should the criminals in Chicago, who lined up some seven or eight other gangsters against a brick wall and shot out their lives, go free of this measure? Why should the Federal Government withhold its punishment from those individuals, and yet in some other similar circumstances, because three men act together, bring them into the Federal courts?

Those of us who come from a certain section of the Republic deserve the sympathy of Senators and Representatives from other sections rather than their attitude of hostility. We come from a territory which has problems that you do not have in the same degree, but which you no doubt will have. We have struggled for years with their burdens and with their baffling aspects, and we are trying to meet our responsibilities as citizens of the Republic and as citizens of our States. We hope the Senate will not take up this measure, because we firmly believe not only that it is beyond the power of the Congress, under the Constitution, but that if it were within the constitutional powers of the Congress it would be an unwise course; that it would bring upon us distresses and evils worse than the evils from which the Senators now seek to flee.

Mr. President, again I desire to leave in this RECORD my utter condemnation of lynching anywhere and everywhere. As a citizen of this Republic, I accord to every other citizen of the Republic the same right which I claim for myself; but I do demand that every other citizen give to the Constitution and to our Government the same measure of allegiance and loyalty that he requires of others. I believe it is a short-sighted policy, under the stimulation of expediency, under the plea of some specious theory of necessity, to ask that we shall so twist and contort our conceptions of constitutional powers as to evade the provisions of the Constitution rather than to assert and uphold them.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New York did not themselves entertain serious doubts as to the constitutionality of this measure, why did they spend practically all the time of their discussion in seeking to assert and to establish and vindicate the constitutionality of the measure?

I hope we shall not always be afflicted with the spectacle of Senators and Representatives seeking and devising and scheming and plotting how they can draw legislation so as to go around the Constitution, or under the Constitution, or over the Constitution, rather than that we shall have a House and a Senate whose Members consult the Constitution and desire to enact legislation according to its terms and its provisions, observing its limitations as well as its powers.

Mr. President, it is my view that this bill is unconstitutional. It is my view that it involves an unsound, an unwise departure from the historic policies and traditions of this Republic. So believing and holding such views, I earnestly insist that the Senate of the United States should not, at this juncture of public affairs, delay the consideration of other important legislation of an emergent character to take up and discuss the measure which is the subject of the pending motion.

This is not a new problem. We are advancing and coming closer to a solution as each year rolls around. On the other hand, there are awaiting the action of the Senate and of the House many bills of Nation-wide importance, measures which affect not merely 14 individuals in America but 125,000,000 of our fellow citizens. There awaits action on the extension of the N. R. A. There awaits action on the adjusted-service-certificate bill. The Senate will soon be called upon to enact legislation relating to employment insurance and to old-age pensions.

Mr. President, which is of the greater importance—to do something to afford employment insurance for the great army of Americans who are marching the streets with their hands empty of the implements of toil and of trade, who are without the means of livelihood, or to enact foolish and unwise legislation which might possibly affect a dozen persons within the United States? Which is of more importance—to provide pensions for those who are approaching the period of life when they can no longer provide the necessities of life for themselves and their families or to grieve and mourn over legislation of this character, which can affect only the families of those who have already departed?

Mr. President, I appeal to the Senator from New York, I appeal to the Senator from Colorado, not to consume the time of the Senate by pressing upon it this motion to take up the bill of which they are the authors. I appeal to them not to postpone to the great body of American veterans action on legislation in which they are interested. I appeal to the Senator from New York not to postpone the consideration of his own N. R. A. bill by fruitlessly consuming the hours of the Senate in discussing this motion on such legislation. I appeal to these Senators, and to others, not to fritter away the time of Senators who desire to give consideration to these other measures.

Mr. President, if this were a matter which, according to my conception, was within the constitutional warrant under which Congress may act, the situation would be quite a different one, but, frankly, I believe even then such a course as is urged would be filled with folly.

For almost 150 years we have lived under the Constitution of the United States. During that time we have allowed to the States those things which belonged to the States, and to the Federal Government those things which fell within its jurisdiction under the Constitution itself. We have advanced under the great, guiding direction of the Constitution from a people of three or four million to a great nation of 125,000,000. We have progressed from a narrow little strip of colonies along the Atlantic Coast to a great Republic which reaches westward 3,000 miles, to touch the waters of another sea.

Mr. President, we have stretched our borders from the Atlantic seaboard, through the Louisiana Purchase, out to the great territory of the Northwest. Through annexation of the Republic of Texas, and other acquisitions of territory as a result of the War with Mexico, our domain and empire have reached out to kiss the waters of the Pacific, and have extended along its shores to where they meet the waters of the Columbia.

We have advanced from a poor, humble, and obscure Republic until today we occupy, perhaps, the place of greatest eminence in all the family of the nations which rule this revolving globe of ours.

Have not our people prospered under our system? Have not the institutions of the United States come to be admired, imitated, and, I might say, adored, by the people of every section of the earth who have aspired to self-government and republican institutions?

My plea to Senators today is to leave this old system of ours alone. Let the Federal Government retain jurisdiction over the things which are Federal. Let the States, within their sovereign powers, control the things which belong to the States.

The Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly said that such powers as those sought to be granted under the bill we are discussing fall within the exclusive jurisdiction of State authority. Let us leave them there. Let us leave intact the balance between the Federal and the State authority. Let us teach the citizens of the State that responsibility goes with power and authority, and let us strengthen those ideas of responsibility. Let us give greater fiber and toughness to the campaign of education which has already made such a great advance, and we shall in time, as nearly as any people can meet any question, as nearly as any people can be perfect in any regard, solve most of the evils at which the bill is supposed to be directed.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I am anxious to say a word in behalf of Senate bill 24, the so-called "Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill." I am whole-heartedly in favor of this proposed legislation, for lynching is nothing more than mob murder. It is an anarchistic assault on sovereignty, and represents a temporary overthrow of the State government. President Wilson characterized lynching as vitally affecting the "honor of the Nation and the very character and integrity of our institutions." Under those circumstances, I believe the Federal Government has a right, indeed, a duty, to step in and to assure that the rights guaranteed under the Constitution shall be preserved.

I cannot bring myself to feel any sympathy in this instance for those who rest their opposition to the antilynching bill on the question of State rights, greatly as I believe in the preservation of State rights. I believe that it is demonstrable that those States in which this issue is more frequently raised are the same States which are leaning most heavily on the Federal Government for financial assistance in meeting the ravages of the depression in their cases. It seems to me that if these States are willing that the Federal Government should assume by far the greatest responsibility in taking care of their unfortunate, that they should not be too insistent on denying the constitutional rights of court trial and ordered justice to their own citizens. I have before me a table showing the proportion of Federal aid to a number of these States, many of whose representatives are the most vigorous in opposing the antilynching bill, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of these remarks.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

BEQUEST OF OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand that there is on the desk a message from the President of the United States. I ask that it be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on the Library, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

The Congress is aware that Mr. Justice Holmes bequeathed his residuary estate to the Government of his country. It is the gift of one who in war and in peace devoted his life to its service. Clearly he thereby sought, with a generous emphasis, to mark the full measure of his faith in those principles of freedom and justice which the country was founded to preserve.

I shall, I think, be interpreting aright the feeling of the country and the wishes of the Congress if I suggest that this striking gift be devoted to some purpose worthy of the great man who gave it. Mr. Justice Holmes was fond of saying that we live by symbols. Our fellow citizens of this generation would, I am confident, desire the Congress to translate this gift into a form that may serve as a permanent impulse for the maintenance of the deepest tradition that Mr. Justice Holmes embodied.

That tradition was a faith in the creative possibilities of the law. For him law was an instrument of just relations between man and man. With an insight into its history that no American scholar has surpassed; with a capacity to mold ancient principles to present needs, unique in range and remarkable in prophetic power; with a grasp of its significance as the basis upon which the purposes of men are shaped, Mr. Justice Holmes sought to make the jurisprudence of the United States fulfill the great ends our Nation was established to accomplish. Our generation will not soon forget, as the learned the world over will long remember, his extraordinary achievements as judge, as historian, and as philosopher of the law.

The Congress will, I am sure, agree that it is fitting to utilize this opportunity to remind those who will come after us of our sense of the eminence of Mr. Justice Holmes. In so doing we do not merely commemorate the distinction of an American to whom the whole world has paid tribute. We also mark for posterity our pride in his faith in American democracy, his confidence in the power of our legal institutions to realize, when rightly used, the highest American ideals. Posterity which learns the significance of a life such as that of Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., draws inspiration from its understanding.

I therefore commend to the Congress that the bequest of Mr. Justice Holmes be not covered into the general fund of the Treasury but that it be set aside in a special fund at this time, and at a later date be devoted to purposes which will effectively promote the contributions which law can make to the national welfare. Once it is decided that the Holmes bequest be set apart for special use the precise object may await ample deliberation. A select committee of the Congress, acting in collaboration with a committee of the Supreme Court of the United States, will doubtless evolve the wisest uses to which this noble bequest should be put.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 25, 1935.

PREVENTION OF LYNCHING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. COSTIGAN to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 24) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing, and punishing the crime of lynching.

Mr. BAILEY obtained the floor.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Hale	McKellar	Schall

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the pending bill proposes to extend the power of the Federal Government to the supervision of the administration of the criminal laws in the several States. I wish to dwell upon that sentence. It is proposed here, in the Congress of this Republic, so far to depart from all conceptions heretofore entertained concerning the character of the Republic, the limitations upon its powers, and the rights of the States, that we calmly consider a measure the avowed purpose of which, in plain language, is to extend the Federal power to the supervision of the execution or administration of criminal laws in the several States.

It is unnecessary for me to say, Mr. President, that when the Republic was created and the Constitution formed there was not one human being in all the land who dreamed that, in the remotest degree, such a proposal would ever be made in the Congress of the United States.

I say with some pride, but with nothing of invidious spirit, that I have the honor to represent a Commonwealth which was in existence before the Republic of the United States was created. North Carolina was a State before the United States was a political entity.

While the Constitution begins in its preamble, "We, the people of the United States", the character of the Convention and the signatories to the Constitution very clearly leave no doubt of the fact that the Thirteen Original States created this Union. They were creators and they are not creatures. They have their rights duly reserved. Although they have been limited in one way or another from time to time they still consider their rights as sacred, and I myself, as a Senator from the Commonwealth of North Carolina, consider it my highest duty, not only under my oath here, to preserve and maintain the Constitution, but under the obligation of the great trust reposed in me by the people of North Carolina, to see to it that all the rights which remain shall be preserved, so far as I am capable of seeing to it.

I am not going to argue on this occasion the constitutional aspects of this question. I do intend, if this debate shall be prolonged, to make a careful review of the cases, and on a subsequent occasion frankly to discuss the constitutional aspects of the question.

I shall be content to say now that the Constitution is the supreme law of the country and is the law of the Senate. We may change our laws. We may repeal the laws which are and create new laws, but we have no power to change the Constitution. It is the contract between the Union and the States; also the contract between the Union and the people.

Mr. GORE. We can mob the Constitution.

Mr. BAILEY. The junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], my honored friend, who has a long seniority here in many ways, who sees much more deeply than any others of us here—and I thank God for his sight—suggests that we may "mob the Constitution." I hope not, Mr. President. We may assault it, but the Constitution will be here when all those who would "mob" it are dissolved into the dust from which they came, and who by the dissolution dishonor the ordinary earth in which they are buried.

The Constitution is the law of the Senate and the law of the Senators. Thus far and no farther shalt thou go. I have always been deeply impressed with the fact that when one presents himself here with his certificate from his State, the door is still closed upon him and he has no seat, he has no voice, he has no vote until, with uplifted hand, he has taken oath before the God of the nations that he will protect, maintain, and uphold the Constitution of the United States.

That is the essential, that is the final consummation in the creation of a Senator. Without it he cannot be a Senator. That is written into the bond of the national life, to protect the people in their rights from ignorant men who might get here, from designing men who might usurp power here. That is also to protect the rights of the States of the Union in the powers reserved to those States. That is written and that is recorded also in order to define the limits and to express and determine the powers of the great Central Government which we call the Federal Union. Knowing the power of government, the people limited this one by a solemn covenant between it and themselves.

Mr. President, I read with some care the address on yesterday of one of the coauthors of the proposed legislation, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN]. With all tolerance, and of course with all respect, I cannot conceive how an American citizen could get out of this scene in which we have lived and this history since 1789—how he could have lived in America and believed that the Federal Union could be given power to supervise the administration of criminal law in a sovereign State.

I said I was not going to speak now on the constitutional aspects. I am not going to speak on the proposed legislation from the standpoint of race or section. I come from the South. If I had to be born a million times I should pray that I might be born in the South. I come from a Southern State, with a southern experience. If I had a thousand fates, Mr. President, I should like for each of them to be cast in the State in which I have been cast. I am glad I am a son of a Confederate soldier. I am glad that he and his little family—myself born 8 years after the surrender—lived through the long and trying period that followed. It was bad enough; but there is a heritage in it, an unspeakable heritage. I would not have it otherwise. I would not exchange it.

I am glad that my lot was cast in a land in which I was thrown in contact with those whom we call the "colored people." There are some of them who prefer to be called "Negroes", and I could not quarrel about that. I believe most of them would prefer to be called "colored people." Certainly, as I use the expression, I do not use it with any intention to wound their feelings but only to speak in the terms which have been common between themselves and myself this long time.

I have no prejudices against the colored people. I have nothing but good will for the colored people. I have no other feeling in my heart but a desire to help the colored people. They are human beings, made in the image of God, entitled to human sympathy and to human help.

My State has no prejudices against the colored people. We had a terrible conflict in North Carolina in 1898 in which we undertook to settle a very essential question there, and for a period the races were in a way marshaled one against another. We nominated a great man for Governor on the Democratic ticket, Charles B. Aycock. His monument is here in the rotunda. His monument is on the capitol grounds at Raleigh. When he received his nomination at the hands of his party, I was present. He said:

> Now we are going to have white supremacy in North Carolina. We are going to pass the constitutional amendments. We are going to take charge of this Commonwealth.

Then he lifted his hand to heaven and said:

> God helping us, I swear you all that with regard to the colored people of this Commonwealth we will execute judgment in righteousness!

That is the spirit of North Carolina. We have executed judgment in righteousness. The courts in my State are just to the colored man as they are to the white man. I would not offend my good friends the Senator from New York and the Senator from Colorado, but insofar as a Senator courteously may resent an imputation I resent the imputation on the face of this bill that my State is not capable of executing judgment in righteousness with respect to the humblest, the most miserable representative of either the white or the colored race; and I observe with some pride, but with no disposition to offend or to be unkind, that my State has a law against lynching and against mobs, while the State of New York and the State of Colorado do not have such laws. With all due respect, these Senators might sweep before their own doors before they undertake to bring a Federal mob across the threshold of the courts of justice in the Commonwealth of North Carolina.

Mr. President, this bill is not going to pass. I do not wish to be arrogant about that, or to seem to be arrogant; but it is not going to pass. We will be here all summer; we will fight it out on this line, as General Grant said, if it takes all summer. We are not going to permit the power of the Federal Government to be extended over the administration of the criminal laws in the Commonwealth of North Carolina; and that is no threat. There is a way. We will speak night and day, and if the authors of the bill charge us with responsibility for delaying the consideration of the present program, I will put so much of it upon them as I think I can, but all that I cannot I will take, and I will not flinch about it.

This matter transcends a great many matters that we have considered important. It transcends race, and it transcends section. It strikes directly at the heart of American civilization. It divides, in terms that I could almost welcome, the course which has been more or less of a misty character here of late. We will either preserve the rights of the States, or we will go ahead and extend the Federal power, as has been sought, first by way of stretching the interstate-commerce clause, as Senators will bear witness, by the use of subtle words, by way of "affecting" or "in anywise relating to" interstate commerce, and that sort of thing, until we have a Federal supervision over every civil activity in America, and then complete the transformation not with the camel's nose but with the camel itself—the camel of Federal control over the administration of the criminal laws of the Commonwealths of this country.

Mr. President, that is a battle worth fighting. Without at all seeming to be heroic, that is a battle worth dying in; and, to be perfectly candid, that is a battle worth fighting out if we have to be here until the Congress meets again in January 1936. That is fair notice.

I had a little note down here on my pamphlet by way of memorandum, "The South believes in law." I shall not argue it. I would no more argue that than I would argue my own character. One of the Senators said here just now that he was opposed to mob law. Without reproaching him, if anybody wishes to interpret my attitude here in opposition to this bill as indicating that I am for mob law, he is welcome to do it, but he will not do it in my presence. There are things not to be argued, not to be pleaded. I have no apologies, no defenses, to make. I know where I stand on this matter, and I know my feet are on the solid rock of the character of the American Republic and the character of the Commonwealth of North Carolina.

Again, Mr. President, there is no necessity for this proposed legislation even if it were tolerable. There is no justification for it, and I have the facts here which will show it. I can almost believe the facts would convince my distinguished and honored friend the junior Senator from the State of New York [Mr. WAGNER], who sits beside me. I lay it down as an incontrovertible proposition that there is no justification in the facts for any such law, even conceding it to be constitutional and not abhorrent to our hearts.

Now let me read you the facts.

I have here a statement, not prepared under my authority but under the authority of the Tuskegee Institute of Alabama, the institution made famous by Booker Washington, and now presided over by Dr. Moton. I wrote to him to tell me the truth about all this matter. I did not take the information from what might be called "the white man's side"; I let the institution representing the Negro race in the South give me the facts. Let us see what they are.

This is headed "Lynchings, whites and Negroes, 1882–1934. (Revised report, Jan. 7, 1935.)"

In 1882 there were 64 whites lynched in the United States and 49 Negroes, making a total of 113.

In 1885, 110 whites were lynched and 74 Negroes, making a total of 184.

Mr. GORE. The Senator skipped 1883 and 1884.

Mr. BAILEY. I have a table showing the numbers down to date, and I shall ask to have it printed in the RECORD, but in the interest of time I am just running along to show the general trend.

In 1890, 11 whites were lynched and 85 Negroes, or a total of 96.

There was a great drop for some reason from 170 in 1889 to 96 in 1890.

In 1893, 34 whites were lynched and 117 Negroes, making a total of 151.

In the year prior to that, strange to say, there were 231 lynchings—69 whites and 162 Negroes. The peak figure was in 1892.

Eight years in the other century and 34 in this makes 42 years, and in all those 42 years—and I will ask Senators to watch the figures—the record shows lynchings as follows:

1893	151
1894	192
1895	179
1897	158
1902	92
1903	99
1904	83

Let us take the decade of 1920:

1920	60
1921	62
1922	57
1923	33
1924	16
1925	17
1926	30
1927	16
1928	11
1929	10
1930	21
1931	13
1934	15

If the American people had made as much progress about everything else as they have made about this, there would be no necessity for any laws about any of the things about which we have been legislating.

Mr. FLETCHER. Do those figures cover the whole country?

Mr. BAILEY. I have been giving the figures as to the whole country.

Remember my point: there is no necessity for legislation in this matter. Where civilization is moving forward as rapidly as is shown, there is every reason to fear that if the American Congress interferes with a progress as beneficent and as constant as that, there will be a back step that will cost us 50 years in progress.

Mr. President, I submit that thought to the Senate. I am arguing now the merits of the question. Why should there be a demand for the Federal Government to put upon us such a law as is proposed—and I shall expound the bill before I get through; it will never be a law—why should the Government put upon us such a bill as this when, beginning with 211 lynchings in 1884, when I was 11 years of age, the number dropped to only 8 in 1931, and to only 15 in 1934? Why should anybody be enacting laws to hasten a progress as fine as that within one lifetime?

Let Senators figure it up themselves. There were 15 lynchings last year, in a population of 126,000,000 people. That is all there were. I say to the Senate that in the same period there have been 15 of every sort of thing in the United States. If we are to enact a Federal law to put an end to a condition under which there were 15 lynchings amongst 126,000,000 people in 1 year, then we will have a lot of Federal laws to enact.

Mr. President, I am not defending lynching. I have not the slightest disposition to defend lynching. My record is well written about that matter; but I am not going to argue it. If anyone wishes to think that I am capable of defending lynching or mob law, I shall not do him the honor even to deny his charge, and I shall not do myself the dishonor to defend against his accusation, but shall take it out in despising him with the contempt which he deserves.

Mr. President, these are the facts. Why enact a Federal law?

I ask that the table from which I have been reading be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Lynchings, whites and Negroes, 1882–1934

[Revised report, Jan. 7, 1935]

Year	Whites	Negroes	Total
1882	64	49	113
1883	77	53	130
1884	160	51	211
1886	64	74	138

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I have here also the annual reports of Monroe N. Work, director of the department of records and research, Tuskegee Institute, Ala., as that institution has given the figures to the papers year by year for a long period. This report gives the statement as to lynchings by States.

I will take the year 1920, and give the names of the States in which lynchings occurred, and the number in each State: Alabama, 7; Arkansas, 1; California, 3; Florida, 7; Georgia, 9; Illinois, 1; Kansas, 1; Kentucky, 1; Minnesota, 3; Mississippi, 7; Missouri, 1; North Carolina, 3; Ohio, 1; Oklahoma, 3; South Carolina, 1; Texas, 10; Virginia, 1; West Virginia, 1.

I find, not including those killed in strikes and riots, etc., that there were 57 persons lynched in 1922. * * *

I also find that there were 58 instances in which officers of the law prevented lynchings. Fourteen of these instances were in Northern States and 44 of these instances were in Southern States.

I do not like to have to give statistics about the disposition of the people of the South to support and execute the law, but here are the figures. I said just now I am utterly impatient of any imputations that because some mob breaks over, as a mob may break over in London, as a mob broke over in Harlem, N. Y., the other day, as a mob may break over in Chicago, as a mob may break over here—that just because some mob breaks over, we are induced to enact a law to give the Federal Government power of execution of the laws, power of supervision of the administration of the laws of a Commonwealth, one of the constituent parts of the Union. I am not less impatient of prejudices against the South on this account.

Here are the figures: 44 instances in which lynchings were prevented by the prompt action of the States in 1922, and those in Southern States.

Let us now move on to the next exhibit, dated December 31, 1924:

I send you the following concerning lynchings for the past year as compiled by Tuskegee Institute in the department of records and research. I find there were 16 persons lynched in 1924.

They get down to 16 in 1924. Remember that is from the high of over 200 of 40 years ago.

This is the smallest number lynched in any year since records of lynchings have been kept, and is 17 less than the number 33 for the year 1923 and 41 less than the number 57 for the year 1922. Nine of the persons lynched were taken from the hands of the law, 6 from jails and 3 from officers of the law.

There were 45 instances in which officers of the law prevented lynchings.

And 37 of them were in Southern States.

In 36 of the cases the prisoners were removed or the guards augmented or other precautions taken. In nine other instances armed force was used to repel the would-be lynchers. In four instances during the year persons charged with being connected with lynching mobs were indicted.

The States in which lynchings occurred and the number in each State are as follows: Florida 5, Georgia 2, Illinois 1, Kentucky 1, Louisiana 1, Mississippi 2, Missouri 1, South Carolina 1, Tennessee 1, and Texas 1.

Because we have one lynching in a State, it is proposed to alter the character of the Republic and place in the hands of the Federal Government the supervision of the administration of the criminal law in a sovereign Commonwealth.

I read from the report for 1926:

According to the records compiled in the department of records and research of the Tuskegee Institute, there were 30 persons lynched. This is 14 more than the number of 16 for 1925. The courts had acquitted one of the victims. Twenty-one of the persons lynched were taken from the hands of the law, 9 from jails and 12 from officers. There were 33 instances in which officers of the law prevented lynchings. Four of these were in Northern States and 29 in Southern States.

All this suspicion is not founded, I think, on prejudice, but founded upon an ignorance for which I blame no man, upon an ignorant belief that the Southern States and the southern counties and the southern courts are not quick to execute the law, that the southern judges are not swift to visit the power of the law to punish upon those whom it tries, that there is a Governor in a Southern State who will not call out every member of the State Guard and every gun to protect the life of the meanest rapist who has assaulted and defiled a pure woman. All of it is without foundation, and I welcome any investigation, and I defy anyone anywhere to look into the records or prove anything to the contrary. Once we hear that anything of that sort is on foot—and we hear quickly—the Governor hesitates not, and the boys with the muskets go.

When they tell me my State is not competent to administer the criminal laws or to maintain order, I do not get angry. I feel too sure of my State. I will say, however, that the United States Government, this Republic, has not any more character or any more capacity for law than the State of North Carolina, or the State of South Carolina, or any other State in the Union that I know anything about. That is not saying that the Republic of the United States does not have character. It has character, and it has power, and it has glory. The only thing which can destroy that character and that glory is legislation such as this, which alters its character, gives it a central power that lays a foundation for a national socialism.

I will go on. This is from Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, from the principal, dated December 31, 1927:

I send you the following concerning lynchings for the past year as compiled by the Tuskegee Institute in the department of records and research. I find there were 16 persons lynched in 1927. This is 14 less than the number, 30, for 1926; 1 less than the number, 17, for 1925.

There were 42 instances in which officers of the law prevented lynchings; 8 of these were in Northern States and 34 in Southern States.

There is no comparison there by way of prejudice against the Northern States. They do not have so many opportunities, I will agree. My point is that the records here show that in 34 instances the lynchings were prevented, and the mobs were held at bay, and their purpose was defeated by the authorities in the Southern States in the year 1927.

In 1928, according to the records compiled in the department of records and research of the Tuskegee Institute, there were 11 persons lynched. They got down to 11. We started with a peak of 231, according to the statistics which I gave just now, and we have got down to 11. We waited till we got to 11 before anyone ever thought of undertaking to pass through the Congress of the United States a law which would extend the powers of the Federal Government to the supervision of the criminal laws and the execution thereof in the Commonwealths of this country.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator is quoting from figures which are exactly in accord with figures which were given me. My figures are from as reliable a source as the source from which the Senator received his.

There is no use for us to try to disguise anything. This bill is aimed at the Southern States. Read the letters in the newspapers about our barbarity and our lack of civilization. In spite of the fact that the Southern States, to save their civilization, and out of gratitude to what is known as the National Democratic Party, have supported that party with steadfast loyalty in spite of the remarkable decline in lynchings which the Senator has verified, in spite of the laws enacted in the section at which all this legislation is aimed, here in a so-called "Democratic" administration, we have this kind of aspersions cast upon us.

The point I wish to inquire about is this: In the light of all these facts, available to the Senator from North Carolina, available to me and available to every decent individual, why is such a bill brought here?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, my distinguished friend, the senior Senator from South Carolina, has asked me a question which, of course, I could not answer. I never knew why anyone introduced any bill. That is a problem, of course.

Mr. SMITH. I want to take exception to that statement, because I certainly know why I introduce a bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I never would know why the Senator did it. He may know, but I would never know until he should tell me.

Mr. SMITH. I do not want the Senator to reflect on his own common sense, because the minute he reads a bill, if the man who introduced it had a purpose in mind, the Senator should know why he introduced it. I know why this bill is here and the Senator knows, too. What is the use of beating around about it? [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, there is a tribunal in which the secrets of all hearts will be revealed. I am willing to defer my judgment as to motives of men until the final judgment.

Mr. SMITH. That may be too late.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; it may be too late, but I fear that an earlier judgment on one of my fellows would be too soon. Judge not, that ye be not judged.

I have read the figures for 1929. In 1930 there were 21 lynchings. There were 40 instances in which officers of the law prevented lynchings, 5 in Northern and Western States, and 35 in Southern States. Lynching occurred in these States: Alabama, 1; Florida, 1; Georgia, 6; Indiana, 2; Mississippi, 4; North Carolina, 1; Oklahoma, 1; South Caroline, 2; Texas, 3.

In 1931 the number of lynchings was 13. There were 63 instances in which officers of the law prevented lynching. Seven of those were in Northern and Western States, and 56 in Southern States. The States in which lynchings occurred and the number are as follows: Alabama, 1; Florida, 2; Louisiana, 1; Maryland, 1; Mississippi, 3; Missouri, 1; North Dakota, 1; Tennessee, 1; West Virginia, 2.

In 1932 there were only eight lynchings. This was 5 less than the number in 1931, and 13 less than the number in 1930. There were 34 instances in which officers of the law prevented lynchings, 4 in Northern and Western States, and 30 in Southern States. The States in which lynchings occurred and the number in each are as follows: Arkansas, 1; Florida, 1; Kansas, 1; Kentucky, 1; Louisiana, 1; Ohio, 1; Texas, 1; Virginia, 1.

In 1933 the department of records of research of Tuskegee Institute shows 28 persons were lynched. There were 37 instances in which officers of the law prevented lynching, 6 in Northern and Western States and 31 in Southern States. The States in which lynchings occurred and the number in each are as follows: Alabama 3, California 2, Georgia 4, Louisiana 4, Maryland 1, Mississippi 3, Missouri 1, North Carolina 1, South Carolina 4, Tennessee 3, Texas 2.

The latest release is of December 28, 1934. According to the records compiled in the department of records and research of Tuskegee Institute, there were 15 persons lynched in 1934. This is 13 less than the number in 1933, which was 28. There were 51 instances in which officers of the law prevented lynchings, 7 in Northern and Western States and 44 in Southern States. The States in which lynchings occurred and the number in each State were as follows: Alabama 1, Florida 2, Georgia 1, Kentucky 1, Louisiana 2, Mississippi 6, Tennessee 1, Texas 1.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. I observe the Senator is reading from figures furnished by the Tuskegee Institute, which said that lynchings had occurred in Georgia in the year 1934. The same statement was made in the report of the committee reporting the bill.

I hold in my hand a copy of the annual report of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching. Under the head of "Georgia" the following statement is made:

> Lynchings: None in 1934.
> Tuskegee Institute reports one lynching. The facts are: Curtis James, a Negro, at Darien, McIntosh County, was attacked by 14 men, 12 white, 2 Negroes, all masked. Both James and the gang attacking him were said to be bootleggers of turpentine. James was believed murdered, but no body or evidence of the death was found. Proof of death is required in all cases involving murder, and several weeks before, a Negro reported lynched at Ways Station, Ga., was found, tried, and sentenced to the chain gang.

I merely wish to have the RECORD show that that was evidently a gang killing. Killings of that character may take place in any section. It was not a lynching.

Mr. BAILEY. I thank the Senator from Georgia. Of course, there may be errors, but I take it that the statements are practically correct, and that the statistics may be relied upon; but what is their significance? Almost a constant descent in the ratio until, starting at more than 200, we are down to less than 20; and that is 20 in a population of 126,000,000 people, in which the number of grown people must be around seventy to eighty million.

Mr. SMITH. And, Mr. President, the significance is that the larger number of lynchings was with the smaller population. As the population has increased, the number of lynchings has decreased.

Mr. BAILEY. There have been tremendous increases in population, and tremendous decreases in the number of lynchings. If we reduce it to a percentage, as the lynchings reach the vanishing point our friends, who are the proponents of this legislation, propose the bill and insist upon its consideration, knowing full well that it fundamentally alters the policy of the country, and, as I conceive, the character of the Republic.

Now as to the bill: I have read this bill with much interest. I never expected to see its like; but, as I said just now, as a symbol it is not unwelcome. If this is to be the policy of America, the sooner the American people are notified the better. If the extension of Federal power in civil relations, if the stretching of the interstate-commerce clause is to go on until the Federal Government takes charge of every civil activity in the land—if that is to be the national policy, then this bill is the most appropriate symbol and the most signal notice that could be given to the American people of what is ahead of us.

It is time to have a notice, too. Some of us here in the Senate find our voices too feeble to stretch across the continent and our humble words drowned in a universal din of hysteria and confusion and the clear, patient words of national life all obliterated and obscured in the raucous noise that comes from Coughlin over the radio. Perhaps, when we cease to be heard, a bill like this will notify the Nation. If it shall, the reverberations, if I do not miss my calculations, will drown the voice of Coughlin, and then we may thank God for the bill.

I did not mean on this occasion to speak about Coughlin. I left off his title, and I did so deliberately. In his church—and I shall always speak respectfully of all churches—he can be called "Father" or "Reverend Father"; but he cannot be called "Father" or "Reverend Father" in American politics. In his church he may have his priestly robes and his power of absolution, but when he undertakes to promise a harp and a halo to the American people by political action I challenge his priestly power.

There is nothing more sinister in our life right now than that Coughlin from the radio of the Shrine of the Little Flower—the little saint of suffering who interpreted her life by way of identifying herself with the agonies on the cross, who died expressing the prayer that she might return to earth rather than go to heaven and come back, as she said in immortal words, in a shower of roses—from a shrine in her holy name that voice stirs the depths of hate throughout the land of liberty, matches class against class, foments the fires of revolution, to crucify the American people upon his damnable ambition. Coughlin! Not "Father Coughlin."

Mr. President, I have a profound respect for the ministry. My father was a minister. My grandfather was a minister. Of course, I honor the ministry, but they are not just the reasons. I honor the ministry because it is the ministry; but when a minister of the gospel or a minister of a church comes down into the political arena and goes out with his radio incendiarism to stir up the fountains of hate in a distressed land amongst a suffering people, I take it nothing amiss, and I make no apologies, but I will snatch the halo from his brow and throw it into the nearest spittoon, and then throw the spittoon into the gutter.

Now, Mr. President, as for the proposed law, let us read it:

> SEC. 2. If any State or governmental subdivision thereof—

That means any county or township, I take it—> fails, neglects, or refuses to provide and maintain protection to the life or person of any individual within its jurisdiction against a mob or riotous assemblage, whether by way of preventing or punishing the acts thereof, such State shall by reason of such failure, neglect, or refusal be deemed to have denied to such person due process of law and the equal protection of the laws of the State, and to the end that the protection guaranteed to persons within the jurisdictions of the several States, or to citizens of the United States, by the Constitution of the United States, may be secured, the provisions of this act are enacted.

Now, one moment. Mr. President, this is a legislative interpretation of the Constitution to make the United States the judge of the States and the counties. Who ever heard of that before?

Mr. President, it is suggested that a recess may be in order at this time, and that I may resume tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for that purpose?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to move an executive session before the Senate takes a recess.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

He also, from the same committee, reported adversely the nomination of John R. Hutchison to be postmaster at Santa Maria, Calif., in place of E. T. Ketcham.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers in the Navy and the Marine Corps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair). The nominations will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Francis H. Inge to be United States attorney, southern district of Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frank E. Flynn to be United States attorney, district of Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, April 26, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 25 (legislative day of Apr. 15), 1935

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 25, 1935

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Everlasting praise be unto Thee, most merciful God. We thank Thee for Thy presence, which inspires happiness, joyfulness, and concord. Thou who art infinite in love and wisdom, let not the star of this day fade until we have raised the level of humanity and the ideal of better living. Give us to understand that the spheres of morality and spirituality are most essential in the economies of society. As the springtime has burst forth on the frozen earth and the beams of its warmth have started to blossom woodland, plain, and valley, so start us with renewed hoping, longing, striving for better things. O let Nature, with its calm and majesty, disturb us with elevated thoughts. Whether the days be blessed or hard with trial, sustain us with fortitude and inner peace. Gird us with the strength of the hills, with the spirit that quiets and with a compelling faith. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

"WHY I AM GLAD THAT I AM AN AMERICAN"

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, the American Legion of Ohio recently offered as a prize a week's trip with all expenses paid to Washington and other points to one boy or girl in the seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth grades of the public schools of Ohio who wrote the best essay on Why I am glad that I am an American. The winners, 4 boys and 2 girls, are now in the city and possibly in the gallery at this time. They are accompanied by William S. Konold, commander of the American Legion of the Department of Ohio, and W. L. De Weese, State director of child welfare. These essays, in my humble judgment, are worthy of preservation. They are short, not over 500 words each, and will not use any very great amount of space in the RECORD. None of these six outstanding boys and girls are from my own district, I regret to say. I therefore serve no selfish purpose when I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, by printing these six short essays on this timely topic, which I assure the House will be highly appreciated by the American Legion of my State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say that no doubt the essays are well worth while.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The essays are as follows:

WHY I AM GLAD I AM AN AMERICAN

(By John Phillips, grade 7-2-A, Bowling Green Junior High School, Wood County, Ohio)

America! Land of the free, home of the brave! Within your vast boundaries I am privileged to live, and happy to be able to share with my countrymen freedom, independence, and equal rights. Europe may have its luxury, nobility, and antiqueness; Asia may have its riches and royal pomp; but America has something more than either of these nations, for behind that flowing flag of red, white, and blue is the emblem of a promised land, within whose boundaries are found rich, fertile plains, wooded hills, and deep valleys.

America is a land of freedom, self-government, and democracy, with a Government ruled not only by those with wealth and a title their fathers worked hard to earn, but that quality of people who landed first on the rock-bound shores of America, determined and set in their ideas of liberty and justice for all.

I am proud as an American citizen to say that my forefathers have helped America build itself to its present power, a democracy in a republic.

American citizens are privileged to live in a beautiful country, rich in resources, respected, even looked upon in envy at her present commercial power by other foreign powers. Today the dream of our forefathers has come true, inasmuch as America is the leading nation of the world, and the sovereign power does not rest with one type of people alone, but with the masses. We are allowed to vote, hold office, and are protected by our Constitution, which gives us the right to have a voice in the Government, to worship as we see right, to have a trial by jury, and to be equal before the law.

Probably more than any other nation, the American Governmen works for our security. Relief work, pensions, and insurance are but a few of the things that, at the present, keep many people from being jobless and penniless.

I am happy to be an American because America has more fine organizations than any other country in the world. The younger generation cannot help but profit through these organizations, as they grow to become the men and women of tomorrow. The American Legion is an organization of men who fought for our rights, freedom, and liberty in the World War, men who died for what they thought right and kept the United States of America a nation of international prestige. Our fine system of schools gives every child in America a chance to receive a good education. The Red Cross takes care of many people annually in time of disaster. America tolerates all kinds of religion and is noted for her many fine churches. The Scouts of America today are the men and women of tomorrow, and that organization has taken large steps in the upbuilding of America's youth. These are but a few organizations which help to make America a strong, independent nation.

Beautiful America, indeed I am honored to be one of you, my fullest support I pledge to you, and every drop of blood in me will keep that vow, for I am proud of my past, more proud of my future, but proudest that I am a true American.

WHY I AM GLAD THAT I AM AN AMERICAN

(By Junior Wolfe, grade 8–A, Addison School, Masury, Ohio)

I have the pleasure of living in a country of high ideals, governed by liberty-loving citizens. I enjoy an advanced civilization, cultivated and improved by our struggling forefathers.

Under our flag, I choose my church, and when I am of proper age, I will vote as I see fit, and can at all times express my opinion when I believe it helpful. Our laws protect my home, my honor, and my efforts for later preparation for life.

Through our public-school system, I can obtain an education that will prepare me for my livelihood. Through my own ability and effort my training may be continued until it is equal to that of anyone else. Nothing interferes with the choice of my life-work.

If I lived in Russia, I might be thrown into prison for criticizing the Government. In America the Government might consider my criticism.

In Germany, I would be compelled to take part in military training, preparing for future war. In the United States my associates do not favor the hardships and sufferings of war.

If I lived in India, I might be considered in the lower class, and I would have to do odd things in the presence of the higher class. In America, people are all considered the same.

In China I might be crowded into a small dirty hut or a house-boat. The United States furnishes plenty of room, and in crowded cities there are healthful conditions.

In some parts of the old world there are very few free schools. The United States has a public-school system along with the private schools and tutors. In our system I have learned to protect property, to respect my elders, to be courteous to everyone, and to respect law and order.

Our country is located in a favorable climate, not only for healthful conditions for the homes of persons, but for the growth of the different varieties of fruits and other products. In the Southern States raw materials are raised because the climate is suitable for their growth, and sent North for manufacturing, thus giving growth to transportation.

We have a variety of raw materials; some that are mined are iron ore and petroleum, some that are grown are cotton and wool. There is a plentiful supply of building materials, such as lumber and stone.

With all of these conveniences I see no reason why anyone should be dissatisfied to live in the United States. But I readily understand why anyone is glad that he is an American.

WHY I AM GLAD I AM AN AMERICAN

(By Jane Dressel, ninth grade, Belpre High School, Washington County)

First of all, I am glad to be a part of such a great country as America, the home of the spirit of hope, liberty, and justice, and of the great ideals which made America the hope of the world.

America does not consist of groups. She lives up to the quotation "All men are created equal." All the people are considered equal because we do not have class distinction. America is called "the melting pot of nations", because different nationalities are allowed to enter, and a mixture of races and talents produces the best and most attractive people and eventually American citizens. The American people have a voice in the Government. They are allowed to vote for the man they think is best. The women of America have more rights and are allowed to vote also. They hold Government offices and are able to make their living easier and better by having the same advantages as men. The American citizens have more freedom in religion. They have the right to join and take part in the church they choose.

America has a higher standard of living for the common wage earners such as we are. We have the labor-saving devices in our homes, and the things that make homes attractive and pleasant places in which to live. Our food and clothing are more practical and healthful than in other places. The automobile has ceased to be a luxury in the United States while in Europe only the wealthier classes have them.

The schools of America are considered to be among the first in the world. The grammar and high schools combined provide enough education for one to secure a position after graduation. The fee to enter college is very moderate, suited to the financial standing of the individual who wishes to attend and procure a higher education. America has good medical, law, and agricultural colleges also.

I am very proud of the beauties of America. Her natural resources are considered to be among the greatest in the world. The national parks, Niagara Falls, Grand Canyon, and mountains, plains, deserts are some of the glorious scenery which one sees while going through America. The beautiful cities and towns are clean, healthful, and prosperous.

The welfare and health of the people are looked after well. America's hospitals and doctors are among the best. The most scientific equipment is procured. The different homes for the deaf and dumb, insane, orphans, and old people are made pleasant places in which to live under such conditions.

In closing, I am glad I am an American because of the freedom and educational advantages which help me to become an honest and helpful American citizen.

O beautiful for heroes proved
In liberating strife,
Who more than self their country loved,
And mercy more than life.

America, America
May God thy gold refine.
Till all success be nobleness
And every gain divine.

WHY I AM GLAD TO BE AN AMERICAN

(By Carlton Ott, grade 10, St. Paul's High School, Huron, Ohio)

There are many reasons why I am glad I am an American. First of all, America is a superior nation. She has fought many hardships from the earliest time of her history. Her first great test of strength was the Revolutionary War. With poor forces she defeated the English. Then, too, her hardships were great because of the savage Indians. She has never lost a war. Now she is the leading country of the world.

America has a good, strong Government. She does not have a ruler elected for life as many countries have, but one who is elected for 4 years by the people. The citizens who are 21 years of age or older have the right to elect, either directly or indirectly, all Government officials. The President does not have all the power. His proposals must be passed by Congress before they become laws.

We Americans ought to be glad we have religious freedom and freedom of speech and of the press. Look at Mexico where Catholics are being persecuted. Jews do not have their just rights in Germany. Isn't it much better to live in America where all men are equal, than in many other countries where certain classes of people are persecuted? Many countries have all the people's mail and newspapers censored. We do not have anything of the kind.

America has many beautiful parks and rivers, such as the great Niagara Falls, Potomac River, Yosemite and Yellowstone National Parks, and the Grand Canyon. She has very many large and beautiful cities such as Washington, D. C., New York, and Chicago. She has many beautiful libraries and museums where many thousands of American people go daily for the purpose of spending their leisure time. She has industries of all kinds.

We Americans have many places of recreation. Our national game is baseball. Every large city has a stadium or some large park in which to play baseball, football, and many other games.

America has produced many great men who were world famous. Among them were Washington, Jefferson, Monroe, Lincoln, Longfellow, Theodore Roosevelt, and many others. Another famous man who loved America dearly was Nathan Hale. When about to be killed as a spy, he said, "I regret that I have only one life to lose for my country." I am glad to live in a country with such great leaders.

America is the home of inventors. Thomas Edison invented the electric light; Bell, the telephone; Ford, the automobile; McCormick, the reaper; Whitney, the cotton gin; and Howe, the sewing machine. These are just a few of the American inventors.

America has an excellent system of schools. Every child has an opportunity to receive a high-school education. In many countries, children receive very little education. The American people have a good chance to become highly cultured. America has many colleges and universities in order to give her people further education.

Methods of travel are easy. Almost every family owns an automobile. People go from one large city to another in a few hours. Roads are paved. America has many hospitals and asylums for the sick. Cities are kept clean.

I am very glad to live in America, the country with large cities and good seaports, navigable rivers, large forests, good farming land, and most of all, a good Government. Why shouldn't I be glad to live in a country with many advantages which many other countries have not?

WHY I'M GLAD I'M AN AMERICAN

(By Ruth Newell, junior class, grade 11, 114 Woodland Avenue, Columbiana, Ohio)

I'm glad I'm one of the youth of America marching under the Stars and Stripes; one of the children under dear old Uncle Sam's protection.

Who would hesitate to wish to be an American with all the numerous advantages before him? Individuality is probably the greatest opportunity which the American boy and girl can claim as their heritage. Our ancestors proved their love of liberty at the outcome of the American Revolution. By putting their very heart and soul into the enterprise they succeeded in their purpose. When our forefathers drew up the Constitution they assured freedom of speech, press, and religion to every American.

How does this assurance of liberty affect me? I may profit by freedom of speech by hearing all sides of questions on the radio and at lectures. I can further my education by reading books, magazines, and newspapers, thus profiting by other persons' ideas. I have this advantage by the freedom of press. Choice of religion is a privilege allowed to every single person. If some boy or girl desires to pursue any line of special work he is not hindered in any manner unless by certain circumstances in his own private life. A boy interested in aeronautics may study the subject and advance just as readily as he wishes, and is not held back by governmental interference. Neither is a girl hindered in her desire, for progression in any special work. America is a land of individualism. This opportunity for individuality has given us many personages of whom we are justly proud; in the field of education Dr. Charles Clist; in electrical research, Thomas A. Edison; in the rubber industry, Harvey Firestone; in mechanical research, Henry Ford; in the administration of justice, Judge Florence Allen; and in the field of philanthropy, Jane Addams. The achievements of these great men and women prove to every boy and girl that they have an opportunity to perform some worthwhile work for the betterment of mankind.

American parents do not rule their children's ideas, ambitions, and thoughts, but leave them a reasonable range of freedom. This single reason would give me good ground for proclaiming my partiality for America.

Public education is probably the greatest cultural advantage in being an American. By having a public system of schools the mass of the people have a chance to learn while in most lands only a selected few have the opportunity. The first phase of American education is the public school. This assures everyone knowledge of the fundamentals of education. College is then the next opportunity offered if you are ambitious enough to make use of it. The person who does not wish to obtain a position in the professional lines has the chance of business learning in public schools and then commercial or business colleges follow. For the boy or girl who wishes to take up some practical trade, provisions are made in manual-training departments or domestic-science halls in the public schools and then apprenticed to a factory or some other institute. For less fortunate individuals night schools, emergency schools, and junior radio colleges have been provided.

I think the American people as a whole are a better looking race and have a more pleasing personality than any other country. The mass of the people are better clothed and have a higher standard of living. During the colonial period of American development all the races of Europe mingled together. This melting pot of the races instituted a better looking and singular race, the Americans.

Where can one find a country so vast, so picturesque, so scenic, so historical, and so altogether grand as the United States of America? I am proud to be a citizen of a land of so great a population and size. Because of this large amount of territory, America is not so crowded as European and Asiatic countries, and better living conditions are evident. Too, poorly lighted and ventilated tenement districts are being razed and better homes provided because of plenty of space. Our health is thus protected and sanitary living conditions ensue. As a result poverty is not so eminent. In a country of ample room a trend of progression is prevalent.

Then, too, we live in a country of many beauty spots—mountains, forests, caves, waterfalls, plains, canyons, and most every type of scenic beauty a boy or girl could wish for. A land of beautiful background is an incentive for its people to live beautiful lives.

In a country of such varied climate and wide range of background many types of sports are enjoyed. The American boy and girl have their duties, but they also have their time for play and leisure.

Comparing our lives with the lives of our foreign brothers and sisters, I would not choose to be other than an American. If I were an Italian or German child at a very early age, I would be training for war and pressed with government problems. In Russia I would be deprived of religion, sanitary living conditions, and adequate education. Every time I would cheer for dear old Uncle Sam and salute the Stars and Stripes.

WHY I AM GLAD I AM AN AMERICAN

(By James F. Pflum, grade 12, St. Rose School, Allen County, Ohio)

Glad that I am an American? Of course I am! When I realize what our forefathers went through to establish this country, when I think of the opportunities this country offers, of the resources contained here, of the educational advantages held out, of the climatic and scenic beauty of our land, when I consider that we are the most democratic, self-ruling people in the world, how can I be anything but glad?

The United States, unlike most countries, is not the home of a certain race of people who live together merely because they are members of the same race. It was founded by people from various lands, all in search of the same ideal—self government and freedom. Love of liberty united them all in one close brotherhood. From this brotherhood descended the present American people.

The Government of these people is left almost entirely to the people themselves. Our whole political creed is briefly summed up in the Declaration of Independence: "That all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

America heads the list in offering equal educational advantages to all its citizens. A systemized plan of free public schools and laws enforcing compulsory education have gone far in bringing the intelligence of the average American above that of his foreign neighbors. America is the land of opportunity, and the advancement of a man or woman along any line depends entirely upon the individual. He is not restricted by any class system. In America there is only one class—Americans!

Discoveries and inventions of Americans have done much to promote the wealth and comfort of the American people at home and their prestige abroad. The glare of millions of lights in our business districts, the unceasing ring of the telephone, the farm machines that so lighten the work of our tillers of the soil. The modern household timesavers are all products of American endeavor and bring to the mind a galaxy of famous names—Whitney, Fulton, Cooper, Edison, Bell, Morse, Field, McCormick, etc.

Not only have the intellectual and material well-being of our citizens been the deep concern of the builders of our Nation, but the spiritual was also safeguarded in the positive pronouncement contained in the first amendment to our Constitution: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." This beacon light of freedom of conscience flashed its consoling message to the persecuted of every nation. Across the mighty waters came the oppressed of all peoples to establish their home on this solid rock of religious freedom.

Our country possesses not only a wealth of resources, but also an abundance of scenic attractions. Why travel abroad when within our own borders we can find the lonely sands of the Sahara, the rush and bustle of Piccadilly Square, the snow-capped peaks and quiet valleys of the Alps, the heat of the tropics, and the cool woodlands of the Black Forest.

America has a heart. Few countries care for the orphan, for the aged and infirm as she does. Our National, State, and municipal health departments, as well as the plan of supervised recreation for children, aid in developing a nation of strong and healthy citizens.

America stands for peace, for good feeling among the peoples of the earth, yet our record in war is second to none. Recently, when the nations of the earth became involved in a world war, we beheld the flower of American manhood, khaki-clad, spring into action and follow Old Glory across the seas. The rows of crosses in Flanders fields bear silent testimony of America's share in the struggle "to make the world safe for democracy."

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-one Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

ADDRESS AT LAYING OF CORNERSTONE OF POST OFFICE, EFFINGHAM, ILL.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address of J. Austin Latimer, special assistant to the Postmaster General, at the cornerstone laying of the new post office at Effingham, Ill., on April 15, 1935.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of J. Austin Latimer, special assistant to the Postmaster General of the United States, at the cornerstone laying of the new post office at Effingham, Ill., April 15, 1935:

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, I am very happy that this, my first visit to Effingham and Effingham County, and that section of Illinois known as "the Hub", is under such pleasing conditions, and my only regret is that the pressure of official duties made it impossible for your good friend and mine, Congressman ARNOLD, to be here at the cornerstone-laying of this building for which he has labored so many years. Here in his home section, in the very place where he attended Austin College many years ago, may I be permitted to say that, in my opinion, there is no more useful man in Congress than your able Representative. As Chairman of the Post Office Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. ARNOLD has rendered outstanding service to the country and has demonstrated himself to be a real and able friend of the Postal Service. Just as I was leaving Washington he called me over the telephone to ask that I express his deep regret at not being able to be present at these exercises and extend his greetings to his Effingham friends.

It is also a real pleasure to know personally your two splendid Members of the upper House, Senators LEWIS and DIETRICH.

It is most inspiring to come into this mighty empire of Illinois, with its length of nearly 400 miles and its population of over 7,000,000 people. Your State leads in so many things, I will not attempt to enumerate them, but to me outstanding are your institutions of learning and your liberal support of your schools, colleges, and universities. Illinois has abundant natural resources, both in her soils and beneath the surface, and ranks as one of the leading States in minerals and manufactures, but it is in the field of agriculture and in the value of her farming lands that she is supreme. Many years ago the famous French explorer, Father Marquette, wrote of the potential wealth of Illinois' rich soils and beautiful rivers: "We have seen nothing like this river for the fertility of the land, its prairies, woods, and wild cattle."

It is a particular added pleasure to have been selected by the Postmaster General to represent him at these exercises and he has requested me to convey his personal greetings and regret that he himself could not be present. In this he is joined by the other officials of the Post Office Department, and I particularly want to bring to you greetings from a splendid son of Illinois who is one of my best friends in the Postal Service—Chief Inspector K. P. Aldrich, a native of this section of your State.

This is an important day in Effingham, for no institution serves the public more generally than the post office, and the dedication of a new post-office building is always an occasion for rejoicing. This is particularly true in this instance because of the attractive appearance and splendid facilities of your new building, which, with the site, represents an investment of $800,000. As you know, the Treasury Department awarded the contract for the construction of the building to A. C. Atherton, of Evanston, Ill., on October 5, 1934.

I am happy to participate in these exercises along with your excellent postmaster, Mr. Grover C. Norris, and your well-known mayor, Hon. Harry J. Rickelman, and to appear on the platform with several of your former postmasters, who have done their part in making possible this handsome building.

Our records in Washington show that a post office was established here in 1855 with John Haney as your first postmaster, followed by George H. Scoles, December 12, 1855; Jacob Bishop, November 21, 1856; Andrew J. Gilbert, January 12, 1858; I. M. Mett, April 1, 1859; John J. Funkhouser, May 11, 1859; Robert E. Moore, January 30, 1860; Lucius M. Rose, March 20, 1861; David B. Alexander, April 12, 1862; Henry G. Habing, April 7, 1865; David B. Alexander, January 11, 1866; William S. Coleman, June 5, 1866; Lewis W. Smith, March 30, 1869; William McPherson, March 1, 1873; John F. Barlow, March 22, 1875; William C. Wright, October 5, 1877; Samuel N. Scott, December 15, 1881; Charles H. Kelly, January 13, 1886; John H. I. Lacy, January 9, 1890; William M. Stewart, February 16, 1894; Richard F. Lawson, February 7, 1898; William Austin, February 13, 1907; David L. Wright, October 22, 1913; William W. Austin, May 8, 1922; Grover C. Norris (acting), October 21, 1933; Grover C. Norris, March 7, 1934.

The Postal Service is one of our oldest public institutions, dating back to earliest colonial days, and in the 300 years of its existence it has been one of the most important influences in the development and progress of the country. As Postmaster General Randall so well expressed it in his Annual Report of 1866—

"This service, under the liberal patronage of the Government, has done more to aid in developing the resources of the country than anything else except the cultivation of the soil. It has done more to aid in enlightening and Christianizing the people than anything else except the spelling book and Bible. The post office and mail route travel with civilization and mark its progress as distinctly as the schoolhouse and meeting house."

Today it is the habit to take an efficient mail service for granted, even 24-hour mail service between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, yet we all realize that should the Postal Service cease to function for a single hour, the business of the entire country would be brought to a sudden standstill with disastrous results to every citizen of the country, so indispensable is the Postal Service to our commerce and our business and social life.

Let us consider for a moment the tremendous progress made in the handling of the United States mail within the past hundred years. In 1835 rates were about as in Benjamin Franklin's time, and not until the year the post office was established here in Effingham was prepayment of postage made compulsory and registry service established. One hundred years ago envelops were unknown and postage stamps were not authorized until 1847. The traveling railway post office was inaugurated in 1840; money-order service was established in 1864, particularly to accommodate Civil War soldiers. Free delivery of mail in cities began in 1863 but the rural free-delivery service is not yet 40 years old.

On the third of this month was observed the 75th anniversary of the establishment of the picturesque Pony Express between St. Joseph, Mo., and San Francisco, which visioned the carriage of the mail to the Pacific coast in the then incredibly short time of 10 days, whereas today a letter dispatched from Washington at 4:25 one afternoon will reach Los Angeles at 8:10 the next morning.

Some idea of the magnitude of your Postal Service may be gained from the following statistics:

With approximately 230,000 employees, more than one-third of all the civilian employees of the Government, the Post Office Department is the largest of the Government departments and the only one that is represented in every city and town and village in the country. At the present time there are 45,921 post offices in the United States, of which 1,526 are in the State of Illinois. Thirty-five thousand, three hundred and thirty rural routes are giving service to nearly 7,000,000 families; 743 full postal cars and 3,496 apartment mail cars are utilized in the Railway Mail Service. During the fiscal year ended last June 30, it is estimated the United States Postal Service handled 1,022,675,975 pounds of second-class matter; issued 198,656,378 money orders and handled postal savings deposits aggregating approximately one and one-fourth billion dollars. The receipts from postage paid on mail during that period amounted to $519,249,989—an average of $4.05 per capita.

Now, just a word in regard to the statistics of the dead-letter office. Because of carelessness on the part of the senders who gave incorrect or inadequate addresses or failed to put a return address on the envelop, or because of failure on the part of the addressees to notify their postman or post office of their new address when moving, over 10,000,000 letters with over $69,000 enclosed had to be sent to the dead-letter office during the fiscal year 1934—an increase of 7¼ percent over the previous year. Through its experienced and expert staff the Department succeeded in returning to the senders 2,664,789 of these letters and the greater part of the enclosed money, but the Department would appreciate the cooperation of all its patrons to make sure (first) that all letters are addressed carefully, with the return address of the sender shown on the envelop, and (second) that the change-of-address cards furnished by the post office and postman be filled out when patrons change their address.

There is much more than I could say about the interesting department of the Government with which I am connected, but

I want to close by making a brief reference to that which is very close to us all—the continued recovery of our country. I know that I am speaking to men and women who are first, and above all, Americans with an intense love for their country, and those fundamental institutions upon which this great Republic has been built. I feel likewise that in common with the rank and file of the citizenship of this Nation you are stanchly behind President Roosevelt in everything that he is doing in this recovery program.

These are stirring days in which we live. It does not require the seventh son of a seventh son to prophesy that the whole future of our country depends upon the successful accomplishment of the great national objectives toward which the administration is striving. We are going through one of the critical periods of American history, one of those periods which, occurring in almost every generation, have seen what Abraham Lincoln in his Gettysburg address called "a new birth of freedom."

I call upon you to enlist whole-heartedly and without reservation under the banner of Franklin D. Roosevelt who has already attained a great place in American history and who will rank as one of our greatest Presidents. He has given us confidence and courage to clear away stout-heartedly the mistakes and wrongs of the past and to erect a new system of exact and equal justice for all. He has never faltered and with cheerful heart he still leads us on—the "bravest of the brave." With united support he will continue to lead us from one victory to another until we reach the great objective—a happy and prosperous country.

It's no time for a quitter now, as Grantland Rice so well expressed it in verse:

"Of all the days that ever were,
Since Moses framed the ancient code,
Or vanished years that knew the stir
Of Caesar's legions down the road—
Take all the aeons that have flown,
From drudge-pit to the laureled brow,
Above all ages time has known,
There's no place for the quitter now.

"Start back to where the caveman ruled
The first grey dawn of rugged life,
Where each raw clan in turn was schooled
To stand against an endless strife,
Through reigns of terror and of gore
Through shattered faith and broken vow
Far less than time has known before,
There's no place for the quitter now.

"The world has known its share of pain,
Its share of vandals and of Huns,
The world for ages now has lain
Beneath the echo of the guns,
But since within the world's dim dawn
Our fathers leaped from bough to bough
Though all the terror fate has drawn,
There's less room for the quitter now."

ADDRESS BEFORE THE SHRINE CLUB OF PHILADELPHIA

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. HAROLD KNUTSON, on April 24 before the Shrine Club of Philadelphia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] before the Shrine Club of Philadelphia, Pa., April 24, 1935:

There is a singular propriety in discussing tendencies of our governmental policies and in taking stock of our liberties in this city of Philadelphia. The sacred places of the Nation are widely distributed. The shrines at which the patriotic American worships mark the way-stations of the Nation's glory. Massachusetts has her Bunker Hill and Fanuell Hall, while Virginia her Mount Vernon and her Yorktown. Monuments reared here and there preserve the high notes in the epic story of the making of America.

But here in Philadelphia is the cradle of American liberty. It was in Independence Hall that the Declaration of Independence—the world's great charter of human rights—was penned and adopted. It was from a Philadelphia belfry that a full-toned bell rang forth the joyful message that a new nation had been born, dedicated to the lofty concept that all men are created equal. It was in this city that the Nation's leaders, assembled under the chairmanship of George Washington, consummated the work of the American Revolution and gave us our fundamental law.

These are but suggestions of the historic traditions that cluster about Philadelphia. Within the scope of its influence are other sacred spots where splendid devotion and unselfish sacrifice have given them a lasting significance. In the immediate neighborhood is Valley Forge, where Washington and his band of patriots suffered to establish the Union of States. A little farther off, but within the confines of Pennsylvania is the field of Gettysburg, where men gave their lives that this Union should be preserved.

It was upon that field that Lincoln, with the eloquence of a prophet of old, pledged the faith of the past and future—"That this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

In the light of this magnificent confession of American purpose in the contemplation of this sacred pledge, it behooves us to look about and note whether we are keeping the faith.

Under what its sponsors are pleased to call the new deal, dangerous practices already have been indulged in, and even more dangerous tendencies are in evidence. In a combination of fascism, marxism, communism, and conservatism, the new deal has harried our people and ravished our Constitution so the founding fathers, who labored in this city over a hundred years ago to perfect it, would scarcely recognize their handiwork. Almost unlimited authority has been given the Executive. Bureaus clothed with arbitrary power to regulate the lives of our people have sprung up and continue to sprout and flourish like the bay tree; Government agents are spread over the country like a plague of locusts; the regulations of bureaus have been given the imperial sanction of law, while in the name of recovery innumerable and vexatious barricades have been thrown across the pathway of prosperity.

Congress has been gradually divesting itself of its constitutional powers, until in the last outstanding example it placed in the hands of the Executive the stupendous sum of nearly $5,000,000,000 with authority to spend it as he sees fit.

In doing this Congress has delegated its authority not only to spend money but has also resigned from its province of establishing policies for the Executive to carry out. Call it what you will, but the granting of such far-reaching authority marks the close of constitutional government at least for the present, and a return of representative government will be brought about only with the gravest difficulty.

Always in history, when nations abandoned the beaten road of experience, others were prone to follow. The chaos resulting from the World War has caused a variety of dictatorships to spring up. It had seemed that America, firmly grounded in representative republican government, would remain steadfast to the old ideals. The past 2 years, however, have witnessed a furious effort not to maintain our cherished ideals of government but to afflict us with a swarm of experiments spawned by a visionary and unpractical "brain trust", and turned loose with reckless disregard of consequences. In place of carefully worked out plans designed to meet the emergency, each day now sees a new scheme and the query of the average newspaper reader as he looks at his morning journal is not "what is new" but "what's next." Laws, schemes, plans, and regulations have come so fast and in such number that even the closest students of current events are unable to summarize them or to give an intelligent explanation of what it is all about.

In the face of these frantic and fantastic experiments, prosperity has not returned, unemployment continues, and direct relief is now to be followed by a wholesale attempt by the Government to supply the jobs which private industry is no longer able to furnish.

An outstanding example of the effort to revive prosperity by means more likely to retard it is the program of reciprocal-trade agreements which the administration is working out. The effect of these agreements will be to throw the American market open more and more to foreign inroads and to place the American laborer in competition with the poorly paid workmen of Europe and of the Orient.

The law permitting reciprocal-trade agreements to be negotiated by the President, without the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, was enacted less than a year ago, and since its enactment we have negotiated trade agreements with Cuba, Belgium, Brazil, and Haiti. Trade agreements with other countries are now in process of negotiation.

We have heard many reasons advanced for the depression and not a few suggestions for its cure. One of the most ingenious remedies to come to my attention was the suggestion of Secretary Wallace that we could only end the depression by restoring the purchasing power of foreign countries and that such purchasing power could only be restored by turning the American market over to those countries.

Ever since the enactment of the Hawley-Smoot tariff law back in July 1930, and for a considerable period prior thereto, a vicious and misleading campaign was carried on in Congress and through the press against the measure. It has been denounced as a thing of evil, without any redeeming qualities, and we were repeatedly assured during the campaigns of 1932 and 1934, by the party now in power, that one of the first things they would do upon securing control of the Government would be to repeal the present Republican tariff law in its entirety.

The Democrats secured control of the House 4 years ago, since which time they have had an overwhelming majority in that body. In fact, the majorities in both the House and Senate are the greatest ever enjoyed by any political party in all the history of the Republic, and yet not a single move has been made to repeal the present Republican Hawley-Smoot tariff law.

The courageous thing, of course, would be to repeal it, but to do so would mean political suicide because it would result in the absolute destruction of American industry and agriculture through the loss of the American market, which is the best and only cash market in the world today.

Pennsylvania is one of the greatest States in the Union, and no State has contributed more toward the upbuilding of the Republic that we all love and revere. At one time you were the greatest oil-producing State in the Union. You have the largest deposits of anthracite coal and vast bodies of bituminous coal. Your steel industry is the greatest in the world and you are vitally interested in the manufacture of textiles, machinery, glass, and cement. I dare say that there is not a State in the Union whose welfare is more dependent upon the great American market than is Pennsylvania, and I hope that what I may have to say to you today will be of special interest because of that fact. Not only are you a great mining and manufacturing commonwealth, but as an agricultural State you rank well up to the top and I believe that Lancaster County is rated the richest agricultural county in the Union.

In the consideration of the subject assigned to me for today, it may be well to ponder over the fact that on the basis of value, 67 percent of all the items imported into this country under the present tariff law come in free of duty, while but 33 percent are dutiable. Neither should we, in its consideration, overlook the fact that when we devalued the dollar it had the effect of reducing tariff rates by 41 percent. As a result we are today the lowest tariff country in the world, with the possible exception of England, so it must be readily appreciated that there is no justification or necessity for a lowering of tariff rates at this time either through reciprocal-trade agreements or by act of Congress.

We are told that the shrinkage in our foreign trade is due to our past policy of protection. Figures compiled by the Department of Commerce show that with the exception of Japan every great exporting country in the world has suffered the same shrinkage, so we may safely brush aside the statement that our decline in foreign trade is due to reprisals. Rather is it due to the world-wide depression from which every country has suffered in proportion to the expansion made by such country under the stimulus of the World War.

George N. Peek, head of the International Credit Bank, is authority for the statement that our foreign commerce during the past 20 years has amounted to approximately $40,000,000,000 and from that trade we have sustained a net loss of $2,000,000,000. In normal times we consume approximately 94 percent of our total production—industrial and agricultural—with the exception of cotton, and why we should make so much fuss over our 6-percent foreign market, more especially when official figures show that we have sustained a net loss of 5 percent from that trade during the past 20 years, is beyond my comprehension.

We can only do business with foreign countries by extending credit or buying from such countries. The contention of the pro-reciprocal adherents that we must buy as much as we sell, and vice versa, is not borne out by official figures of our foreign trade. For instance, we sell twice as much to the Netherlands as we buy, whereas we buy three times as much from Brazil as we sell her, and our imports from Colombia are 600 percent greater than our exports to that country.

So many lose sight of the fact that foreign commerce is based upon two premises: Price and necessity. We buy four times as much from Brazil as she buys from us because our principal purchase consists of coffee. We buy Brazilian coffee because we like its quality and the price is attractive. The same holds true with Colombian coffee.

Nations do not go out and buy from each other because of friendship. They buy in the world market, and price and quality are the determining factors, regardless of national likes or dislikes. Our principal exports at the present time consist of automobiles and accessories, machinery and cotton. Our automobile and machinery manufacturers can meet the competition of the world because they employ mass production. The quality of the American product is so far superior to that of our foreign competitors that we are able constantly to extend our trade along those lines. Then, too, the American manufacturers of automobiles and machinery are able to meet the highly competitive prices of the world market.

Foreign commerce continually shifts. For instance, world exports in 1929 totaled $32,709,000,000, of which the United States exported $5,241,000,000, or 16 percent. In 1934 world exports had shrunk to $11,186,000,000, and our exports had fallen to $2,133,000,000 which was 19 percent of the whole. So far as our share of the export world trade is concerned, we were more favorably situated in 1934, when we had 19 percent of the world commerce as against 16 percent in 1929.

On August 24, last, we signed the Cuban trade agreement, and it went into effect 10 days later. We were told of the wonders that agreement would perform for us. Let us see what happened. In the 6-month periods prior to and following the signing of the Cuban agreement our exports to that country increased from $22,800,000 to $27,203,000, an increase of $4,300,000, but our imports from Cuba for the same comparative period increased $16,347,000. In other words, Cuba has gained 400 percent more from the agreement than we have, so far as net results are concerned, as we had to increase our purchases from her by $16,000,000 in order to secure an additional Cuban trade of $4,000,000. Do you call that good business?

Furthermore, we increased Cuba's sugar quota to this country by 300,000 tons and reduced the production of American cane and beet sugar by the same amount. Sugar is one agricultural commodity of which we have never produced a surplus. In fact, we have always been big importers of sugar and yet we agreed in that treaty to further restrict our home production. A half a ton of sugar to the acre means that 600,000 acres of land must be taken out of sugar production in this country, as a result of that agreement, and put into some other crops and it's certain to be crops of which we already have surpluses. Is that good business?

A short time ago a friend of mine sent me a clipping from the Boston Marine Guide, giving the invoices of shipments received in that port over a 3-day period. In looking it over I was amazed to find that one shipment consisted of 96,000 tons of anthracite coal from Russia. Another shipment consisted of 2,000 tons of rye. Another shipment consisted of 4,000 tons of corn, and yet another shipment consisted of 32,000 tons of print paper. I have with me today, for your inspection if you desire, lists of manifests taken from the New York Journal of Commerce, between April 13 and April 17, and it is simply appalling to note the commodities that are being shipped into this country, which we are able to produce at home and should produce at home.

In one breath we talk about ending the depression and putting the idle back to work, then turn around and enter into a trade agreement with Belgium that will probably put every cement factory in the State of Pennsylvania out of business and it will also close your plate-glass factories.

How many Pennsylvania miners could be put back to work if we stopped importing anthracite coal from Russia and Great Britain? I dare say thousands. Up in our section of the country, we have large areas of timber adapted to the manufacture of print paper. Much of this timber is in small holdings, but today it is of little or no value because the American market is being supplied with print paper from Canada, Scandinavia, the Baltic countries, and Russia. There are manganese deposits in something like 35 States of the Union, and some of them have been highly developed, but nearly all are now closed down because we are buying our manganese from Russia and Brazil. In the Brazilian treaty we reduced the duty on manganese from 1 cent to one-half cent a pound and the unfortunate part of it is that under a recent proclamation of the President every other country in the world will get the same benefits as are given to the country with which we have negotiated a specific treaty, although they give us no equivalent concession in return.

When Secretary of Agriculture Wallace was before the Ways and Means Committee, in which I have the honor to hold membership, he gave it as his opinion that any American industry or activity that cannot stand on its own bottom and meet foreign competition should go into something else.

If the coal producers of Pennsylvania cannot meet the competition of forced labor in Russia, would Mr. Wallace close down the coal mines in this State? If the steel manufacturers of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Minnesota cannot meet the competition from England, Belgium, Germany, and France, would he have us close down our steel mills and throw hundreds of thousands of working men out on the streets? Because the rye growers of Minnesota and North and South Dakota cannot possibly meet the competition of European rye, should they be compelled to stop growing rye and forced into something else? Because the American match manufacturers cannot meet the competition of Japanese and Russian producers, should the 40 or 50 match factories in this country be obliged to close down and throw their workers out of employment?

You have doubtless read in the press within the past few weeks numerous items telling of the enormous increases in imports of Japanese textiles, toys, and matches. The importations in textiles for the first 3 months of this year greatly exceeded the total imports of textiles from Japan for the entire year of 1934. In Japan the whole family works except those who are too old or too young. Their factories operate 72 hours per week, and the wage scale is from 20 cents to 50 cents a day. Every Japanese working man's home is a sweatshop where the children toil all day and far into the night making toys and other little knick-knacks to be sold in America. Because our textile and match manufacturers and our toymakers cannot compete with Japan, Secretary Wallace would have them go into some other activity.

We would like to know what activity can absorb all those who would be thrown out of employment under the operation of his philosophy of economics.

With one hand we reach out for an illusive foreign commerce, which represents a net loss of 5 percent, and with the other hand we continually pile burden upon burden on American industry, which makes it more and more difficult to hold that market. The N. R. A. has increased production costs in this country by at least 25 percent. Agriculture has been handicapped through the operation of the A. A. A. and the crop-reduction program. The processing tax on cotton has just about destroyed our foreign market for cotton. Only on Friday of last week the House passed the so-called "social-security bill", which would place multiple taxes on pay rolls, all of which must be charged to the finished product. How, in the name of common sense, can we place tax upon tax on industry and yet expect to go out and capture the markets of the world? The idea is too fantastic to merit serious discussion.

I have made long a study of the tariff question and am 100 percent sold upon the proposition that we should pay more attention to the preservation of the home market and less to the foreign market. I am one of those old-fashioned Americans who believe that our first duty is to our own people and that we should employ every legitimate means at our command to see that the American market is maintained for the American producer and wage earner. If we will apply ourselves to the problem of adjusting domestic production, not only on the farm but in factories and shop, and then give all activities that degree of protection which they need to their well-being, it would go far toward solving the present depression and the unemployment problem.

I cannot, and I will not, subscribe to the new deal's proposal to adopt the policy of the survival of the fittest to all industry throughout the world, which means that the small, struggling American industry, whether agricultural or otherwise, will have to give way to foreign producers who, by the advantage of low cost of production, can prove themselves more efficient. In determining efficiency in production, we should take into consideration wages paid, hours of labor, living conditions, and the general well-being of the toilers in the various countries. I would not say that the Japanese matchmaker is more efficient than the American matchmaker merely because he can lay his product down in our market for 40 cents a gross less than the American can produce it for. I would not say that the peon of Argentina is more efficient than the American farmer because he can produce meats, grains, and dairy products for half what it costs our farmers to produce similar products. I would not say that the Russian anthracite miner is more efficient than the Pennsylvania miner because he can ship his coal over here and undersell us.

Oh, I realize that there are probably those among us today who will say that I am too much of a nationalist, and that the time has come to obliterate national boundaries and reach out the hand of fellowship to the other nations of the world. I am willing to go as far as any reasonable individual in promoting good will among the nations of the earth, but I am not willing to go to the extremity of sacrificing the American fireside to do so. I hold that our first duty is to our own people, and while I am intensely sympathetic to the hungry and down-trodden of other lands, I cannot but feel that my first duty is to the hungry and unemployed of my own country.

I feel that if we would remove the uncertainty that now hangs over American industry and agriculture by assuring them of reasonable freedom from needless governmental interference, we could end this depression in 6 months. All we need to do is to tell the country that the dollar will be stabilized—I care not at what price—that no further burdensome restrictions or taxes will be invoked; that a sincere attempt will be made to balance the Budget, and that all needless expenditures will be cut out.

If this administration would but open the door of opportunity, that opening upon which 125,000,000 Americans have fixed their anxious and hopeful gaze, we would enter into one of the most remarkable eras of prosperity that we have ever enjoyed. The stage is all set for us to go. Homes need painting and repairing; farms need new buildings, machinery, and fencing; people need clothing. There are millions of Americans who need a considerable amount of dental work done and operations performed. None of you can recall a time when merchants' stocks were as low as they are now. My friends, we are not going to end the depression through an orgy of spending. We cannot spend ourselves into prosperity.

Since the time of Hoover and Mellon we have increased the national debt from sixteen billions to thirty-two billions, and the end is not yet. If this spending spree continues, it can only mean one of two things: We will have to turn our entire income over to the Government in the form of taxes, or we will have to resort to inflation, and that is one of the things that is retarding and preventing recovery. No one knows from one day to the next what lies ahead of us, and those who have the money and who should be out in front working for the country's recovery are held back through fear and uncertainty.

Let us remove that fear and the gloomy clouds that have hung over the land like a pall for the past 5 years will roll away and the sun of prosperity will shine again.

THE COURT OF FINAL RESORT

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert therein a poem by Horace C. Carlisle, now an employee of the United States Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following poem by Horace C. Carlisle, now an employee of the United States Government:

THE COURT OF FINAL RESORT

For three score and ten hopeful, historical years
The Supreme Court of Law in the United States
Sat and served in the room which the Senate reveres
As the forum in which it once held its debates;
But this Court, in which justice alone is the guide,
Whose integrity stands—indestructive as stone—
Thru its uncharted sessions, henceforth will reside,
More befittingly housed, in a place of its own.

On a sacred, suggestive, select plot of ground—
Where historic old houses of fame used to stand,
'Mongst the buildings of national note that surround
The American Capitol—pride of the land—
The Supreme Court, in grandeur, unmarred by a flaw,
Glorified by a beauty, uniquely its own,
Has decreed equal Justice, vouchsafed under law,
And has carved it, high over the entrance, in stone.

In accord with the architect's purposeful plan,
Steel supports, designed not to be broken nor bent,
Hidden tactfully there from the vision of man,
Rest upon a foundation—of tested cement—
Where they, riveted firmly together, supply
To the structure the strength, like Gibraltar, to stand,
Tho the clouds of distraction spread over the sky,
And the storms of destruction sweep over the land.

While the inner walls, hiding this network of steel
With superior marble—as lasting as time—
From the far sunny Southland—distinctly reveal
A significant charm, that suggests the sublime,
The superb outer walls of this building, supreme—
From Vermont's marble quarries of crystaline white—
Lend a new inspiration to statesmanship's dream
For the strict preservation of justice and right.

In this Temple of Justice, thru time's great beyond,
As the centuries measure the lessening years,
May the great Court, that solemnly sits here, respond
To wealth's eloquent pleas and to poverty's tears
With impartial exactness, unbiassed, unswayed,
That the verdicts it renders may meet the commands
Of the Great Jurist's judgments, that must be obeyed
Long as Justice the Guardian of Liberty stands.

May American justice attend all the pleas
And judicial opinions set forth by this court.
There can come no appeal from the binding decrees
Of the Nation's supreme Court of Final Resort.
And this temple, supreme in its purpose and plan,
Great memorial marvel, exhumed from the sod,
Is a symbol, sublime, of man's duty to man—
And an emblem, divine, of man's duty to God.

MARK TWAIN

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE] before the Missouri Society at Washington, D. C., on April 17.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE] before the Missouri Society, at Washington, D. C., on April 17:

There are still perhaps some few people who do not fully comprehend Mark Twain and his accomplishments. A distinguished writer once traveling in the country of the pyramids was accompanied by a local and native guide. The visitor was making some comment about Innocents Abroad and Mark Twain in general. The guide suddenly stopped and looked inquiringly at the traveler and asked him this question: "How many sheep has Mark Twain?" The guide perhaps had about as good an understanding of Mark Twain as some of his critics, who, perhaps on account of jealousy or lack of comprehension, at times sought to label him as a mere buffoon.

During Mark Twain's earlier writing experience on one occasion he addressed a letter to his brother Orion, and in it he stated: "When I get married I am going to quit writing to please everybody and I am only going to write to please myself." He probably thought at the time he made this statement that by the time he got married he would have a sufficient competency to take care of himself and wife and could do as he pleased. One wonders whether he may not have overlooked the fact, however, that when a man is once married he can no longer always do as he pleases.

Some of Mark Twain's critics annoyed him quite a bit by trying to constantly make it appear he was only a humorist. On one occasion, being somewhat irritated by this criticism, Mark Twain said: "It is the will of God that we must have critics, and missionaries, and Congressmen, and humorists, and we must bear the burden." If I may be permitted to comment on this, I will say that there are far too many critics and not too many missionaries, probably just enough Congressmen, and too few humorists. A humorist is largely born such—not made; Congressmen are created by their constituents; a real honest-to-goodness missionary bears the stamp and approval of the great Master over all; while critics are quite self and freely made, no particular qualification or standard is required; they are so easy to make, as they are, to a large extent, their own creation.

In the early hour of an early spring morning some years ago I had the pleasure and opportunity of traveling by bus from Columbia, Mo., to Kansas City, Mo. The highway, for many miles, led along not far from the Missouri River. A wealth of frost was still abundant on the grass, trees, and the fences along the way. I sat for many miles looking out the bus window, observing herd after herd of beautiful, well-kept and, for the most part, well-fed cattle. I knew I was traveling over our country's richest soil. I was comparing the different herds, one with the other, and studying the methods and manner employed by the stockmen along the way in caring for these beautiful herds. I must have seen that morning, although I did not keep accurate account, in the neighborhood of 50 herds of cattle. The truth is my attention was almost entirely directed to viewing and observing these cattle. Across the aisle from me in the bus sat the wife of Judge James B. Gantt, who was one of Missouri's most distinguished jurists, and who for years occupied, in an eminent way, a position on the supreme court bench of our State. She was looking out the opposite window. Presently I noticed that with her hand half uplifted she was occasionally dropping her finger a bit, as if counting. Presently I inquired of her if she had seen the many beautiful herds of cattle along the way, and she replied that she had not. I said, "Have you failed to see many of these cattle along the way?" She replied, "I have not seen a single cow brute this morning—not a single one have I seen." I said, "I think I must have seen somewhere between 40 and 50 herds of as nice-looking cattle as are to be found anywhere." She said, "I have been counting bird nests along the way. Do you know I have seen 52 bird nests, and I have kept account of them." "Oh, look!" she said, "there are two more." "Have you been noticing them?" she inquired of me, to which I replied, "I have not seen a single bird nest—not one." I said, "You have been observing bird nests, while I have been looking at cattle; neither of us has been seeing that which the other observed." And so I said to Mrs. Gantt, "I have learned a lesson; perhaps in life we often see that for which we are looking, and so, too, we may fail to see that for which we do not look."

While we come to consider the life, the character, and the work of the distinguished Mark Twain perhaps the same situation may exist.

Samuel L. Clemens was born just 100 years ago the 30th of this coming November at Florida, Mo., in a log cabin, it is said. His life and his work have been looked upon, perhaps, in the same manner and for the same reasons by his friends and his critics as were the cattle and the bird nests observed by Mrs. Gantt and myself. Some have said that Mark Twain arose out of discouraging frontier conditions where there were few books and where no adequate standard of living had been developed. As a matter of fact, however, it is doubtful whether, anywhere in America, there could have been found in the forties and fifties of the last century a small section of country more favorable for his start in life than northeast Missouri. At the time of Mark Twain's birth the place of his birth was said to be about 40 miles south of what was considered the official frontier line of the United States and about 200 miles east of the official western frontier line of our country, which, of course, classed that territory as pioneer environment.

As evidence of the fact that it was a splendid section of our country in which to be born and reared and to receive youthful impressions and influences may be further verified by the fact that within a few miles of his birthplace was also the birthplace of Admiral Coontz, of the American Navy, who died some few weeks ago during this year, leaving a long and distinguished career; also in this same section of northeast Missouri there was born Admiral Willard of our Navy, who died just within the past few days after a long and distinguished service to our country; also it so happened, in this same northeast section of Missouri not far from the birthplace of Mark Twain, was the birthplace and the early home of General Pershing, the head of our Army during the World War, and who has at all times given examples of heroic and valuable service to our country; also in northeast Missouri, not far from the birthplace of the men just enumerated, is the birthplace of General Crowder, who was head of the Draft Board during the World War; also in northeast Missouri, near the scenes of the birthplaces of these distinguished men enumerated, was also the birthplace of Lieutenant Wiley, of our Navy, and only a few miles distant from the birthplace of Mark Twain was almost the lifelong home and residence of Speaker Champ Clark, where he, as a young lawyer, set forth, and where he enjoyed a long and distinguished career for public service and where he lies buried with honor and glory today.

It is not my purpose here to take up and discuss the various excellent and splendid works which Mark Twain contributed to the world. Literary critics and readers may differ as to the value, influence, and worth of the different books and works of which he was the author; some saw points of merit in all his works and some, as they believed, perhaps, may not have been so willing to praise as highly as others.

Mark Twain was not only a writer and author of great distinction—he was a philosopher as well as humorist, with scarcely any competition.

I remember on one occasion, at a time when I was a young law student in the Missouri University, I had the honor, pleasure, and privilege of seeing, meeting, and hearing Mark Twain. The university auditorium was crowded to its greatest capacity and almost immediately after he commenced talking to the student body the entire audience was in a convulsion of merriment and laughter, myself along with all the rest. Being a young law student and realizing it was a bit of wisdom for a lawyer at least to be able to read and understand people and to know whereby and wherewith people, and particularly juries, might be led from joy to sorrow, from one mood to another, and from gloominess to merriment, I rested my own attention for a time and struggled in an effort to give deep study to the power that was being manifested by the distinguished author. I had no more become settled down in this determination, studying him and his tactics mechanically, until I again found myself in the midst of the current of joy and merriment rushing along into the great sea of delight that he was carrying his entire audience to. Again I gripped myself, as I believed, planting my feet along the banks of the stream of mirth, and again I commenced or tried to commence my analysis of his power and influence in the sphere in which he was operating.

No more did I do than get myself fixed for further study and analysis than again I was drawn into the delight and merriment along with all the rest, but after all there was real sense and sound philosophy and real helpfulness from all his discourse and while we must admit that environment and training, opportunity and experience go far in determining the heights to which mankind may scale we must not forget that deep down in the soul of man there is something—call it heredity or what not, that has a tremendous influence in determining what man really is and also in determining what he may be and become.

Mark Twain, in his early youth, was a resident and maintained his home for years at Hannibal, Mo. Practically all of his boyhood and young manhood days were spent in and around Hannibal and up and down the Mississippi River. Points of interest about the city and the old homestead still are marked and kept in a fitting way in his honor. On Cardiff Hill a light is constantly burning throughout this year. The button having been touched by President Roosevelt sending the current of electricity forward, and the same will continue to illuminate Cardiff Hill throughout this year in honor of the one hundredth anniversary of the distinguished author, philosopher, and humorist's birth and achievement.

Mark Twain died at Redding, Conn., at his then residence, Stormfield, April 21, 1910, and burial took place at Elmira, N. Y.

Innocents Abroad, Life on the Mississippi, the Gilded Age, the Connecticut Yankee, Huckleberry Finn, Tom Sawyer, Pudd'nhead Wilson, Roughing It, the Prince and the Pauper, and many other of his works have erected an imperishable monument to his memory that will continue to be of imperishable value. While he was for many years a distinguished citizen of Hannibal, Mo., he became at last, long before the completion of his good works, a distinguished citizen of the world.

H. R. 6234

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein copy of a letter written to my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. ROGERS] by a former Member of Congress, W. W. Hastings.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter written to my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. ROGERS] by a former Member of Congress, Hon. W. W. Hastings:

TAHLEQUAH, OKLA., April 8, 1935.

Hon. WILL ROGERS,
Chairman House Committee on Indian Affairs,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of April 4 enclosing me a copy of H. R. 6234, "To promote the general welfare of Indians of the State of Oklahoma and for other purposes" and a subsequent letter requesting me to give you my reaction on this proposed legislation.

I have given this bill most careful study. It contains many similar provisions to those carried in the Wheeler-Howard bill, which was under consideration during the Seventy-third Congress and from which Oklahoma was excluded. I heartily favor increased and adequate appropriations for Indian education, health work, relief among destitute Indians, including the purchase of land for the use of indigent and homeless Indians.

The bill which you enclose me, from sections 1 to 4, inclusive, restates existing law and renews century-old promises to the Indians, and section 18 reenacts the authority heretofore granted to make appropriations for the benefit of Indians which have been carried in the Interior Department bill for a number of years. There is no new grant of authority to make appropriations for Indians in this section. It is a restatement of existing law.

Unfortunately the press reports contain only a general outline of the bill and do not take it up and analyze it section by section. Reports of those who have thus far appeared before the committee discuss the principles of the bill and do not indicate that they are familiar with the details.

In the hope of being of some assistance, I want to invite the attention of Members of Congress to certain constructive criticisms of the various sections of the bill.

Section 5 defines the term "Indian of the first degree" as a person having one-half or more Indian blood, and the term "Indian of the second degree" as a person having less than one-half Indian blood. This latter definition includes Indians of less than one-half degree Indian blood to those enrolled as of one two hundred and fifty-sixth quantum of Indian blood.

Section 2 contains the following paragraph:

"(b) All lands, property, and funds of the Indians of the second degree, as herein defined, are to be by the Secretary of the Interior relieved of all restrictions as rapidly as the best interest of the Indians and the public will permit and justify."

Section 7 contains two provisos:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, with or without application from the Indian owner of any such restricted lands, funds, or other property of less than one-half Indian blood, remove the restrictions from all or any part of the lands, funds, or other property belonging to such Indian."

And the second proviso is as follows:

"That before removing the restrictions from any land belonging to any Indian of less than one-half Indian blood", notice is provided to be given.

Section 9, in part, provides:

"That the trust or otherwise restricted property, of whatever kind or nature, belonging to any Indian of the State of Oklahoma of less than one-half Indian blood", which indicates a reimposition of restrictions on Indians of less than one-half Indian blood.

The press does not report any explanation for this definition of an "Indian of the second degree" or any reason why the above provisions quoted from sections 2, 7, and 9 are embodied in the bill if it is not intended to reimpose, by implication, restrictions on all Oklahoma Indians of less than one-half degree Indian blood. If it is not for this purpose, why insert this definition and the language quoted from the above sections?

The restrictions were removed from the lands and funds of all Indians of less than one-half Indian blood who are members of the Five Civilized Tribes by the act of May 27, 1908. The provisions hereinabove quoted in fact seem to indicate a reimposition of restrictions on Indians of less than one-half Indian blood. If this is not the intention, why the language quoted from the above sections?

Members of the Five Civilized Tribes of less than one-half Indian blood have been free from the supervisions of the Indian Bureau for almost 28 years. All of these Indians are citizens of the United States and have exercised the rights of citizenship and voted at all elections since statehood. Many of them have held important positions of trust, and I feel sure that public sentiment would oppose the reimpositions of restrictions on lands and funds of Indians of less than one-half degree Indian blood. If these provisions are not intended to apply to members of the Five Civilized Tribes, the exception should be made clear and not left in doubt.

Section 6, among other things, provides:

"Securities belonging to Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma shall, while held by the Secretary of the Interior, be free from any and all taxes."

Your attention is invited to the act of May 10, 1928, which exempted agricultural land, not to exceed 160 acres, from taxation, but specifically provided that all minerals and moneys received from oil and gas should be subject to taxation—State and Federal—the same as any other citizen of the State. The theory of this provision of May 10, 1928, was to protect the poorer Indian from confiscation of his land through taxation. I think no one will attempt to justify exemption from taxation of wealthy Indians who receive large incomes from minerals and oil and gas.

Section 9 confers exclusive jurisdiction upon the Secretary of the Interior: "(1) To continue administration of Indian estates; (2) to determine the heirs of such decedents; (3) the approval or disapproval of wills by such decedents; (4) the partition of lands, funds, or other restricted property among the heirs of such decedents; and (5) the settlement of any claims against restricted estates of such decedents." The decision of the Secretary of the Interior which, of course, means acting through a law clerk in the Bureau of Indian Affairs "shall be final and conclusive."

The last proviso of section 8 is as follows:

"That hereafter no guardian shall be appointed by the courts of the State of Oklahoma for any person of one-half or more Indian blood except on petition approved by the Secretary of the Interior."

This section, in effect, would take away all jurisdiction from the county and district courts of the State of Oklahoma in matters affecting Indians of one-half or more Indian blood. It means that all of the authority shall be exercised by a law clerk upon ex parte affidavits 1,500 miles away from Oklahoma. I cannot favor the determination of these matters upon ex parte affidavits and by a law clerk in no wise responsible to the people of the State of Oklahoma. It means interminable delays, irritation, and unsatisfactory administration.

Surely no Member of the Oklahoma delegation familiar with the Indian question would favor this section. I see no objection to giving notice to probate attorneys or some other Indian representative when any action is to be taken in any court in the State of Oklahoma, so that representatives of the Indian Service may appear as a matter of right and represent and protect the Indian, including the right of appeal, but I do most vigorously protest against the enactment of this section, or any part of it, that would confer exclusive jurisdiction upon the Secretary of the Interior who acts through a law clerk in the Indian Bureau.

This is not intended as a criticism of the present personnel of the Indian Bureau, many of whom have been there for years and rendered splendid service, but it is against long-distance government, and, regardless of the personnel of the Indian Bureau, the principle is as objectionable now as it was when it inspired our Revolutionary ancestors to risk everything to fight for local self-government.

It must be remembered that many Indian families have heirs some of whom are more than one-half Indian blood and some have less. As to the partition of lands, this provision would in effect destroy the value of interest in lands if there is not provided a way through the courts to determine the interest and provide a method for the sale of it. Section 8 would confer exclusive jurisdiction upon the Secretary of the Interior.

Section 8 of the act of January 27, 1933, makes it the duty of the probate attorneys appointed under the act of May 27, 1908, to appear and represent any restricted member of the Five Civilized Tribes before the county courts of any county in the State of Oklahoma or before any appellate court thereof and any matter in which said restricted Indians have an interest and they have the right of appeal.

Section 3 of the act of April 12, 1926, provides for a transfer of any suit from a State court to a Federal court where a restricted member of the Five Civilized Tribes is a party upon filing a motion to that effect.

Since the enactment of the act of April 12, 1926, and the act of January 27, 1933, there has been no criticism against protecting the rights of a restricted Indian either in the State or Federal courts of the State of Oklahoma.

Section 8 of the pending bill strikes at the very heart of the sovereignty of the State.

Section 9 provides:

"Wherever any question arises as to the quantum of Indian blood of any Indian subject to the provisions of this act, for the purpose of determining jurisdiction over the estate of such Indian, or otherwise, the Secretary of the Interior shall determine said quantum of Indian blood and his determination thereof shall be final and conclusive."

Under existing law the rolls are made conclusive evidence of quantum of Indian blood. This provision would repeal existing law and confer that jurisdiction upon the Secretary of the Interior. If a case were up for trial in the State or Federal court and the question of the quantum of Indian blood were to arise the case would have to be suspended until that question were determined by a law clerk 1,500 miles away. At present the rolls are conclusive and there is no uncertainty about it. This provision may be construed to permit the Indian Bureau to go beyond the rolls. This question should not be reopened.

The last half of section 10 provides for the collection from Indian owners a sum not exceeding one-fourth of 1 percent on the corpus of their accumulated funds amounting to $2,000, and the sums collected are to be placed in a fund for the relief of indigent Indians.

I strongly challenge this section. I favor a more liberal policy for the Indian Service in permitting Indians to voluntarily contribute to the support of needy friends and relatives. This they would liberally do if permitted. However, I do not favor using the taxing powers of the Government to tax one group for the benefit of another. You may tax all by general law, but I hesitate to agree that you can by law tax one class for the benefit of another.

With reference to the general authority to buy land for the benefit of homeless Indians, I favor the principle. However, I do not favor the purchase of large areas of submarginal land upon which the Indians cannot be taught to make a living. The land should be bought in the name of the United States for the benefit and use of the Indians and contracts made with respective Indians for the use of small tracts subject to rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior. If productive lands are not purchased, the purchase of submarginal lands and the improvement of them will be expensive and in the end prove a failure. If small productive tracts of approximately 20 acres to a family were bought and the Indian encouraged and taught to assist in improving the same under the supervision of more farm agents provided for the Indian Service, it would prove more successful and less expensive. The Indians could be located in the same area where they would be accessible to Government representatives without necessarily purchasing all contiguous tracts, much of which is nonproductive.

If all of the land within certain areas is purchased, much of the worthless land will be bought at exorbitant prices. This money should be saved for the homeless and indigent Indians for whom it is intended.

Remember, it costs as much to build a house, fence, and improve unproductive submarginal lands as it does productive land. Submarginal means, of course, lands which are under average production. Let's be frank about it. These are lands upon which no person, Indian or white, can make a living. Why purchase this character of land for Indians? It is bound in the end to prove a failure. An Indian gave a practical definition of submarginal land by calling it "starve to death" land. If the Indians of the Nation are induced to go upon nonproductive lands upon which it cannot be hoped that they can make a living, there is a moral obligation upon this Government to continue to maintain them through appropriations from the Federal Government.

The Congress should be made to understand that all of the lands of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, as well as the lands belonging to the Indians of smaller tribes, have all been allotted. Checkerboarded all through the Indian area, lands are owned and held by unrestricted Indians and by white people of no Indian blood. One cannot buy large areas of contiguous land without purchasing a very large part of nonproductive land. Up and down the streams and in the valleys in the same neighborhood small tracts of land could be purchased available for Indian use.

Two areas have been tentatively selected and options are being taken for the purchase of the lands included within them in northeastern Oklahoma. I have general information with reference to both and do not hesitate to say that, in my judgment, it would be a mistake to spend money from the Public Treasury in the purchase or improvement of either of them.

It should be brought to the attention of Congress that all of the Indians of Oklahoma are citizens of the United States and that all exercise the right of citizenship. They vote and hold office just as other citizens of the State. Many of them have been elected to the county and district benches. While the people of this State favor the protection of the Indian from being despoiled of his land or other property through their being represented by probate attorneys and United States district attorneys, they cannot favor taking away the jurisdiction of the courts, as is provided in section 8, and conferring this exclusive jurisdiction upon the Secretary of the Interior acting through a law clerk upon ex parte affidavits 1,500 miles away.

Let me repeat again, in order to make my position clear, that I favor adequate appropriations for Indians for education, health work, relief, for the purchase of productive lands for homeless and indigent Indians, and to employ additional farm agents to be located in their midst to assist them and show them how to plant, cultivate, market, and conserve their farm products.

Sincerely yours,

W. W. HASTINGS.

FREE SPEECH

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks, I include a copy of a speech that I was to give over radio station WHN in New York City on Friday, April 19, 1935, at 6:15 p. m., but which was not delivered because the officials of the station notified me an hour beforehand that owing to the fact that a copy of my remarks had only been received 2 hours in advance that I would not be permitted to speak.

In my opinion this was just a flimsy, fictitious excuse and a brazen interference with free speech by WHN on political issues. It is a form of censorship that is repugnant to free American citizens, particularly when there are hundreds of paid publicity agents at Washington doing nothing but getting out news and propaganda in defense of the new deal day and night over the radio and in the press. There is no regulation by the Federal Communications Commission that requires a copy of a radio speech to be delivered in advance.

I have spoken many times over different radio stations and have never been censored in any way before. The attitude of WHN, a comparatively small station, which had invited me to speak is a typical example of the state of terror that exists in some of the smaller stations that they might not have their license renewed.

I have too much respect for the membership of the Federal Communications Commission to conceive for one moment that partisanship would or could be carried to that extent. The action of WHN was probably inspired by fear of the bureaucracy and regimentation in Washington, but even the "new dealers" do not dare to interfere with freedom of speech and if they ever atempt it, it will be a political boomerang and a blunder of the worst kind.

Naturally, the Republicans would take up the challenge without delay or evasion in behalf of freedom of speech and our free institutions.

In am inserting herewith a copy of a telegram sent by me in reply to one from the American Civil Liberties Union, offering their cooperation to fight against suppression of free speech:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22, 1935.

ROGER N. BALDWIN,
Director American Civil Liberties Union,
100 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.:

Replying to your telegram, am in favor of the fullest freedom of speech and of the press for all American citizens regardless of race, colors, creed, or party affiliations, except to the extent of urging the overthrow of our republican form of government by force and violence, which is guaranteed to each State by the Federal Constitution. I do not favor granting freedom of speech to aliens in order to spread class hatred, promote strikes, riots, sabotage, and industrial unrest, and to undermine and tear down our free institutions. I favor deporting such aliens and giving their jobs to loyal American citizens who have faith in our institutions and American system. Will be glad to cooperate with you for the fullest and freest discussion of political and economic problems; clear stations for legal responsibility except for libel, slander, and sedition; require public records of reasons for refusing or censoring political economic talks; and to set up a commission to investigate radio control. The attempt of the Federal Government to censor, control, or interfere with the rights of American citizens to expose the tragic failure of the new-deal experiments is a menace to our free institutions and popular government. It must be fought without compromise or the American people will be deprived of free speech and of their rights and liberties and find themselves no longer sovereign and free citizens but pawns to a bureaucratic, autocratic, dictatorial Government at Washington without their consent or approval.

HAMILTON FISH, Jr.

THE CANCELED OR UNDELIVERED SPEECH

THE PROPOSED VICIOUS REAPPORTIONMENT IN NEW YORK STATE AND THE NEW DEAL

I desire to take this opportunity to pay my respects to Governor Lehman, whom hitherto I have always held in the highest regard as above petty, despicable, and blind partisanship. Of all the contemptible and ruthless political acts ever attempted out of brazen partisanship the attempt to gerrymander the up-State congressional districts, obviously to throw two sitting Republican Members together in one district, regardless of geography or in the interest of the people or counties involved, is the grossest, rawest, and cheapest political kind of trickery. It makes no difference whether James Aloysius Farley, with political venom in his heart for having his repeated blunders exposed by Republican Members of the Congress, such as the air mail fiasco and gifts of imperforated stamps to members of the Cabinet, his own family, and to the President, or whether it is the President's autocratic and high-handed way of answering the Republican critics who, such as SNELL, DAN REED, CROWTHER, TABER, CULKIN, and WADSWORTH, have ridiculed and exposed the tragic failure and breakdown of the new-deal experiments. Nevertheless, Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, as sponsor of the congressional reapportionment up-State, must bear the responsibility.

Tammany Hall, in its balmiest and most political corrupt days, would never have dared to sponsor such an abomination of desolation. What a travesty for a supposedly high-minded and politically honest Governor, who received hundreds of thousands of Republican votes, to blight his own record as Governor and his standing as a liberal to sponsor, at the crack of Jim Farley's patronage whip or the revengeful and dictatorial urging of the autocrat in the White House, a dishonest, dishonorable, and monstrous redistricting of up-State congressional districts.

Let Governor Lehman call an extra session of the legislature and try by whip and spur to lash recalcitrant and disgusted Democrats into line. But let the people know all the facts and the extent of the bitter, bigoted partisan spirit that animates the sponsors of the bill and the motives behind it. As for me, it makes no difference what district I am in because I have always been able to fight my own battles and carry the issues to the people.

If Governor Lehman goes on the radio and appeals for a fair congressional reapportionment bill, no one will object—but if he tries to jam through the present rotten measure conceived in political hatred and revenge he will go out of office as the weakest, pettiest, and most bigoted partisan ever to sit in the Governor's chair. The congressional reapportionment bill stinks and shines and shines and stinks like a dead mackerel in the moonlight.

Let the Governor beware of his false friends and permitting them to drag him down into the political quagmire and to involve his name and reputation in a putrid mess and into a political scandal that even Tammany disdains and which like Banquos ghost will not down but will plague Governor Lehman and his reputation for fair and honest dealing for years to come.

The time has come to tell the truth and to let the people back home, in spite of the honeyed words and sugar-coated fireside talks of the President, know that the new-deal measures, particularly the N. R. A. and A. A. A. are collapsing of their own weight and are being denounced even by Democrats as the greatest economic failures and monstrosities in the history of our country.

The Republicans would have no right to criticize the new-deal measures if they had succeeded in relieving unemployment and putting American men and women back to work, even at the cost of $15,000,000,000. The tragedy of the situation is that there are a million and a half more unemployed, according to the American Federation of Labor, than there was a year ago.

The Republican Party has been shadowboxing long enough and pulling its punches beyond the necessities of the occasion. There is only one person responsible for the break-down and failure of the new-deal policies which are retarding recovery and prolonging the depression, and that is Franklin D. Roosevelt, who was the author of all those unsound experiments, including the N. R. A. and A. A. A. that are leading the country on to the rocks of bankruptcy, chaos, and disorder. No matter what party American citizens may have belonged to in the past, the time has come for all those who believe in our industrial system, based on private initiative and reasonable profit, in sound money, in a balanced Budget, and against Government ownership, destructive taxation, continued borrowing, and unlimited deficits and in intolerable and crushing bureaucracy at Washington, to join forces to throw out the "new dealers."

All the new-deal measures have clashed with common sense, the experience of the past, and the Constitution of the United States. The blatant General Johnson declared the N. R. A. a holy and sacred institution above reproach, but today, even Democrats join in the swelling chorus repudiating it as a failure that should be wiped out or drastically modified. There was once a time when any critic of the N. R. A. was either a traitor or a partisan bigot. The President's message on the utility holding companies was an amazing example of the extent that the administration has become a propaganda machine. No American, according to the President, has the right to even petition Congress to modify legislation without committing an unethical and unloyal act. Have the liberties of the American people burned so low that they have no rights or voice left to petition their elected representatives in Congress?

The President speaks of a more abundant life for the American people—a very beautiful phrase for fireside talks. But how can it be developed by a program of scarcity and reduction of crops and birth control of pigs and an increase in the cost of living? When the American people wake up and see that the President's program is destroying wealth and impoverishing the people, political sentiment will change over night. There has been a tremendous swing in public sentiment away from the new deal in the last 3 months, but that is only the beginning of an avalanche that, once the facts are known of the utter collapse and breakdown of the new deal, will sweep everything and everyone responsible for the socialistic experiments and the destruction of business confidence into political oblivion. The people have been mesmerized and hypnotized owing to the consistent and studied attempts to mislead and befog the real issues. Let us tear the veil off and unmask the true situation.

I indict the new-deal administration on its record for the past year as the greatest failure in American history. I charge President Roosevelt with having destroyed business confidence, squandered American resources, and with the impairment of the national credit. I accuse him of having imposed unsound, unworkable, and socialistic measures upon the Nation that have increased the cost of living, impoverished American people, lost the world market for our cotton and wheat surplus crops, and increased unemployment. I condemn him for demanding control of the purse strings from Congress, turning the Constitution into a scrap of paper and changing our representative form of government without the consent of the governed, into an autocratic and dictatorial form of government. I denounce his administration as having no economic policy except to pile debt upon debt by borrowing billions upon billions without any thought of balancing the Budget or the inevitable day of reckoning and collapse of credit and the bankruptcy of the Government. I hold President Roosevelt responsible for appointing numerous radicals, Socialists and Communists to important positions in the Government's service, who have done more to cause labor unrest, unprecedented strikes, and to promote more class hatred in 2 years than all other administrations since the birth of the Republic.

CLAIMANTS WHO SUFFERED LOSS FROM FIRES SET BY GOVERNMENT-OPERATED RAILROADS IN MINNESOTA IN 1918

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, some days ago I addressed the House of Representatives in connection with the bill H. R. 3362, for the relief of people who lost their property as a result of fires set by Government-operated railroads. When I talked to my colleagues at that time, I pointed out that this bill has the endorsement of President Roosevelt and submitted evidence to sustain that position. Those most familiar with the facts, will know that the Government made cheap, unfair, and coercive settlements with the fire claimants.

One of the leading newspapers in the Northwest is the St. Paul Pioneer Press, published at St. Paul, Minn. This newspaper has a reputation for accuracy and for careful investigation of facts before they adopt an editorial policy. The St. Paul Pioneer Press did investigate relative to the policy of the Government in connection with the fires of October 1918.

The St. Paul Pioneer Press in commenting on the settlements which had recently been completed by the Director General of the Railroads, used this language in an editorial under date of Thursday, August 29, 1929:

VICTIMS OF THE LAW

Financial need forced a majority of the Minnesota forest-fire sufferers of 1918 to make settlements of their claims against the United States Government on a basis of from 30 to 50 percent. They could not await unwinding of red tape before receiving full amount of damages due.

The Government admitted responsibility for the fires, which were started by sparks from locomotives while the railroads were under Federal control. The full amount of the loss likewise was conceded. But, taking advantage of dire extremity of the sufferers, the Railroad Administration sought to adjust the claims on a partial-payment basis.

Having accepted these settlements, victims of the fire have no further redress in courts of law. Their only recourse is to Congress, where they may present a claim of moral responsibility for the remaining amount due them. Acting on that procedure, 8,000 of the sufferers have organized themselves into an association which will ask that a Federal appropriation of $18,000,000 be made to pay them in full.

The public has no desire to see their Government act like an ambulance-chasing claim adjuster, taking advantage of the law's delays to secure unfair settlements on its victims. Instead of being payments the amounts first granted should have been advances to tide the impoverished farmers over their crisis until a final adjustment could be made. Every good citizen will agree, if he knows the facts, that Congress should hearken to the plea of the Minnesota Forest Fire Reimbursement Association.

This editorial will be found on page 281 of the hearings in the House committee conducted the week of March 26, 1930, on a measure then pending for the relief of the fire claimants.

I am sure that my colleagues will agree with me that settlements made under conditions outlined in this editorial, were not settlements at all, but only partial payments on account.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR VETERANS

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. AYERS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. AYERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to discuss briefly the bill H. R. 6995, introduced by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH], to restore the Spanish-American War veteran to his previous status, and I think it is only proper and appropriate that this discussion should be had on this, the thirty-seventh anniversary, of our entering into war with the Kingdom of Spain.

Americans are not a military people; we have never maintained a noticeable standing army; we have never fought for an increase in territory; we have never fought because our commercial spirit had been outraged; we fought only because it was necessary to maintain and establish our independence; and thereafter we fought to uphold and maintain our manhood and standing among the family of nations; to protect and preserve our rights on land and seas; to outlaw tyranny in this hemisphere, and in all instances we have fought for honor and humanity.

We are and always have been mindful of the horrors of war. Our forefathers realized that when they crossed swords with King George, but they were not afraid in their battle for the right, neither were they afraid in 1812 when they battled Great Britain for the freedom of the seas. They were not afraid in 1845 when they went to the rescue of the liberty-loving Texans. War was indeed a horror in '61, when brother was pitted against brother. But it did not frighten either those who wore the "blue" nor those who wore the "gray", for they each believed that their position was for right and for freedom. On each side it was a demonstration of the high character and determination of the men who make up this Nation. When the insults of Spain to this country came along in '98 it was both those who wore the "blue" and those who wore the "gray" that quickly put an end to Spain's tyrannical rule in the Western Hemisphere and maintained the honor of this Republic.

On January 25, 1898, a United States warship, the Maine, on a peaceful mission, arrived at the harbor of Habana. Its coming had been cabled ahead and it was met and piloted to its anchoring place by a regular Spanish Government pilot. While lying there on this peaceful mission, on February 15, it was destroyed by a mine lying directly under it. With its destruction 266 loyal Americans, without the slightest warning, went to a watery grave.

The fact that Spain for some time had been cruelly slaughtering and starving to death our next-door neighbors, prompted a large percentage of our people to the belief that we should free Cuba from Spanish rule; however, neither the President nor the Congress believed that we should interfere. But when the Maine and 266 Americans were sent to the bottom of Habana Harbor by what was determined to be a submarine mine, over which the ship had been anchored by a Spanish officer in a supposed spirit of friendship, and when Spain, on only a superficial examination, had declared that this was an accident due to an internal explosion, practically the whole of America revolted against Spain and demanded its withdrawal from Cuba.

President McKinley, showing great forbearance, suggested an armistice of the warring countries to allow negotiations for peace through the friendly offices of the United States, with full assurance that the United States did not wish to acquire Cuba. This suggestion was refused. After that, nothing short of Cuban independence would satisfy the American people. Neither the President nor the Congress could have withstood this sentiment. The last vestige of Spanish power in the western world must now be ended.

On April 20 Congress passed a joint resolution asking for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba and that Spain withdraw from the island. When this was transmitted to the Spanish Minister here in Washington, he asked for his passports, and withdrew. This action was brought to the attention of the Congress on April 25—37 years ago today—by message from President McKinley, which was read at this hour of that day. Later in the afternoon a bill passed both Houses without a dissenting vote, declaring that war existed between the United States and the Kingdom of Spain.

Volunteers were called, and overenlistments occurred in every State. Untrained, they were taken to the swamps and jungles of Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands. They had none of the privileges made possible by modern medical science as were afforded in the World War. The casualty list from fever and disease was far greater than in any other of our wars.

WOUNDS OF THE STATES HEALED

In the War between the States, Joseph Wheeler, of Georgia, had been a gallant cavalry officer in the Confederate Army, where he had won the title of "Fighting Joe." Although past 62 years of age, he was one of the first to answer the call. The President, who had been his adversary in the Civil War, at once commissioned him a major general, and he was the first man under fire in Cuba, for he was at the head of his command at the opening of hostilities. General Wheeler was in actual command of the land forces in Cuba. He was accused of assuming that command, but nevertheless he had it and his generalship is an everlasting tribute to his Americanism and his ability. It was under him that Colonel Roosevelt and his Rough Riders served. And it was under him that Colonel Wood fought. General Wheeler's wise executive foresight, displayed in the many battles at and around Santiago, San Juan, and San Juan Hill, was responsible for our victories by the land forces on the island. With him, in addition to the Roosevelt Rough Riders, were other cavalry, infantry, and artillery, made up of sons of men who had fought beside him in the Confederate Army, and of sons of men who had been with Grant and McClellan and Sherman in the Union Army.

Fighting under General Wheeler, and one of the first of those to make the supreme sacrifice, was Sgt. Hamilton Fish, of New York, first cousin of our distinguished colleague from the Empire State, and grandson of Hamilton Fish, Secretary of State under President Grant. This war immediately demonstrated that all sores between the States had healed and that we had a united front to preserve our integrity and to maintain our honor against all enemies, and that we were one America, inseparable. [Applause.]

While the Spaniards were being taken care of at Cuba, Admiral Dewey with the Pacific squadron was taking care of them on the other side of the world. The War with Spain really ended within 4 months, resulting in Cuban independence and leaving us with a rebellious foster child in the far-off Pacific; indeed, the hostile attitude of the Filipinos necessitated keeping our troops in the islands at war strength for some 18 months.

The Spanish-American War developed a Dewey, a Schley, a Sampson, a Hobson, a Wood, a Roosevelt, a Funston, and one of the most loyal and patriotic volunteer armies ever organized. On the other side, the horrors of that war are the worst we have ever encountered.

ENLISTED WITHOUT ANY IDEA OF REWARD

The average Spanish-American War veteran is now past 61 years of age. Thirty-five years ago he enlisted out of sheer patriotism and devotion to country and without any hope of reward other than the feeling that he had done his duty as a citizen. When the war was over and the Philippine Insurrection was settled, these voluntary soldiers left the malaria and typhoid swamps of Cuba, Puerto Rico, and of the Philippines with germ-ridden and diseased bodies; yet little did they think of ever desiring or of ever needing a Government pension. Their pride and their hope was that they had preserved the integrity of their country and that they had freed a down-trodden people, and now they hastened to get back to their loved ones and to the land of health and happiness. A large percentage of them started home from a malaria, from a chronic-dysentery, or from a typhoid bed. Not until the aftermath of those terrible diseases had made serious inroads on their physical ability would they ask or seek relief from their Government.

After some 22 years, an appreciative Government put them on the pension list; and now it is not fair to say that their pensions should be reduced or that they should furnish any additional evidence to maintain them. Their present condition, when considered with the very nature of the service they performed, is presumptive evidence that the Congress was right when it gave them the pensions, and all subsequent Congresses should maintain the action of that Congress.

HORRIBLE HEALTH CONDITIONS

Eighteen months in the Philippine Islands in those days and under the conditions that existed in the islands at that time would permanently disable any white man. "Malaria", "chronic dysentery", "typhoid", "camps in stagnant swamps", "leprosy", "lack of medical and hospital facilities", "all-around insanitary conditions", "Alger's embalmed beef" were all common words and phrases connected with our Army in the War with Spain and the Philippine Insurrection.

THE SMITH BILL TO RESTORE BENEFITS

Mr. Speaker, the veterans of the Army of '98—the 100-percent Volunteer Army—should be placed on the same basis as the veterans of the War between the States, and their widows and dependents should be treated likewise. [Applause.] To the end that we will do that, we should at this session and without hesitation pass H. R. 6995, a bill introduced by Congressman SMITH of Washington, repealing the Economy Act insofar as it pertains to the veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Boxer Rebellion, and the Philippine Insurrection and their widows and orphans.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Montana has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYERS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wonder if the gentleman has had opportunity to examine the bills introduced on behalf of the Spanish War men. I have introduced a bill to place the Spanish-American War veterans on the same basis as the Civil War men, and that is what should be done.

Mr. AYERS. That is exactly what I am arguing we should do.

Mr. LUNDEEN. And I think the gentleman is making an excellent argument.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYERS. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I want to congratulate the gentleman on the magnificent and eloquent tribute he has paid the Spanish-American War veteran. I think these veterans have been shamelessly treated under the so-called "Economy Act", and I would like to know just what the status of the bill (H. R. 6995) is at this time.

Mr. AYERS. It is in committee. It has not been reported.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. What is being done toward having it reported by the committee?

Mr. AYERS. I do not know what the action of the committee is to be. I sincerely hope it shall be favorable and that the bill may get to the floor of the House at an early date.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I would like to join in a petition to have the committee discharged from the consideration of the bill and have the measure brought up on the floor here. For this Congress to adjourn without correcting the injustice that has been inflicted on these worthy veterans, most of whom are now far past the age when they can earn a livelihood, would be an act of the grossest neglect and ingratitude. If we continue to ignore those who have made sacrifices for the flag as these Spanish War veterans did in '98, while expending millions, yea, billions, for every imaginable vagary, it will be poor encouragement for men to rally to their country's colors in the future.

Mr. AYERS. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee for his contribution.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield for one observation, it seems to me there should be an amendment put in the bill when it is considered by the committee, not to reduce any pension that they are now receiving.

Mr. AYERS. The purpose of the bill is to restore them to their status before the enactment of the economy bill.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. But some of them are getting more now, under a peculiar ruling, than they would get under such a bill, and there ought to be an amendment in the bill so as not to reduce any pensions.

Mr. AYERS. I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky and thank him for the suggestion.

Mr. Speaker, in the name of economy our Government reduced the benefits of these men and their dependents, and now in the name of recovery, which is on everyone's tongue, let us fully restore these just, equitable, and well-earned benefits. [Applause.]

To these veterans, alive as well as those dead, this Government is indebted, and for those alive and for the widows and orphans of those dead, I urge this body to pass the Smith bill.

We are always quick to recognize our direct obligations to the dead and we are prompt in expounding their virtues. We are also liberal in floral tributes to them. That is all just and right, for it should be so. But I am one who also believes in flowers for the living. [Applause.] Now, my fellow Members of the House, from your demonstration of approval of that remark, I call upon you to pass this bill and give to these living veterans a flower worth while. Indeed, a flower to the living is worth scores of bouquets to the dead. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker and Members, 37 years ago today the Congress of the United States formally declared war on the Kingdom of Spain, stipulating in the bill which was passed that—> War existed since the 21st day of April, A. D. 1898, including said day, between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain.

I rise this afternoon to pay tribute to the approximately 6,000 men and women who lost their lives in the Spanish-American War, and the approximately 200,000 participants who have died since that period; also to express my high regard for our Spanish-American War veterans who are yet alive.

It is quite proper also that, on this day, we rise in reverent memory to the principal characters in that conflict—President McKinley, Colonel Roosevelt, Gen. Joe Wheeler, General Merritt, Admirals Dewey, Sampson, Schley, Bob Evans, and others who contributed so unselfishly to bring success to American arms.

Approximately 450,000 officers and men were enlisted and served between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, on which latter date the Philippine Insurrection was finally terminated. Never before in our history had a war of such proportions been fought in which every individual involved was a volunteer. "Remember the Maine" was the slogan which impelled thousands of American youths to volunteer for service.

This Congress includes a number of individuals who served in the War with Spain and it also includes numbers of others who volunteered for service but who were not accepted.

War, at its best, is what Sherman termed it. In the brief time allotted to me, however, I wish to call attention to some of the benefits which came to our Nation as a result of our participation in the Spanish-American War.

LAST VESTIGE OF SECTIONALISM EFFACED

No one can deny that the mingling of the volunteers of the North with the volunteers of the South in the Spanish-American War contributed in no small measure to the complete effacement of sectional feeling in the United States. It is my belief that I voice the opinion of the Northern volunteers when I state that as a result of their commingling with our patriots of the South and with the southern citizenry, a more complete understanding developed between the North and the South and I believe the wounds of the Civil War may be said to have been effectually healed from that period.

I myself was quartered with the First Texas Volunteer Regiment for a time and the higher regard which I have for the Texas delegation in the Congress, especially my good friends, Mr. BLANTON, Mr. PATMAN, JOE EAGLE, and others, may be said to have its roots in the friendship and understanding which I absorbed in my first association with the men of the South in 1898.

Outstanding as a testimonial to the principles of the American people, we, as a Nation, can point with pride to the fact that although we were victorious in this conflict, we did not annex the territory of the vanquished but instead, we paid the Kingdom of Spain quite liberally and satisfactorily for the territory we acquired as a result of the war.

The United States also established a new principle among nations in that liberty was accorded the Cuban people and self-government was established in Puerto Rico and in the Philippines as soon as conditions warranted. Ours was not an act of imperialism but an act of liberalism to an alien people. This principle stands today in glaring contrast to the attitude of other governments toward their various dependencies or colonies.

Going a step further under the present Democratic administration, through the repeal of the Platt amendment, full liberty of action is now enjoyed by the Cuban Government while, at this time, machinery is in process of development whereby complete independence may be extended to the Philippine Islands.

Commercial and other advantages accruing to the United States as a result of the Spanish-American War have been estimated at more than $8,000,000,000. Outstanding and worth more than actual dollars and cents, however, are the prestige and esteem of the civilized world which we enjoyed as a result of the admirable conduct of our Army and Navy on land and sea. The exploits of American troops in China, in joint action with the allied forces in the relief of Peking, gave evidence to the world that the American soldiers were excelled by none, not even by the highly trained troops of Europe. A hitherto little-appreciated Nation, the United States emerged from the Spanish-American War as a world power.

Notwithstanding the national advantages which have resulted from the sacrifices of our Spanish-American War veterans, they have been virtually the "forgotten veterans" of our wars. Ill-prepared, our troops fought at Santiago with obsolete equipment. Not only were they handicapped by a lack of arms and munitions, but our medical facilities appeared to have been developed very little since the days of the Civil War. Disease took more men than bullets, not only in Santiago but later on in the Philippines as well.

VETERANS OF CUBAN ARMY AT MONTAUK POINT

I submit for the inspection of the Members photostatic copies of pages of the New York World, published in September 1898, depicting conditions at Montauk Point, where the returning Cuban Army was quartered and showing the havoc which improper food, improper sanitation, and inadequate medical care wrought among our veterans, already enervated as a result of their tropical service. As this article shows, by actual photographs and sketches, many of the veterans from Santiago were reduced to mere shadows of their former selves; one veteran lost 70 pounds in weight in the time between his departure at Tampa and his arrival at Long Island City from Cuba in August 1898. Many returned only to die and as I myself was at Montauk Point, quartered with the Army which came from Cuba, I witnessed the astoundingly large number of daily burials of our men.

Wherever possible the convalescent sick were invalided home and left to shift for themselves. Eventually they were discharged and took up the battle of life as best they could with their physical handicaps.

Similar conditions applied in the Philippines, and those on the west coast who observed the returning Army from the Philippines, will confirm my statement, that the men were virtually walking skeletons. These men also were invalided home and discharged shortly thereafter. Notwithstanding their impaired health, they endeavored to carry on and, thanks to their resolute spirits, many of them regained their health temporarily. Practically every man who contracted malaria, typhoid, dysentery, and other diseases in Cuba and the Philippines has, in a sense, however, borne these disabilities throughout life. An examination of the unusually high mortality rate among Spanish-American War veterans today evidences the fact that their lives have been shortened as a result of the physical impairments suffered during their active service days.

Every World War veteran today owes, indirectly, a debt to the Spanish War veterans. Had it not been for the lessons absorbed by our medical department during the Spanish-American War and Philippine Insurrection, there is no doubt that the mortality rate during the World War from disease and other causes would have been much higher. In a sense, the price in sacrifice, suffering, and permanent physical impairment which the Spanish-American War veteran paid, and continues to pay, protected the World War veteran from a similar experience.

As a veteran of the World War myself, I know something of the sacrifices and splendid service of our veterans of that conflict, and I recognize that they are fully entitled to the benefits which have been granted to them by a grateful Government. I mention this as I do not wish my remarks to be construed as in any wise disparaging to them or as bringing into question their right to the benefits granted them.

THE SPANISH VETERAN—THE "FORGOTTEN VETERAN"

I would emphasize the fact, however, that our Nation is also debtor to the Spanish-American War veteran, and that he too is entitled to sympathetic consideration at the hands of a grateful Government, a fact which seems to have been too much overlooked in the past. The Spanish War veteran, when discharged from the service, was sent home to rehabilitate himself with the help of his family and friends. There were no hospitalization laws at that time. He received no pension nor compensation until 22 years after the war, except in some instances an insignificant general-service pension of $6 to $17 per month. He did not receive a cash bonus of $60 on discharge; neither did he receive an adjusted-service certificate.

He did not have the advantages of Government insurance at a low premium rate. There was not a Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., or Salvation Army lassie—God bless them—at every camp and station to cater to his needs. While he was fighting and advancing the interest of our Nation abroad, his family received no dependency allowance. He received insignificant rations, of which embalmed beef was a basic portion. In addition, the medical staff of the Army was poorly equipped in respect to preventive medicine and more modern sanitation facilities, so that the veteran was the more or less helpless victim of the epidemics which ravaged the camps.

Notwithstanding the various handicaps which the Spanish veteran suffered, he was not a quitter. He volunteered to fight with no thought of personal gain, and his objective was to bring liberty to an oppressed people and honor and prestige to his country. Approximately 15,000 volunteers of State regiments who were in the Philippines at the end of the Spanish-American War revolunteered to serve, because of the outbreak of the insurrection, until replacements could be sent from the United States to relieve them. Notwithstanding that their enlistments had expired, they remained in the Philippines to suppress the insurrection and to make more secure the victory which Dewey brought to American arms in the capture of Manila.

In spite of this mark of special heroism and superpatriotism on the part of the State volunteers, our Nation has failed thus far to meet its just obligation in paying to these men the cost of their transportation from the Philippines to San Francisco or the point of their enlistment. As true Americans, none of them would lay down their arms and permit the insurrectos to drive the remaining forces of Regulars to the ships at anchor in the bay. They held Manila and pushed back the insurrectos with great loss of life to themselves and those who survived the hazardous campaign in the tropical swamp areas suffered, in many instances, permanent physical impairment.

I reiterate that the Spanish-American War veteran was a fighting man. He participated in what was in all probability the last war of its kind we shall ever experience—that is, one of a semiguerrilla or open combat nature, in which the stamina of the individual is the determinative influence. He was not motivated by the hope of obtaining credit for himself, he thought only of advancing the best interest of our Nation.

For this reason he is justified, in my opinion, in feeling a deep sense of resentment at the attitude of our Government, as evidenced in the Economy Act, by which to maintain the credit of the United States, the well-deserved pensions—pitifully insignificant—paid to the Spanish War veterans were either abolished or drastically reduced. It should be borne in mind, in this connection, that there were very meager, if any, medical records kept during the Spanish-American War; and even such records as were kept of Volunteers and Regulars in the Philippines were mostly destroyed by termites; therefore, the requirement in the Economy Act, 35 years after the termination of the war, that service connection for disabilities be established in order to show title to pension was, in effect, a practical denial of pension benefits to the majority of our Spanish War veterans. Such a requirement is unreasonable and absurd, in view of the circumstances referred to, and for that reason, if for no other, the Spanish War veterans should be restored to their former pension benefits or their present disabilities recognized as service connected.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the compensation and pension which our Spanish War veterans are now receiving are totally insufficient?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Their pension is not only insufficient now, but it has always been insufficient in consideration of the services which they rendered and the assets which they brought to our Nation through their sacrifice and suffering in the Tropics. The pensions granted to their widows and dependents are similarly inadequate and it is a travesty on justice that those who contributed so much to our national welfare should be so shabbily treated.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Is it not also true that there are thousands and thousands of disabled Spanish War veterans taken off the rolls by the Economy Act, who are still off the rolls and on the relief rolls?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Every word the gentleman says is true and that, indeed, is one of the most pathetic features of the Economy Act, a measure which was enacted to maintain the credit of the United States. I am confident that no Member of this Congress, recognizing the sacrifice of the Spanish War veterans, would permit the maintenance of the credit of the United States to stand in the way of giving to them a fair and just pension.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 1 minute more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. There is a bill now pending (H. R. 6995) to remedy this situation, is there not?

Mr. HOEPPEL. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the present status of that bill? I was in hopes that it had been reported.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Answering my good friend, the gentleman from Texas, the bill to which he refers has not yet been accorded a hearing in committee. Because of the standing and ability of the gentleman from Texas and the sincere and honest attitude he has taken in the interest of all our veterans, I hope he will urge the chairman of the committee to grant us an early hearing on this measure. I recall with deepest gratitude the wonderful support which the gentleman from Texas gave to Mr. PATMAN, in the passage of the bonus bill in the last Congress, and again in this session, for which the World War veterans are deeply indebted to him. I am confident that he will assist us with the Spanish-American-veteran pension bill with the same degree of enthusiasm.

Mr. BLANTON. That bill is before which Pension Committee?

Mr. HOEPPEL. The Pension Committee to which are assigned all pension bills, except those pertaining to the Civil War. As a Member of the House, in daily association with you, I feel sure that the Membership is well disposed toward all veterans, and especially the Spanish War veterans. Therefore, I am confident that if we could bring H. R. 6995 to the floor for consideration, it would be passed by a huge majority.

I have discussed the veteran question with the President on several occasions and have repeatedly expressed myself as opposed to the veteran provisions of the Economy Act, which, in my opinion, are flagrantly unjust. In a recent conference with him I emphasized the imperative necessity of enacting a law providing a uniform scale of pensions in order to handle this question justly and fairly with respect to all our veterans and their dependents. If we cannot enact such legislation in this session, however (and due to the burden of pending emergency legislation, the prospects are not encouraging), the least we can do is to correct the glaring injustice suffered by our Spanish-American War veterans and their dependents under the provisions of the Economy Act, by the enactment of H. R. 6995 to restore to them their former pension benefits. [Applause.]

MAKE SCIENCE THE PEOPLE'S SERVANT

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, no feature in the administration bill to expand the Tennessee Valley experiment appeals to me more strongly than the section authorizing the purchase of municipal power plants where a referendum vote shows the people to be favorable to the idea.

The project itself is one that captures the imagination while commending itself to the practical good sense of all who feel that public utilities should be blessings for the whole people instead of tools by which a favored few can extract vast profits from the remainder of the population. But the project itself is of minor consequence compared with the encouraging possibility of publicly owned power plants throughout the country if the pending measure becomes a law. Its enactment will mean far more than the development of Tennessee Valley hydroelectric power. Such a law may constitute the first important step toward ownership by the people of one, at least, of the natural resources that should never have belonged to private interests at any time. While it would be only a short step, when we consider the necessity of transfer of public utilities generally from the hands of corporation magnates, nevertheless, it would be of tremendous significance in the economic and political history of the Nation. Not only would it lift many burdens from the backs of the common people, but it would constitute an important precedent for continuing along the enlightened and progressive path of public ownership. It is not surprising that every profiteering interest in America is fighting this bill, tooth and nail, hoping either to defeat it or to completely emasculate it in case it is passed.

I have urged the development of hydroelectric power from the Missouri River and pointed out the immense advantages that would accrue to the people of my State, South Dakota, as well as to residents of other States. The same principle is applicable everywhere, although naturally I have stressed such development in my own section. I am more familiar with conditions there and I feel a special responsibility there, although I certainly hope for the maximum of hydroelectric development the country over—development that means comforts and conveniences for the whole people at actual cost plus a moderate overhead, instead of development that will result in more profits for the Power Trust and its subsidiaries.

No nation has more marvelous machinery, more remarkable inventions, more scientific genius, than ours. Why, then, are not our people free from the curse of poverty, unemployment, economic uncertainty, and the fear of destitution?

In an article in the Literary Digest by Prof. Henry Flury, an able Washington biologist and author, headed, "Is This an Age of Science?" the professor remarks:

> Many of us who handle scientific ideas as a means of earning our daily bread are wondering whether this really is an age of science. The race between catastrophe and education (science) may be more nearly true than many of us realize and we must shake ourselves out of the smug complacency that this is an age of science. Rather it is an age of button pushers.

The trouble, it seems to me, is not in the button pushing itself but in the fact that the button pushing is now so regulated as to benefit none but a small minority. This has been shown by Professor Flury as well as by many other modern economists such as Stuart Chase and Scott Nearing, who have urged, not the abolition of the machine, but the use of the machine for the entire citizenry instead of as a means of profit making for a tiny percentage of the Nation. The fault is not in the machines; it is in the denial of their facilities to the general public except through payment of tribute to owners who acquired them, not by superior industry and thrift but by legalized robbery under the prevailing profit system.

What an uproar would result if I were to recommend private ownership of roads. How objectionable we find the few remaining toll bridges that are privately owned. How absurd you would consider it if I were to propose private ownership of rivers, harbors, docks, fire departments, parks, playgrounds, and schools. Yet is there any more reason—in fact, is there not much less reason—why trusts and industrial barons should be the proprietors of the mines from which comes our fuel, the plants from which we get our electricity and gas, the railroad systems on which we travel and ship goods, and the factories that produce our clothes and manufactured food? Are these things not even more essential than the others? To put them in the hands of the people, operating through the people's Government, would not be confiscation, but restitution.

Harry F. Ward, professor of Christian ethics in Union Theological Seminary, in his able brochure, The Profit Motive, has well said:

> The type of thinking and activity that has produced the smooth-running dynamo cannot long endure the sloppy disorganization of business for profit which cannot get fuel to a powerhouse without waste of coal below and human life above the ground, which cannot distribute its benefits without increasing inequality, discontent, and conflict. Science is compelled by its own nature to seek an economic order in which the production and distribution of goods are intelligently adapted to approved needs and not left at the mercy of blindly conflicting impulses.

JAMES A. MOFFETT

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG], a Representative at large from the State of Ohio, made a few scattering remarks in reference to the Federal Housing Administrator, James A. Moffett. Mr. Moffett has written a letter to Mr. YOUNG and has sent me a copy of that letter. I spoke to Mr. YOUNG this morning, told him I was going to ask unanimous consent to place Mr. Moffett's letter in the RECORD so that both sides of the story might be recorded. He said he did not object to my putting the letter in the RECORD.

Mr. YOUNG. If the gentleman will yield, I have no objection, but I am going to follow that request by asking unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a copy of my answer to that letter of Mr. Moffett.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this point to insert the letter of Mr. Moffett written to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

APRIL 24, 1935.

Hon. STEPHEN M. YOUNG,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. YOUNG: A statement made on the floor of the House, attributed to you, to the effect that I have been here less than 2 weeks in the last 2 months, have been in Palm Beach, and now am planning a trip to the Orient, inferring that I have not attended to public business, is misleading and incorrect, and, I think, in fairness to me you should be acquainted with the true facts.

I went to Palm Beach to attend my son's wedding and to take a vacation to which I was strictly entitled. I have been constantly on the job night and day since I came here last July. When absent from Washington, except for the trip to Palm Beach, it has been strictly on Government business.

Under the rules of Government I believe I am entitled to a vacation, the same as anybody else.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) JAMES A. MOFFETT,
Federal Housing Administrator.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein my answer to the letter of Administrator James A. Moffett at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, simply to ask a question, will the gentleman's letter in any way involve or reflect upon my good friend the Deputy Administrator, Mr. J. Howard Audrey, of New York?

Mr. YOUNG. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Texas, I want to state I consider that James A. Moffett, as Administrator of Federal Housing, has been an abject failure.

Mr. BLANTON. But I am not asking about Administrator Moffett. I am asking the gentleman if his letter will in any way involve or reflect upon the Deputy Administrator, Hon. J. Howard Audrey, of New York, who is a capable, efficient official and a splendid gentleman, he being one of my classmates when we were in the University of Texas together.

Mr. YOUNG. No; my letter does not refer to him.

The following is the letter referred to:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 25, 1935.

Hon. JAMES A. MOFFETT,
Administrator Federal Housing Administration,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MOFFETT: The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 24 containing the speech I made on the floor of the House yesterday is being mailed you under separate cover.

The statements made by me are neither misleading nor incorrect.

In event the correctness of these statements is challenged, I intend to make use of my file on the Housing Administration, the contents of which have been collected and compiled by me since last December. I then propose to obtain half an hour or more and make a complete statement setting forth the results of my investigation and research in regard to your administration of the Federal Housing Administration.

It is my well-considered opinion that your resignation should be accepted and that you should be given a permanent vacation, instead of a leave of absence for the purpose of making a trip to the Orient, and that a new Federal Housing Administrator should be appointed forthwith.

Yours very truly,

STEPHEN M. YOUNG,
Congressman at Large, Ohio.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the Naval Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MCCORMACK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, before I commence my observations in reference to this appropriation bill I desire, first, to ascertain from the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY] if it is his intention that this day shall be consumed in general debate and defer the reading of the bill until tomorrow?

Mr. CARY. It is. We have 4 hours and 23 minutes of general debate remaining, which will take the entire day.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And there will be no effort made on the part of the committee to read the bill for amendment today?

Mr. CARY. No, sir.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Then, Mr. Chairman, at this point I shall not discuss any of the various provisions of the bill, but under the 5-minute rule I shall have certain amendments which I shall offer for the consideration of the Committee.

In framing the Constitution of these United States our forefathers were farsighted in making it the duty of Congress to provide and maintain an Army and Navy and it is our solemn duty to provide adequately for our national defense.

The fundamental naval policy of our country, which has been affirmed for many years, is "to maintain the Navy in sufficient strength to support the national policies and commerce and to guard the continental and overseas possessions of the United States."

For Congress to fulfill its duty to provide for national defense commensurate with the needs of a nation such as ours, with its standing as a world power, and to permit the full realization of our fundamental naval policy, adequate funds must be provided not only to maintain the ships and personnel we now have but, in addition, for new ships and additional personnel to man them. The fact remains, however, that we have never had such a Navy, and unless Congress makes the necessary provisions we never will.

The naval appropriation bill now before this branch of Congress for consideration is a step in the right direction in adequately providing for the needs of our first line of defense—the Navy. The members of the subcommittee for naval appropriations of the Appropriations Committee deserve the highest commendation and are to be congratulated for their action in reporting to this House a naval appropriation bill providing for sufficient funds to adequately provide for the Navy for the coming fiscal year.

While this bill provides for the largest peace-time appropriation for the Navy, no American need fear that the United States will ever become militaristic. Since the Washington Conference and until the present administration the Navy has been woefully neglected. Only during one administration has there been any authorization for new construction and that was for cruisers and one aircraft carrier. It is now necessary for this and succeeding administrations to do in a shorter period of time what others have neglected to do. It is the voice of the people that will ever rule this country of ours, and it is the voice of the people that will determine the strength of our Army and Navy. I am confident this determination will be for adequate national defense. For this Government to maintain a navy which is not strong enough to win in battle is the worst form of extravagance. It lulls the people into a false sense of security and may have the most disastrous consequences.

The United States believes whole-heartedly in limitation of armaments, and we have contributed very greatly to the consummation of that ideal. At the end of the World War the United States was about to become the dominant naval power of the world. When the Washington Conference assembled in the fall of 1921 we possessed a naval force, built and building, which was stronger than that of any other power. This had been created in accordance with our announced policy to maintain a navy second to none, which policy came into being because of the fact that during the World War we were unable to maintain neutrality and did not have the power to compel it.

We felt deeply that our interest demanded this protection, and it was obvious that the wealth and industrial resources of the United States made it possible for us to provide it. At the Washington Conference we took the unprecedented course of surrendering voluntarily the naval supremacy which we possessed. We agreed to scrap 11 of the most powerful battleships and battle cruisers which have ever been designed. In addition, we took out of the line and agreed to scrap 20 completed battleships. In making this sacrifice we announced and demonstrated to the world that we were willing to forego supremacy and that we would be content with strength equal to that of Great Britain, but measurably greater than that of any other power. No other nation on earth has made a contribution which can approach the sacrifice made by the United States. Not only did we give up much more than has any other nation but in addition, in the years following the Washington Conference, we were very slow to build anything else, whereas each of the other great Navies has been built up in an orderly manner in the classes of ships within the limits and to the extent permitted by treaties. Other nations did not follow our lead to "disarm by example." On the contrary, they employed every facility to increase their respective navies.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. We performed our quantitative agreement. Did England do that also?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I do not know what England's contributions were. I assume that she made a contribution, but let me say that we made the largest contribution.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. TERRY. Has the gentleman figures as to how much the scrapping of those ships in accordance with that treaty cost us?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I do not remember accurately, but my recollection is that we had already spent over $300,000,000 on them. I know Congress had to appropriate approximately $20,000,000 to scrap the ships that we gave up to bring about a limitation of armament.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. And is it not true that while we were scrapping all these ships under that agreement, very largely the other nations were scrapping blueprints.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is absolutely correct. We took out of our line 20 ships that were manned by virile American sailors and scrapped them. We had in process of being built in the navy yards of the country 12 of the greatest ships ever designed by man, and approximately over $300,000,000 had already been spent upon them. We scrapped those.

The Treaty of London will, unless renewed, expire on December 31, 1936. The Treaty of Washington was to continue in force until denounced by one of the signatory powers. I greatly deplore the fact that one of the powers has seen fit to denounce the Washington Treaty. Unless there is a renewal in the meantime, the Treaty of London will automatically terminate on the same date. It is earnestly hoped that between now and December 31, 1936, another agreement will be reached to maintain the ratios that have already been established as necessary to maintain the balance of power between nations.

At Geneva we made a most determined effort to bring about further limitations, and at London we made a determined effort to bring it about; and in the recent conversation that took place last fall a determined effort was made to bring about reductions, but the other nations signatory to these treaties refused to reach the low level this Government has advocated.

Mr. HOEPPEL. And is it true that the Steel Trust had Mr. Shearer helping them over at Geneva?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I know nothing about Mr. Shearer or the Steel Trust. I have none of them in my district.

The United States would be the first to applaud limitation to a lower level and repeatedly has used every effort to accomplish such a reduction. We believe that the naval strength required for our security is relative to that possessed by other powers. But let me impress upon you with all of the force and earnestness at my command that we must maintain a navy of under-age ships substantially in the ratio now fixed by international agreement.

During Chief Justice Hughes' tenure of office of Secretary of State he presided over the Washington Conference. At this conference, in October 1922, he declared:

> This Government has taken the lead in securing the reduction of naval armament, but the Navy that we retain under the agreement should be maintained with efficient personnel and pride in the service. It is essential that we should maintain the relative naval strength of the United States. That, in my judgment, is the way to peace and security. It will be upon that basis that we would enter into future conferences or make agreements for limitations, and it would be folly to undermine our position.

And the bill that we passed last year is to carry out the language of the agreement at the Washington Conference, and the provision in this bill to make the appropriations for carrying that out is in accordance with and carrying out the policy announced at that time.

Thus it was openly declared that it was the Nation's policy and the understanding with which it gave up its predominant naval superiority that our Navy would be maintained at the strength and in the ratios prescribed by treaties.

Until the present administration, this policy has not been carried out. Instead, this country dropped well below the ratios prescribed and was building very few ships when President Roosevelt was inaugurated. With the enactment of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the President was authorized to construct ships for our Navy. Accordingly he set aside funds for the construction of 32 naval vessels. Each year since then he has given his approval for the allocation of funds to continue the construction of ships to build up in the categories in which we were deficient and to replace certain over-age and obsolete ships. With this program carried through to a conclusion, we will arrive at treaty strength in modern ships in 1942—6 years after the termination of limitation agreements. For the first time in the history of the country we now have a logical, orderly plan for the maintenance of the Navy at a level which is sufficient to provide against emergencies—and we must not deviate from this plan.

One of the fundamental objectives of the treaties for the limitation of armaments is to eliminate all suspicion of a naval race. We hoped for this after the Washington Conference and again after the London Conference. But to realize this hope it is essential that the balance so arrived at be maintained at all times. So long as we build steadily with the avowed purpose of conforming strictly to the treaty ratios there can and should be no objection either here or abroad. Notwithstanding any agreement, or lack of agreement, we must maintain the accepted ratio, and by so doing we maintain the balance. To do so, the ships, as they become over age—and this means from the largest to the smallest or from the battleships, the backbone of the fleet, to the submarines—they must be replaced.

I call attention to the fact that every ship authorized to be laid down in the bill passed at the last session of Congress is strictly in accordance with the terms of the treaty. Each and every one of them is a replacement ship. There will be no naval race, unless some country goes beyond the ratio fixed by the Washington and London Treaties, and this country does not propose to go beyond those ratios.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman says there will be no naval race. Does he mean to say that the United States Government, in increasing its expenditure $172,000,000 over last year for the Navy, will not encourage a naval race in the world?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It will not. It is already limited by the treaty. It may cost more in this country to build ships than it does in England or Japan, and the money question is not one that brings about a naval race. A naval race is brought about by building more than these treaties permit to be built.

Mr. BIERMANN. Great Britain is not up to treaty strength?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course not.

Mr. BIERMANN. And Japan is not.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. She lacks only 2,000 tons of it.

Mr. BIERMANN. And if we appropriate this extra money, will it not encourage Great Britain to appropriate more money?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all, for the simple reason that Great Britain's known policy is to build up to treaty strength, just like our treaty strength. Japan has already built up to it.

Mr. BIERMANN. Does not the gentleman think the bill in the last Congress was immediately followed by increased preparations in Japan and Great Britain, due, principally, to that bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all. Japan at that time lacked only a few tons of being up to treaty strength.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman means to say that the Vinson bill had nothing whatsoever to do with the race between foreign countries?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Japan had already complied with her obligations to keep even keel on the balance between her nation and England and this country by building up to treaty strength. Now, if we build beyond treaty strength, then we will precipitate a naval race, but we do not propose to ask one dollar to build beyond the ratio fixed in these treaties.

As ships become obsolescent and require replacement, funds will be requested from Congress to carry on this work. It is therefore our solemn duty to provide the necessary appropriations. Failure to do so will accomplish indirectly what we refused to do directly at the preliminary naval conference last fall in London. That is, give up the 5–5–3 ratio.

Gentlemen, I ask you these questions: Are the people of this country willing to send their sons to meet an enemy in ships that are old, slow, and obsolete and inferior in strength in order to save a few dollars? Is the defense of our country to be jeopardized? Are the lives of your sons and grandsons to be offered up as a living sacrifice because you are unwilling to provide the funds for the support of a proper navy in times of peace? The answer to all is emphatically "No."

This country determined, by making certain concessions, that we needed a navy of that character and of that ratio as a defensive navy. Great Britain reached the same conclusion. Now, I say, to keep the balance it is absolutely essential that we maintain the same by building the ships up to that treaty ratio.

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. MAAS. Is it not true that we went further than any other nation in attempting to stop a naval race by example and that we were the only Nation which did?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct.

Mr. MAAS. And we have voluntarily remained below the treaty limit, while other nations have built up to their treaty limits?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes. From 1922 down to 1933 we only built about 45 or 50 ships, while England and Japan and France and Italy were building hundreds of ships.

Mr. THOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. THOM. I wonder if the gentleman will incorporate in his remarks a list of the vessels that were built in the United States since the close of the World War and the cost of them?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I think that is contained in the hearings.

Mr. THOM. No; it is not.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will be glad to get it and put it in the RECORD.

Now, let me call your attention to what the size of your Navy will be in 1942, when it is built up to treaty strength. This tells every ship and every kind of ship that will be under age and the numbers of them. This will constitute the Navy of the United States in its fighting line.

Our treaty-strength Navy will be composed of 15 battleships, 6 aircraft carriers, 18 eight-inch gun cruisers, 17 six-inch gun cruisers, 13 heavy destroyers, 84 light destroyers, and 38 submarines, with the necessary aircraft therefor—about 1,910 planes.

A navy, to be of any use in times of emergency, must be maintained throughout the intervening times of peace. There is a grave misunderstanding in our country as to what a navy must be in order to exert its full influence for peace. Almost invariably naval strength is spoken of in terms of the number of ships, without consideration as to whether they are manned or whether it is possible to obtain trained crews for them. Some people seem to think that a ship is always ready, whether she is manned or not. The building of a ship requires a long time. Then, when she has been completed, another long period, devoted to intensive training of her crew, is required before she can be considered ready to take her place in the battle line.

In case of war it will be necessary to expand immediately the Navy very greatly; to provide armed guards for merchant ships; to train crews for troop transports; to man submarine chasers and converted yachts and other auxiliaries necessary for the successful prosecution of a war. We cannot depend upon having an ally, as in the World War, to keep the enemy fleet bottled up while the necessary personnel is being trained. It is therefore imperative that sufficient personnel, both officer and enlisted, be provided to permit having a trained nucleus on our ships.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. As far as man power is concerned, is it not important that we have experienced naval enlisted men?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course, no one has any experience in his first enlistment. I presume the gentleman has reference to Naval Reserves?

Mr. KENNEY. No. I have reference to the enlisted men. Of course, when he reenlists he is more valuable to the Navy.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes. Of course, he is more valuable than a man in the first enlistment.

Mr. KENNEY. As a part of the enlisted man's pay he was given an allowance, I think, of something like $100 when he reenlisted. Now, that has not been placed back in this bill, has it?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No. The Economy Act cut that out. That was an inducement for men who have already served a period of enlistment to reenlist.

Mr. KENNEY. But it tended to keep good men in service?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Exactly.

Mr. KENNEY. May I ask the gentleman this one further question? All of the other salaries have been put back, have they not?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Every Federal salary was restored on April 1.

Mr. KENNEY. Except this allowance to the enlisted men?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Well, that is a gratuity. It is not classified as salary or pay.

Mr. KENNEY. It is called that, but, after all, it was a part of the enlisted man's pay.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes. Of course, it is an inducement to make him enlist. The longer he is in the service the more efficient he becomes.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. HOEPPEL. The last War Department appropriation bill carried a provision taking from the enlisted man his reenlistment bonus.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Well, I cannot yield on that now. The gentleman is talking about the Army.

Mr. HOEPPEL. A provision could be put in the Navy appropriation bill to restore to the Navy enlisted man his reenlistment bonus. This should be done by the Committee. As it is, the enlisted man is the only individual today who is suffering under the original Economy Act.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. When a man has served 4 years and retires to private life, he still forms a part of the Naval Reserve strength, does he not?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not unless he goes into it.

Mr. BLANTON. But as a trained man he can be called back to service in time of war.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not unless he joins the Reserves.

Mr. BLANTON. I am speaking about the situation in case of war.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The country would get the benefit of his previous training and experience in the Navy.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. So when he retires with his 4 years' training and experience, subject to call in time of war, and another man takes his place, we would have two well-trained, qualified men with experience instead of one?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right; exactly. With such provision, the sudden and rapid expansion of the Navy during a major emergency, the fleet will not be crippled by the withdrawal of key men to man additional ships.

I measure my words when I say the personnel of the Navy is not surpassed in excellence or in technical skill by any corresponding body of men in the world. [Applause.] Time after time, from the earliest days of the Republic, this branch of the service has faced crises and emergencies with never an incident of which we should not be proud. However, the difficulty is that we have not enough of such men. The treaty Navy, including the necessary aircraft therefor, to be manned with 100-percent complement will require about 127,000 enlisted men and 7,941 officers of the line. Of course, it is obvious that we cannot, in time of peace, maintain the Navy on a war footing. Nevertheless, the active ships of the United States Fleet must have sufficient personnel to be ready to meet an emergency. This means that they must have not less than 85 percent of complement and they must be trained to the highest state of efficiency. To do this will require for the fiscal year 1936 a minimum of 93,500 men. As the Navy is built up to treaty strength, this number will have to be increased each year until the number will be about 111,000 men. Then, if the need for mobilization should come, expansion could be carried on without destroying the readiness for battle which had previously been developed. Unless trained crews are made available, the building of ships is a futile gesture, misleading to our own people and of very doubtful support to the national policies. Never again can we count on the assistance of some other fleet for a year or more while our own is being made ready.

No government which fails to provide for its own preservation against the assaults of every probable foe is entitled to the support of its people. The primary duty of government is self-preservation, and no logic can justify it in stripping itself of its means of defense and relying for its preservation upon the mercy, the pity, or the love of other nations. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman has made a most interesting statement. Speaking of personnel, we are getting an additional appointment to Annapolis to build up the officer personnel. As I understand it, there will be another additional appointment provided next year. Is that the thought?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will state to the gentleman that the Subcommittee on Appropriations has carried sufficient money to authorize every Congressman and Senator to make an appointment this calendar year, and he will probably enter the academy between now and September. Under the bill we have recently passed, the officer strength of the Navy, on account of the larger Navy, will have to be increased, but I am satisfied the Budget for 1937 will carry sufficient money to take care of the situation.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. And to increase it would require an additional appointee at the academy for each Representative and Senator.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is in the bill now.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, for several days I have been intending to make a few remarks relative to the present policy of the new deal toward agriculture, and especially toward the cotton industry and its ultimate effect on northern agriculture in general. What I have to say has not been inspired in any respect by the controversy that has taken place in the last few days between our friends from New England and North Carolina. I am approaching this subject from an entirely different angle.

The people whom I represent are an agricultural people. We know very well that if the continued present policy of the administration destroys 40 percent of the cotton industry of this country that a great many millions of acres of rich agricultural lands in the South will be put into the production of diversified farm products and that in that section of the country there will probably rise a more intensified dairy industry. I know from the condition of the dairy industry in my section of the country that it cannot stand further competition; they are practically wiped off the map at the present time; and I am interested in helping them, rather than adding to their present burdens. We are, therefore, directly interested in any policy that cuts down the cotton-producing area of this country. My attention was forcibly called to this by the abrupt drop in the cotton market some little time ago. I was interested particularly in the statements given out by the publicists of the various departments in Washington, by which they tried to make the people believe that some kind of market manipulation, some anti-new-deal propaganda, had caused the decrease in the price of cotton, when, as a matter of fact, in my judgment, the reason was that the manufacturers, the growers, and the farmers had seen the statements that have been given out by the Department of Agriculture, the Census Bureau, and the Commerce Department, showing that we were losing our foreign markets.

To my mind, nothing so accurately illustrates the folly of the new-deal experimentations and their inevitable failure as the collapse of the cotton market.

Notwithstanding the efforts of the vast publicity machinery of the administration to make it appear that collapse was due either to some personal manipulation of the market or to the circulation of false reports, the facts are too evident to be concealed and too clear to be distorted.

Cotton interests in this country, from planter to exporter and fabricator, are finally face to face with the bitter realization that the agricultural policies inaugurated by this administration have brought, not merely present disaster to the American cotton industry but will, if persisted in, result in its permanent ruin. That explains the collapse of the cotton market. That is the only explanation.

For the army of administration publicity writers—paid for out of the pockets of the American taxpayers—to issue "canned interviews" with various governmental officials and new-deal politicians to the effect that the cotton collapse is due to anti-new-deal propaganda is only adding insult to injury.

It is not due to anti-new-deal propaganda that former large foreign buyers of American raw cotton are now buying from Brazil, India, Egypt, Soviet Russia, and other countries, with the consequent loss of 40 percent of our cotton export markets.

Government statistics furnished by the United States Department of Commerce and the United States Department of Agriculture show the 1934 cotton exports the lowest in 16 years, and to have been 43 percent lower than in 1933 and 44 percent lower than the 10-year average.

No bunk or ballyhoo about anti-new-deal propaganda explains away the fact that the British textile mills in 1933 took 584,000 bales of American cotton and only 24,000 bales of Brazilian cotton, whereas last year they took 249,000 bales of American cotton and 206,321 bales of Brazilian cotton, a loss of 57 percent to our cotton exporters and a gain of 760 percent to the Brazilian cotton industry.

Neither does it explain away the fact that Brazil is increasing its cotton acreage, and that it will produce 2,000,000 bales this year—the largest in its history.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. A man in my home town, Waco, Tex., has a large number of presses throughout the country. He has been down in Brazil for some months. I have just seen a letter from him in which he said they had hundreds of gins down there, but that they were standing idle. He said further that the crop was being eaten up by insects.

Mr. SNELL. That does not do away with the actual fact that they have produced and sold this cotton in our former markets. These are figures that come from our own departments. Nor does it explain the fact that exports of Indian cotton are the largest for 3 years, the figures showing that for the first half of the current season India exported 1,197,000 bales of raw cotton against only 854,000 the previous season, or an increase of 40 percent.

Nor does it explain away the fact that Soviet Russia, which hitherto has been a cotton-importing country, has taken advantage of the situation existing in the United States to increase its cotton acreage to such a degree that it expects to export 2,000,000 bales this year.

Surely anti-new-deal propaganda does not account for the report issued by the United States Department of Agriculture under date of March 11, 1935, showing that Japan, which has been one of our greatest raw-cotton customers, is decreasing its purchases of raw cotton in the United States and increasing those from India. The figures given in this report show that the Japanese Spinners' Association in the last 6 months of 1934 increased its purchases of Indian raw cotton from 495,000 to 732,000 bales over the preceding 6 months, or an increase of 50 percent. In January 1935 its purchases of raw cotton from India jumped 100 percent over December 1934. At the same time Japanese purchases of raw cotton from this country during the last 6 months of 1934 were nearly 100,000 bales less than the corresponding period of 1933.

COTTON-GIN MACHINERY EXPORTS HAVE INCREASED 500 PERCENT

The explanation offered by the United States Department of Agriculture for this situation is contained in the following sentence:

> This steady decline (in Japanese purchase of American cotton) is attributed to price factors.

This is only another way of stating a very unpleasant fact, the discussion of which the new deal studiously avoids. The "price factor" referred to is the fact that other countries find they can secure their raw cotton from competing producing countries, such as India, Peru, Brazil, Egypt, and Soviet Russia, at cheaper prices than they can buy it in America.

Now, this is not a theory, it has actually been demonstrated—demonstrated by facts given out by the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Commerce of our own Government.

It is not anti-new-deal propaganda which is destroying the cotton-export market and bringing disaster to the cotton industry in this country, but the pro-new-deal agricultural policies which increased the domestic price of raw cotton far above the world price by arbitrarily reducing production and making Federal loans on that already produced.

The world is merely applying to the American cotton industry the free-trade theory of the new deal, which is that the American people should be permitted to buy their necessities wherever they can purchase them the cheapest. The new-deal tariff theory, as expounded by the "brain trust", is that those countries which can produce certain commodities more economically than they can be produced here should be permitted free access to the markets of this country, even though it be at the expense of American industry and American agricultural producers.

The cotton-consuming world now finds that other countries can produce and sell cotton at less than 12 cents a pound. Being true disciples of the new-deal tariff theory they buy of that country where cotton is produced the most economically.

The cotton crisis did not develop overnight. It was not occasioned by a wild rumor or a manipulation of the market by a clique or by a condition of the hour. The Roosevelt administration saw it coming weeks ago, when it was announced that Oscar G. Johnston, general manager of the A. A. A. Cotton Producers Pool, was being sent to Europe for the express purpose of endeavoring to prevent a further slump in our cotton export trade. That in itself was an admission of the break-down of the administration's agricultural policy insofar as cotton was concerned. It served as a storm signal to American cotton interests.

The A. A. A. policy is not only destroying the foreign market for raw cotton, which will mean ruin to the cotton-growing States and the cotton farmers, but it imperils the American textile industry. The pegged domestic price of 12 cents a pound plus the 4.2 cents a pound processing tax, plus other handling costs, makes raw cotton cost the American textile manufacturer almost 18 cents a pound. With what result?

Textile manufacturers are buying on a hand-to-mouth basis. Domestic consumption of cotton goods is decreasing. Stocks are piling up in the textile mills. A report appearing only a few days ago in the market section of the New York Times shows that on 38½-inch 64–60s print cloths, one of the most widely used styles, inventories at the mills jumped from 25,000,000 to 36,000,000 yards during the month of February, while unfilled orders declined from 29,000,000 to 15,000,000 yards. Unfilled orders of 39-inch 80-square cloths declined from 27,000,000 to 12,500,000 yards, and similar situations developed in other important styles.

With foreign textile manufacturers able to purchase cheap cotton from other countries and able to fabricate that cotton far more cheaply than it can be done in this country, the future of the American textile industry is seriously menaced. This is not merely a theory yet to be demonstrated. Statistics show that while the number of spindles in this country has decreased, the number in Russia has increased by 2,000,000, the number in India by 3,500,000, the number in Japan by 6,815,000, and the number in Brazil by 2,702,000. These foreign spindles are actively at work, and every yard of textiles which they produce and sell in the world market decreases the possible market for American textiles by just that much.

It is not an academic proposition when, as a result of the new deal's agricultural policy insofar as it affects cotton, the entire social and economic structure of cotton-growing States and textile-manufacturing communities is being undermined. January 27, 1935, the press associations carried the statement of J. S. Wanamaker, of South Carolina, president of the American Cotton Growers' Association, that as a result of the cotton acreage reduction program of the A. A. A. 40 percent of the population formerly engaged in the cotton industry in the cotton-growing States had been forced upon public relief rolls. This includes not merely the tenant farmers but stevedores, shipping clerks, gin hands, and so forth. The situation in Arkansas because of the A. A. A. cotton-reduction program has been so critical that there has been talk of martial law being invoked in order to keep down public disorders.

The administration, instead of frankly confessing the failure of this program, as President Roosevelt stated early in his administration he would do in any instance where he found one of his experiments did not work, is bending every energy and using every resource to suppress the facts. There are at present on file with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration two official reports, made by its own representatives after a personal inspection of the situation in Arkansas and other cotton-growing States, which it refuses to make public because of the incredibly miserable human conditions these reports show existing as a direct result of the Agricultural Adjustment policies and practices. Proof that the A. A. A. cotton program is ruining cotton-growing States is furnished by the fact that southern Senators were instrumental in amending the work-relief measure so as to provide particularly for the tenant farmers and share-croppers in the cotton-growing States, and further by the passage of the bill now in the Senate providing $1,000,000,000 for relief of tenant and cropper farmers.

In addition to losing 40 percent of our cotton-export market, impoverishing hundreds of thousands of individuals dependent upon a prosperous cotton industry for a livelihood and imperiling the entire textile industry with its vast army of employees, the administration's cotton policies threaten additional disaster to northern agriculture.

And that is where it comes home directly to the people in my district of New York State, the use that is to be made of the land. Markets have been lost to such an extent that it makes it necessary for 40 percent of the land that is now producing cotton to be put into the production of some other agricultural commodity. This land is not going to grow up to weeds, and if it is put into production of diversified farm products it will eventually cause absolute ruin under the present situation to the farmers in the Northern States. Let me observe right here that notwithstanding the fact it was understood when the Agricultural Adjustment Act was passed a year or so ago, that where we paid the people for letting their land lie fallow it was not to be put into the production of competitive agricultural products. Yet I heard it stated yesterday on the floor of another body that they had planted just as many acres last year as they planted any year. This is something I cannot understand in connection with the carrying out of the agricultural program.

In other words, the administration's agricultural policy, insofar as it affects cotton, instead of solving the problem of the cotton industry, has not only brought that industry to the brink of bankruptcy but it is complicating the problems of northern industry and nullifying completely the program of the A. A. A. insofar as northern agriculture is concerned.

The whole underlying philosophy of President Roosevelt's program for relief of agriculture, as enunciated in several of his campaign speeches and repeated in several of his official messages, is that agriculture has been suffering from overproduction, and the remedy was a reduction of acreage planted to agricultural products as well as a decrease in the production of livestock and dairy products.

To put that program into concrete form, the Agricultural Adjustment Act was enacted. To pay the cost of this program, the processing taxes were imposed. These are merely a sales tax on food. To induce the northern farmer to reduce his acreage of crops and his production of cattle, hogs, and dairy products and to compensate him in some measure for such reduction, the Federal Government is paying hundreds of millions of dollars in benefits or bonuses in the northern agricultural States.

Yet its cotton program will inevitably bring into general cultivation more land than has been abandoned in the North at so great a cost to the American taxpayers. Thus, one policy of the new deal offsets and nullifies another policy, but that does not stop the annual expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars, charged to the taxpayers of the country in one form or another.

The administration's agricultural policies, insofar as they apply to northern agriculture, have failed almost as signally as they have in the cotton-growing States. The results are the same in kind, if not in degree. They are responsible for a sensational decrease in the foreign market of the northern farmer, and for even a more sensational decrease in his domestic market.

While we have been spending considerable money to limit the production from the southern farms, on the other hand, if you are to continue the present policy as outlined by the new deal perhaps we shall put the same southern lands into direct competition with the northern lands in the production of competitive farm products. In other words, we are spending millions and millions of the people's money, but we are not getting any benefits.

According to the report of the Division of Foreign Crops and Markets of the United States Department of Agriculture, our exports of 44 leading farm products in January were the lowest in more than 20 years, and less than one-half of the average of the pre-war period. On the other hand, for the first time in the history of the United States, we are importing foodstuffs for man and beast.

Reports of the packing-house industry for the month of February show the receipt of hogs for that month to have been the lightest in the history of the packing industry. During the entire month of February the receipt of hogs at 20 markets for the first 2 months of this year was less than half the 5-year average. This is due to a boycott of pork by the consuming public because of the high prices, and is the first time in the history of the United States that such a condition has existed. Heretofore, in times of depression, pork has been the poor man's meat.

Immediately following the World War, when we had an agricultural crisis precipitated by the Democratic administration deflating the farmer, there was a joint congressional committee appointed to investigate the entire agricultural problem. That committee consisted of members of both parties from both the Senate and the House. Four distinguished Senators who served on that committee are still Members of the Senate—Senators CAPPER, MCNARY, ROBINSON, and HARRISON. The report investigated production, prices, consumption, foreign markets, and so forth, from 1880 up to the time it was issued. One of the features of that report was its statement that the per capita domestic consumption of wheat and wheat products, beef and beef products, mutton and dairy products, all decreased during periods of industrial depression when the average family had to economize on their food bill, but that during the same periods the per capita consumption of pork and pork products did not decrease because, said the report, "pork is essentially a poor man's food", while "consumption of beef in this country bears a very close relation to urban employment and with the progress of the period of business depression and consequent unemployment, consumption of beef and beef products diminished."

The result is that the working classes are being compelled to forego even pork products as a direct result of the agricultural policies of the Roosevelt administration.

The Philadelphia Record, a Democratic paper whose editor is a personal friend of President Roosevelt, in commenting upon this situation said:

The Wallace way of raising prices, by creating an artificial shortage, benefits no one—not even the farmer. When food prices rise without wages rising the consumer can buy less food for his money. Consequently a new shortage is created and new crop limitation is required.

That is exactly the way the administration's agricultural policy is working out. It is destroying the legitimate and natural domestic market for farm products. It is compelling millions of people to substitute cheaper grades of food of less value as nourishment. The experience following the World War proves that it will require years of hard work and persistent effort to restore the domestic demand for the food products which are now being abandoned for cheaper substitutes.

The Housewives League of America has issued a warning that the women of this country will rebel against any further increase in food prices. The president of that organization on March 8 issued a statement in which she said:

If prices continue to mount, there will be organized opposition. Women will rebel. We won't buy and we can't buy. We wouldn't mind higher prices if our husbands' incomes were boosted too. The problem is being discussed everywhere. It's the main topic of conversation in women's organizations. We blame it all onto the A. A. A. and the Government.

We have stretched our household budgets as much as we can. Now we are rearranging our menus, buying cheaper foods and substituting lowly vegetables, such as parsnips and carrots, for better grades. More fish is finding its way to the table. It's cheaper than meat. In addition, people are not eating as much.

Another wholly nonpartisan organization, the Methodist Federation for Social Service, in a report carried by the press associations March 11, stated that the Agricultural Adjustment Administration's program is not only contributing to the undernourishment of the American people but it is actually injuring the American farmer. The report says:

The Agricultural Adjustment Administration is aiding a minority of wealthy farmers, but agricultural workers in general are not making or getting a decent living. In many sections the prices of staple articles farmers produce have advanced to such an extent that due to decreased consumption they are in little, if any, better position than a year ago. The farming sections are keeping near to solvency only because they have learned to go without more and more in order to meet the unescapable obligations which, if unmet, would ruin them.

Another matter I have noticed of late in connection with this situation is various pieces of propaganda that have gone out to the country advising the people how much better off the farmers are at the present time. As a matter of fact, there has been some increase in the price of farm products, but in the final analysis of the condition of the farmer the real test is the amount he owes. If the things he buys have gone up in even larger proportions than the things he sells, his financial situation has not been materially improved.

Proof of this statement is furnished in the March issue of the monthly bulletin issued by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. That report contradicts the persistent propaganda which has been put out by the publicity machinery of this administration to the effect that the financial condition of the farmer is constantly improving under the new deal. To the contrary, the farmer is being pushed further and further in debt by the various new-deal agencies, due to the fact that under the new-deal policies he is less able than ever before to make both ends meet.

That report gives outstanding agricultural loans of lending agencies, both private and governmental. It shows loans made by life-insurance companies, member banks, Federal Reserve System, joint-stock land banks, regional agricultural credit corporations, and emergency crop-loan agencies have decreased between 1933 and January 1935 in the aggregate amount of $559,000,000, but that loans to farmers of other governmental agencies have increased in the amount of $884,900,000, giving a net increase under the new deal of agricultural debt of $325,900,000.

The report does not include loans made and outstanding as of March 10, 1935, of the Commodity Credit Corporation—a Delaware State corporation organized by officers of the Government and initially financed by the Government by authority of an Executive order of President Roosevelt. As of March 10, 1935, the Commodity Credit Corporation had outstanding loans to farmers in the sum of $264,831,850.

Moreover, under the former agricultural marketing acts, which set up a revolving fund which still operates, there were as of October 1934, $57,000,000 of new loans outstanding over and above those in existence at the close of 1933. There were also as of October 1934, $25,000,000 of new loans outstanding made by banks for cooperatives.

These sums show that under the new deal, during the last 2 years, the debt owed by farmers either upon their land, their livestock, or their commodities made through established lending agencies had increased in the sum of $698,731,850.

This figure takes no account of the indebtedness owed to individuals. Neither does it take any account of indebtedness owed the Farm Mortgage Corporation, because that Corporation has not increased the farmers' debt. It has merely transferred it from individuals or other lending agencies to the Farm Mortgage Corporation.

The whole purpose of the Agricultural Adjustment Act was to restore the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar to parity. The Department of Agriculture itself admitted it utterly failed of its purpose in a statement issued July 9, 1934, after the Agricultural Adjustment Act had been in full force and effect for 1 year. At that time the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar was anchored at exactly the same spot it was in May 1933, 13 months before when the Agricultural Adjustment Act was signed.

Then came the drought, which in a few weeks did what the A. A. A. had failed to do in 12 months. Farm prices increased as did the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar.

The administration claims it was not the drought but its program of crop, hog, and cattle reduction which is responsible for an increase in the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar, by reason of the fact that that program increased the price of farm products. But if the administration claims credit for the increase in the price of farm products, then it must accept the blame for an increase in food prices to the point where undernourishment and even hunger is being forced upon millions of those who are still struggling to keep off the public relief rolls. The degree of this increase in food prices is given in the last report of the Department of Commerce, which quotes prices as of February 15, 1935, and shows the percent of increase since February 1933. That report shows there has been an increase of 34.2 percent in the price of all foods, 34.7 percent in the price of cereals, 41.5 percent in the price of meats, 29.9 percent in the price of dairy products, 80 percent in the price of eggs, 24.4 percent in the price of fruits and vegetables, and 19 percent in the price of miscellaneous food products.

Not only has the A. A. A. program failed of its purpose to increase the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar but it has failed of its promise to have this done by voluntary cooperation upon the part of agricultural producers. There has been much ballyhoo recently regarding the result of the referendum on the corn-hog contract. The statements released by the Department of Agriculture announced that approximately 69 percent of all producers voting in the referendum favored the continuation of the program.

That statement was not candid. It did not give to the country an honest picture. While 69 percent of those who voted in the referendum did vote for a continuation of the contract, only 45 percent of those who had corn-hog contracts participated in the referendum, and only 32½ percent voted for the continuation of the program.

Even then the referendum was not honestly conducted in some places. In those instances letters were written by agents of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to those holding corn-hog contracts notifying them of the time and place the referendum was to be conducted in their localities, but containing this warning: "If you are against controlled production do not attend any of the meetings scheduled." That was a bald attempt at outright intimidation of the corn-hog farmer, because the letter was sent by the very individual who had to pass upon the right of the corn-hog farmer to which it was written to participate in the benefits of the program.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield, but for a question only.

Mr. TABER. But none of those who produced hogs who had not been favored with a contract by the A. A. A. were permitted to vote.

Mr. SNELL. I tried to make that clear. The gentleman's statement is correct.

In addition, the new deal further coerces the farmer into accepting its program by making it impossible for him to negotiate either crop, production, or feed loans from any Federal agency until and unless he has signed A. A. A. contracts and agreed to abide by the bureaucratic rulings emanating from Washington.

The new-deal program has failed in every respect insofar as the production of cotton is concerned. Voluntary cooperation has been openly abandoned for the Cotton Control Act, which forces the cotton planter to come in under its provisions or be classified as a criminal, subject to Federal prosecution.

In order to carry out the pretense that this Russianized system was popular in the Cotton Belt, the administration made the gesture of referring to a referendum of cotton growers the question as to whether or not the cotton-control program should be continued. But a few days before the referendum vote was taken, the President promised several hundred thousand small cotton planters who were to vote, exemption from the provisions of the act if it were continued in force. In other words, the referendum ballot box was stuffed even before the polls were opened.

Now, that does not leave the farmer very much latitude to exercise his own judgment. It is a definite order regimenting our farmers at the present time; and they cannot get away from it.

Summing it up, the agricultural program of this administration, after 2 years of uninterrupted operation, has resulted:

First. In a decline of 40 percent in the cotton export market, and a decline in the domestic consumption of cotton goods.

Second. A decline in general exports of agricultural products to the lowest point in 20 years, a point which is less than one-half the average for pre-war levels.

Third. A decline in the domestic per capita consumption of wheat and wheat products, beef and beef products, dairy products, and pork and pork products, due to the tremendous increase in prices of those products as a direct result of the destructive program of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

Fourth. An increase in imports of both cereals and meat products that are used for human food as well as forage for animals.

Fifth. An increase of practically $700,000,000 in the mortgage indebtedness of the American farmer.

Sixth. Hundreds of thousands of agricultural producers on public-relief rolls the object of charity.

Yet this program is called "planned economy."

What kind of "planning" is it which sacrifices the foreign markets of our agricultural producers and at the same time forces the importation of foodstuffs which could be raised here on the land which is being abandoned under the arbitrary legislation of the new deal?

What kind of "planning" is it which throws hundreds of thousands of small farmers and croppers onto the public highways, making tramps out of them, because they are not permitted to raise the foodstuffs and the agricultural commodities which are sorely needed by the millions of people living in our cities?

What kind of "planning" is it which pushes up the price of food to the American housewives to a point where they are compelled not only to reduce the amount of food which they buy, but buy cheaper substitutes?

What kind of "planning" is it which has forced the American farmer further and further in debt, to the point where in desperation he is supporting a program that calls for the outright repudiation of what he owes, as the only way in which he can hope ever again to get on his feet? [Applause.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein certain tables I have prepared and a letter sent out by the Democratic National Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, we have now progressed nearly through the fourth month of the legislative session and, while perhaps it was not in good taste on the first day of the session to recite all of the progress accomplished by the Democratic administration, we have now reached a point where, in view of the fact that our Democratic colleagues are attempting to explain some of their failures, but without success, it is time for us to take stock of the Nation and see just where we are at.

We are accused by our friends on the Democratic side of having leveled nothing but destructive criticism. Let me say to my Democratic friends that there can be no destructive criticism of the destructive policies of the Democratic administration.

Now let us see how we have progressed under the self-called new deal. They have imposed upon the country the N. R. A., which General Johnson, its lord and master for about a year, pronounced "dead as a dodo" a little while ago. The N. R. A. has stifled and destroyed the small business man. It made those who kept faith and lived up to their bargain the goats and destroyed them; it reduced the pay envelopes of the workers; it raised the price of merchandise to the consumer to such an extent that the consumer has been unable to buy and the channels of trade have been clogged.

They passed the A. A. A., a scheme to put a processing tax on the farmer for the goods he raises. Only in rare instances, such as where they have pegged the price of cotton by Government loans and where they have spent a lot of money and destroyed the brood sows of the country, have they been able to raise prices to the farmer. As a general rule the farmer has paid the processing tax. His price on wheat was reduced by the tax in 3 weeks from $1.25 a bushel to 95 cents—the exact amount of the tax—and it has never gone above that figure since for more than a day or two perhaps. By it they have destroyed our foreign market for cotton, wheat, and pork. They have driven millions of agricultural workers on relief.

America became a land of plenty and prosperity entirely because the people who came to this country were able to produce a lot of things and because the workers received good wages. Now with reduced wages the volume of trade has dropped off. I want to quote from last week's Department of Commerce bulletin. They say that business activity, according to the New York Times, in dollars was just the same as last year. Freight-car loadings were approximately the same, although they have been lower most of the year; steel production was lower; lumber production lower; cotton receipts lower; commercial failures higher; Federal Reserve bank member loans lower; steel-ingot production lower; and automobile production alone higher; and with all that situation to face, the price index had gone up, according to the Department of Labor combined index, from 73.3 percent to 77.2 percent—an increase of 3.9, or an increase in prices of 4 percent. Mr. Fisher's combined index indicated an increase in prices of 6.5 points, or 8 percent. This whole picture indicates a decrease in the volume of business of a year ago of approximately 5 to 6 percent.

The Democratic Party calls itself a "party of progress." It is a party of progress, and here is the schedule of the way they have progressed in the last 25½ months:

First. They have throttled private business to the point where employment is at a low ebb. The number of unemployed has increased by at least 1,500,000.

Second. They have placed the Government in business in every possible way.

Third. They have looted the Public Treasury and obtained money from Congress for the purposes of using it for relief and have spent it for personal rackets in which the President himself and his friends were interested in promoting, upon factories, upon reclamation projects, and all sorts of things which would not provide employment and which should be paid for out of the regular appropriations of the Government or not spent at all.

Fourth. They have produced a continuously mounting relief roll. The number on relief has increased from 13,057,329 in May 1933 to 22,000,000 at the present time—almost double. They have increased the cost of relief per month from $100,000,000 in 1933 to upwards of $300,000,000 a month at the present time.

Fifth. They have piled up a public debt from $20,000,000,000 to a total of $48,000,000,000 when they have completed spending the funds which are now appropriated and the guaranties which are now authorized go into effect.

Sixth. They have taken off duties from those things which the farmer produces and which our factories manufacture and thereby they have destroyed values for the farmer and for the workingman in the factory.

Seventh. They have unbalanced the Federal Budget so that we are raising only about $3,000,000,000 where we are spending $8,500,000,000.

Eighth. They have increased the number on the Federal pay roll from 916,000 to approximately 1,800,000 today, and we see this morning that 100,000 more are coming to Washington, with no place to live.

That is the record of progress: providing jobs for the faithful. They have adopted a very fancy system of bookkeeping. I wish I had the ability, but I would hate to say I had the inclination, to work a thing like that out. In order to see how the farmer had progressed I asked the Department of Agriculture for a statement of the gross income on farm products and they wanted to give me the total farm income, including the A. A. A. so-called "benefits paid to farmers." And here they are:

Total farm income, including the A. A. A. payments:

1932	$5,331,000,000
1933	6,256,000,000
1934	7,163,000,000

Gross income from farm production, not including A. A. A. payments:

1932	$5,331,000,000

You will note that the increase attributed to the A. A. A. for 1933 was $262,000,000; that the increase for 1934 was $699,000,000; a total through December 31, 1934, of $961,000,000. Then, in order to check on the "high faluting" bookkeeping, I called the A. A. A. and found that they claimed the total benefits to farmers, including removal of surplus and rental and benefit payments, only ran $697,000,000. Where the other $263,000,000 came from you do not know, and I do not know, and they do not know, but this is progress. It will be noted that the increase in the income of the farmer for 1933 over 1932 was $663,000,000, or about 11 percent, but the increase in the price index ran more than 11 percent, so that the volume of stuff sold was much smaller. The increase from 1933 to 1934 in the gross farm income was $470,000,000, or about 8 percent, and the price of agricultural commodities was supposed to have advanced 15 percent, indicating a much smaller production.

You will note, also, that we have progressed in this way: While they have been plowing under cotton, corn, and wheat, and paying the farmers for not planting it, we had a drought come along and, instead of having our customary reserves, we were unable to meet the demands of the people and resorted to imports. Maybe this is progress, but it is progress away from recovery and not toward it.

The farmer, with his small increase in gross income, is not in as good a position as he was before, because the price of the things he has to buy has gone up so much more than the price of what he has to sell.

The Democrats are in this position: They have progressed remarkably well in preventing recovery. They have spent loads of money, but they have offered no constructive programs which would lead us out of the depression. No ray of hope has come from the Democratic Party. No ray of hope ever came from them, and none ever will. Their only object is to pass appropriations out of the Federal Treasury which will permit them to buy up the next election.

In 1933 they appropriated $3,300,000,000; in 1934 they appropriated $1,426,000,000, and this was supposed to be used for relief, but it was used last fall by allotments to buy up the election of a Democratic Congress. This year they have appropriated $4,880,000,000, ostensibly for work relief, but really for the purpose of buying up the 1936 election.

The Democratic Party put itself forward as a party of the people, supposed to represent them. When it came into office it followed the lowest practices of any political pirates in the history of the country. They pretended that those who participated in political activities could not remain on the Federal pay roll. And still we have General Farley at the head of the Democratic National Committee after the little fellow has been forced to quit. But that was nothing but a little bit of publicity to save the face of the President himself, because the Democratic National Committee, in violation of what I supposed the law to be in most States, against solicitation of funds from officials, and against what I know the law to be on the Federal statute books, that no Government official shall solicit a subscription for political purposes from another Government official. When General Farley was Postmaster General, on stationery bearing his name, the Democratic National Committee caused to be sent out to those who were working for Government corporations this letter which I have here, and which I am going to ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, advising the recipient that they must "necessarily look to the beneficiaries of the Democratic Party to assist in financing its activities." While the letter was not signed by General Farley, his name was used on the letterhead for that purpose and in the body of the letter in such a way as to make it perfectly apparent that there could be no doubt that he approved and countenanced this solicitation, which was clearly in violation of the law. Has any Democratic district attorney, or any other district attorney, prosecuted Mr. Farley for this action? No; because the Democratic Party has practiced this sort of thing, and probably always will. It is bred in their bones. Only the rawest and dirtiest kind of politics seem to appeal to the operatives of that crowd.

This is a copy of the letter:

[Democratic National Committee, National Press Club Building, Washington, D. C.; James A. Farley, chairman; Emil Hurja, assistant]

23 CHURCH STREET,
New Haven, Conn.

DEAR FRIEND: This is to advise that I have been appointed a member of the finance committee of the Democratic National Committee, and as such it is my duty to solicit funds in support of the committee.

The headquarters of the committee in both New York and Washington, as you must realize, are maintained at great expense, and we must necessarily look to the beneficiaries of the Democratic Party to assist in financing it's activities. Therefore I hope to receive your check for whatever amount you care to contribute for the maintenance and operation of these headquarters, the affairs of which have been so efficiently and capably administered by National Chairman James A. Farley and his able assistant, Mr. Emil Hurja.

Please make checks payable to James W. Gerard, treasurer, and send to the writer at the above address.

Thanking you for any assistance you may care to render in this connection, I am, with kindest personal regards,

Sincerely yours,

PATRICK J. GOODE.

This is my program to bring back recovery:

First. Stop wild expenditures which unbalance the Budget.

Second. Stop tinkering with the protective tariff and letting in foreign merchandise to close down our factories and farms.

Third. Abolish the N. R. A. and the A. A. A. and restore the liberty of the American people and their opportunity to work. In the days when we followed sound principles the workingman received better wages than he receives now and the farmer received better prices for his products than he receives now.

Fourth. Return to sound economic principles and get things back to the point where we are producing more goods and the people consuming more goods. We must increase the volume of goods if you are going to increase the wealth of the people.

I hope that the people of this country will wake up to the progress which we actually have made toward the destruction of American agriculture and the destruction of American business and the complete bankruptcy of the American people, both financial and moral, which the Democratic Party has been trying to bring about.

Only by the elimination of the Roosevelt administration from power can we return to sound principles, American liberty, and prosperity. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, as a preface to my remarks I desire to add my commendation of and congratulations to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY], chairman of the committee conducting the hearings on this bill, and the able helpers he had on his subcommittee, for the efficient work they have performed. They deserve the thanks of this Congress, and the thanks of the people of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I hate to go from the sublime to the ridiculous, but to show you it is necessary that the Congress be alert at all times in watching things that go on in the District of Columbia, I call attention to an excerpt from the Washington Post of last Sunday. It has a big headline reading, "District may have corps of admirals for its navy."

I quote from the article:

E. Barrett Prettyman, corporation counsel, has informed the District Commissioners they may appoint a corps of admirals for the District's navy. Accordingly admirals soon may become as plentiful in the District as colonels in Kentucky.

Prettyman's study was made on request of George E. Allen, District Commissioner. The Commissioner said:

"Kentucky has its colonels, and other places have honorary offices."

Prettyman answered: "The term 'admiral' is a title—not a job. Its use has been largely preempted by nations having battleships, cruisers, and submarines, but this preemption is a custom, not a law. In my opinion, an admiral need not necessarily have a navy, nor even a rowboat. But why worry about this, anyway, because it is a fact that the District of Columbia has its navy. Every sovereign citizen of this District feels great pride in Washington's fleet."

From the Post last Sunday we learn that this ridiculous proposal has gone so far that they had an engraved die made of the commission that the District Commissioners were going to issue to the admirals of the District of Columbia navy. The Post reproduced this engraved commission last Sunday. It reads as follows:

In the name and by the authority of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia (seal of District of Columbia):

To all who shall see these presents, greeting:

Know ye, that Herbert G. Shrimp, having been duly appointed aide on the Commissioners' staff, with the rank of admiral in the navy of the District of Columbia, such appointment to date from the 22d day of January 1935, we hereby invest him with the full power and authority to execute and discharge the duties of the said office; and to have and to hold the same, with all the rights thereunto legally appertaining, for and during the pleasure of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

In testimony whereof we have caused these letters to be made patent and the seal of the District of Columbia to be hereunto affixed. Done at Washington the 22d day of January, A. D. 1935, and in the fifty-seventh year of the District of Columbia.

Then there are places for the signatures of the three Commissioners of the District of Columbia, with the imprint of the seal of the District of Columbia and a line for the secretary to sign.

Then it is stated at the bottom:

Admirals of the District's navy, consisting of a fire boat, police launch, rowboats, etc., will get a commission like this, all properly filled out.

Mr. Chairman, I wrote to the Commissioners calling their attention to this foolish propaganda going out to the country in this crucial hour of the Government's history. I wanted to know if anything like that was going to be put through, because if it were it was about time for Congress to stop it. I got a letter, I am glad to say, from the president of the District Commissioners reading as follows:

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 23, 1935.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN BLANTON: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 21, 1935, in regard to the commissioning of admirals in the government of the District of Columbia.

The Commissioners appreciate your frank statement and interest in this matter, and assure you that they have no intention of commissioning admirals in the District of Columbia.

Thanking you for your letter.

Very truly yours,

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.
M. C. HAZEN, President.

There ought not to be any such silly foolishness as that going out to the readers of this paper, which brings not only the Commissioners of the District into disrepute but reflects upon the Congress of the United States, which has the sole power and authority under the Constitution to control legislative matters in the District.

Of course, the Washington Post is unreliable and unauthentic. You cannot believe much you see in that paper. [Applause.] Did you notice these pictures in the first early edition of this morning's Post? Here is a facsimile picture of His Excellency Demetrios L. Sicilianos, the new Minister from Greece to the United States, but under it there is this statement: "This is the first picture of Gen. Hermann Goering, Nazi leader, and his wife the former Emmy Sonnemann, on their honeymoon in Germany." There is no wife there and there is no Gen. Hermann Goering, Nazi leader, shown. It is all balled up. I wonder how the parties interested liked it.

Elsewhere in the early first edition of this same unreliable, unauthentic, and misleading Washington Post, this morning on another page they carried a facsimile picture of General Goering, the Nazi leader and his wife, with the false heading "New Greek Minister Arrives", and underneath the picture it carried this misinformation:

His Excellency, Demetrios L. Sicilianos, the new Minister from Greece to the United States, is shown on his arrival on the Europa in New York, where he was met by Greek officials from New York and Washington.

Of course, they had to correct all of the above errors in a later edition of this morning's Washington Post. I wonder how long the Washington people are going to stand for such unreliable, misleading information.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say one more thing in conclusion. I notice our good friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], is going to speak, and I am glad he is to follow me, because I want him to explain one thing. He has in what he calls his "death house" my bill to stop all immigration for 10 years. If we could get that bill up here for consideration, we could amend it, providing for a registration of the unlawful aliens in this country and for sending all of them back to the countries where they belong, and with that done we could find in America a job for every single American not employed. I want to appeal to the gentleman, who holds that great means of bringing relief to the unemployed in his hands as Chairman of this great Immigration Committee, when he is all powerful on the subject, to rescind the action that he took one day before I was going to file a petition to discharge his committee and bring the bill on the floor for consideration, at which time he hurriedly called his committee together and tabled my bill. But he did not stop my petition. I appeal to him to rescind his action, and report and pass that bill, and help us to protect American jobs for Americans.

On February 21, 1935, I placed on the Clerk's desk here a petition to discharge his committee from further consideration of that bill. Such petition needs the signatures of 218 of you colleagues. Some have signed it, but most of you have not. If 218 of you will sign that petition, we can get this bill up and pass it, and then recover enough American jobs from foreigners to give a job to every unemployed American in the United States.

When we go home after adjournment do not tell your constituents that you are in favor of stopping immigration when you have not signed that petition. Because they will ask you why you did not sign it. Every Member here who is sincerely in favor of stopping immigration will sign that petition, because otherwise there will be no chance whatever to pass a measure in this Congress to stop it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein certain excerpts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have obtained permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein certain excerpts, so as to enable me to reply to the speech and extension of his remarks about me made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

All of my colleagues in this House, who are old-timers and have served here since the war Congress, know that in every session through my entire service I have made a determined, uncompromising fight to pass legislation that would stop all immigration from foreign countries to the United States, and which would deport from the United States the millions of aliens who are here unlawfully.

It has been absolutely impossible for any of us to get such a bill approved and reported to the House by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. All of such bills are put in what he calls "his death house" by the chairman of said committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

He says that on February 18, 1935, I kept him from passing his bill, H. R. 3472, which he calls his "repatriation bill." He is correct. I did stop him. And I stopped him because it was a bill to benefit aliens, and not the people of the United States, who want unlawful aliens deported, and who want to stop immigration.

He says that I stopped him again on March 4, 1935, and kept him from passing this measure. He is correct. I helped to stop him. But I had help. Let me quote from the RECORD of March 4, 1935, page 2901, the following showing exactly what occurred, to wit:

The next bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill H. R. 3472, to amend section 23 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask a question of the lady from New York. This is the Dickstein bill?

Mrs. O'DAY. One of them.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the present law the right is limited to 3 years? Those 3 years have expired. This bill proposes to remove all limitation. I cannot agree that such a proposal would be sound legislation. Instead of increasing the rights and privileges of aliens, I am in favor of stopping all of them from coming here for at least 10 years. It is true, is it not, that under the present law they are limited to 3 years?

Mrs. O'DAY. I think that is so.

Mr. BLANTON. Is not that so? I ask the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. It is limited to 3 years?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The way the bill was first introduced was to extend that time to 5 years.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That was a year ago.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the committee struck out 5 years and left no limitation at all, and they could have been here for 40 or 50 years and still be sent back and have their way paid by the United States. Such a bill ought not to pass this House. It establishes a bad precedent. I objected to it before. It will take three objections now to stop it, and I hope we will get the other two. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CARTER. I object.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

I learned about the unsalutary features and unsoundness of the above bill from my distinguished colleague from Texas [Mr. DIES], who is one of the best-posted men in this Congress on immigration, and the necessity of getting these millions of aliens deported out of the United States.

Then the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] said that he tried to pass his other bill "to repatriate 30,000 Filipinos" and that I stopped him on February 18, 1935, and also on March 4, 1935. I did stop him on March 18, 1935, because it was a bad bill, because I had a reliable estimate that it would cost $900,000, and would accomplish no good, but merely furnish an excursion trip home on our people's money out of the Treasury, and cause twice that many more to come over here. And I did help to stop it again and to finally kill it on March 4, 1935. Let me quote from the RECORD for that date as to what happened:

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the right to object. This is a bill that will force the United States, if it is passed, to pay the expenses back home of 30,000 Filipinos who have gotten homesick and want to spend the summer holidays in the Philippine Islands, and there will be 60,000 more of them come back here, and this bill sets a bad precedent and ought to be killed.

This bill will cost the United States Government a tremendous sum of money to start with, and it will set a precedent the end of which will not be seen for the next 50 or 60 years. It is a bad bill and ought not to pass. I objected to it before, and it will now take three objectors and I hope we will get them. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], from this floor on February 19, 1935, admitted that he not only put my bill to stop all immigration in his "death house" but that it was his vote in the committee that killed the Dies bill, and kept it from being reported and passed. I quote the following excerpts from the debate that day:

Mr. DIES. That was on a bill introduced by myself, which provided for a reduction in quota to 60 percent and undertook to do what the gentleman from New York always said he wanted to do.

Mr. BLANTON. And his vote killed it?

Mr. DIES. That is true.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. May I say that there was a bill introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE]. There was also a bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. These two bills were considered together. They were H. R. 4114 and H. R. 8222.

* * * * * * *

The two bills were beaten by 1 vote in committee, and I was simply carrying out a message from the American people.

Mr. DIES. I think the gentleman will agree that there are a number of aliens in this country illegally who ought to be out of the country.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DIES. I think our committee has found that to be a fact time and time again.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There is no question about the gentleman's statement.

Mr. DIES. Is the gentleman in favor of excluding all new seed immigration if we reunite families?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am in favor of reuniting families.

And here is what Chairman DICKSTEIN that day said about putting in his "death house" my bill to stop all immigration:

There were a number of bills before the committee, and we unanimously agreed to put all the other bills in the "deadhouse", if that is the proper term, and take up House bill 4114, which was the Dies bill, dealing with all the questions.

And then, after putting in his "death house" all of the numerous bills pending before his committee to restrict and stop immigration, except the Dies bill, then Chairman DICKSTEIN by his vote broke a tie and killed the Dies bill and kept it from being reported.

Then Chairman DICKSTEIN in said debate admitted that he had been so zealous in "reuniting families", that in his district, full of foreigners, there is not a family in his district that has a relative on the other side. He has been able to bring all of their relatives here from foreign countries. Here is what he said:

Mr. DIES. Except I do not think the gentleman is bona fide in favor of restriction, and I do not blame him; he represents a district where 80 percent are opposed to it. We might as well be frank about it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Suppose I told the gentleman that there is not a family in my district that has a relative on the other side.

To which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] replied:

Mr. DIES. The gentleman always votes against anything in favor of restriction.

No Member of this House knows better the attitude of Chairman DICKSTEIN on restricting immigration than does my colleage [Mr. DIES], as they served on the committee together for a long time, and only recently has Mr. DIES been promoted to a position on the powerful Rules Committee of this House. And in that debate on February 19, 1935, the following is what Mr. DIES had to say about Chairman DICKSTEIN not offering to exclude aliens, to wit:

Mr. DIES. Yes; there are 3,500,000 illegally in the country, but the gentleman is not offering to exclude them; he is not in favor of that; he is in favor of their becoming American citizens regardless of how they came into the country.

Let me again repeat what I said in this House on March 13, 1935. We must deport these 3,500,000 aliens who are here unlawfully. And we must stop all immigration from coming here.

And just as Bruno Hauptmann did, these 3,500,000 aliens now in the United States unlawfully, violated our laws when they came across our borders, and are continuing to violate our laws by staying here unlawfully, for they are here illegally, and every one of them either has a job, taken away from some American, or else is on the relief rolls, taking relief that should go to the hungry wives and little children of American citizens.

And in addition to the 3,500,000 aliens here illegally—and in fact there are many more than that number here—there are about 6,500,000 aliens in the United States who came here lawfully but who have not thought enough of the United States to take out their citizenship papers. And all of them either hold jobs, taken away from Americans, or else they are on our relief rolls being fed and warmed and housed and clothed by this Government, when there is not another country in the world that will do such things for aliens or allow them such privileges.

We must take steps at once to require all aliens to register, and we should immediately deport every alien here unlawfully, and we should deport all aliens who have been lawfully in the United States as long as 3 years who have not become naturalized citizens. If they are not willing to fight for our flag they should not be allowed to stay here.

This is America, not Russia. This is America, not Greece. This is America, not Italy. This is America, not Germany. This is America, not Hungary. This is America, not Czechoslovakia. This is America, not Poland. This is America, not Mexico. Yet you would not think so if you visited certain parts of our big cities, where aliens from these foreign countries speak here in their native tongues, read daily newspapers published in their native languages, maintain the customs and cook their foods as they did in their home countries.

Let me again quote what Mr. Theodore Andrica, Cleveland reporter, who in his Around the World in Cleveland, not long ago said:

CLEVELAND SECOND IN UNITED STATES IN NUMBER OF ITS FOREIGN-LANGUAGE PUBLICATIONS—53 MONTHLIES, WEEKLIES, AND DAILIES REPRESENT 13 NATIONALITIES

In no other American city except New York are there more foreign-language publications printed and edited than in Cleveland.

To be exact, 53 foreign publications have their editorial and printing offices in Cleveland. Of these, 12 are dailies, 23 are weeklies, and 18 are monthlies.

Thirteen language groups are represented by these publications, namely: Czech, German, Hebrew, Hungarian, Italian, Lithuanian, Polish, Rumanian, Russian, Saxon, Serbian, Slovak, and Slovene.

Seven nationality groups have dailies here—the Bohemians, Germans, Hebrews, Hungarians, Italians, Poles, and Slovenes.

REACH ABOUT 150,000 DAILY

According to the publishers' sworn statements to the United States Post Office the total circulation of all the foreign-language dailies printed in Cleveland is between 100,000 and 150,000 daily.

The average size of a foreign-language paper is 6 pages. On special occasions the edition contains as high as 40 pages. In most cases the publications are official organs of fraternal or religious organizations.

Of the 18 monthlies, 10 are of religious character. Of the 23 weeklies, 4 are religious and two-thirds of the others are organs of some fraternal groups.

The dailies print, besides current world news, much news of old country affairs or of world events with special bearing on their particular nationality.

Most of the dailies take a definite stand on old-country politics.

The Socialists have 1 weekly, the Communists have 1 daily and 1 weekly, and the I. W. W. Party has 1 weekly and 1 monthly.

Is it not ridiculous to talk about deporting Communists when we allow Communists to publish daily Communist newspapers?

If aliens want to read here their daily newspaper published in foreign languages, they ought to go back to their own country and not steal jobs from Americans.

Now, I have a bill pending to stop all immigration for 10 years. That will give us a chance to assimilate the lawful aliens we already have in this country, millions of them, before we take on new ones. Are you in favor of that? If you are not in favor of it, of course, you will let things rock along, and if you are in favor of it, you will go up to the desk and sign a petition which I have placed there to take this bill away from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and take it up on the floor of this House and pass it. [Applause.]

We will not ever pass it in any other way. Chairman DICKSTEIN would not let us. He put my bill in his "deadhouse" in the last Congress, and he has tried to do it again in this Congress.

It is under one of Chairman DICKSTEIN's bills that Commissioner of Immigration MacCormack has allowed some of the most noted Communists in the world to come here and stay here, and has refused to deport them. Let me again call your attention to some more of the facts I mentioned on February 19, 1935.

I want to get Mr. MacCormack's statement in the RECORD. Back in 1917 we deported two of the most noted anarchists in the world, who had been causing much trouble in this country. They were both deemed dangerous anarchists. It took us a long time and cost us a lot of money to deport them. One of them was named Emma Goldman and the other Alexander Berkman. We put them back in Russia, where they belonged.

In my friend's subcommittee, when they got after Mr. MacCormack about letting her come back, here is what he said:

I am frank to say that the Strachey admission was at my own instance. The first of those cases was, as I recollect it, that of Emma Goldman. She applied for permission to come to this country to speak on literature.

A noted anarchist, deported from the country because she was an anarchist and a dangerous anarchist, and deported back to Russia, wanted to come back here and speak on literature. What kind of literature do you suppose?

We were given definite assurances that she would speak on literature and keep off the political subjects, and particularly subjects dealing with anarchism. I took the position—and on that position urged her admission—that it was very much better, as long as she was not going to discuss subjects which are prohibited to an alien under our law, to let her in than to give her the publicity for her books and writings which would attend her exclusion; and after discussion in the Department, it was agreed that that be done.

Emma Goldman had been a great figure, and so we let her into the United States.

She was a wild-eyed anarchist, but when she came into the United States we permitted her to move around freely. We held her down to a gentleman's agreement that we had with her, and with the people who were sponsoring her stay, that she was merely a nice old lady who was traveling around the country telling her past experiences.

There was a case of Tom Mann, a British Communist labor leader. He applied for admission into the United States to address a conference on peace—specifically on that—a "conference against war", or something like that, it was called. I looked over the group of organizations participating in this peace conference, and I saw the usual group of labor organizations, parlor Socialists, and many serious organizations, all concerned in this conference. I inquired whether Tom Mann was going to talk communism or discuss anything that would be received with displeasure in this country. They said, "No; he was going to talk on peace." And again I urged that he be permitted to come in.

We had before our subcommittee a very distinguished military man from California, Adjutant General Howard. I read from the printed report of the hearings, beginning at page 435. General Howard is testifying and telling about a strike called out in California and about the trouble it put them to. He said, and I am quoting from the hearings on this bill:

We immediately sent out a call and assembled about 5,000 of our troops on the San Francisco front and across the bay at Oakland and Berkeley.

The malcontents tied up the entire outside country so no food could be brought in and no gasoline for the trucks. We had out there a condition of absolute revolution for a period of 3 days.

At the same time, at Los Angeles, we had a similar strike and some longshoremen went out.

It was necessary, in making our demonstration in San Francisco, for us to pull the troops out of Los Angeles and take them to the northern city, which left the city of Los Angeles, a territory with well over 2,000,000 people, absolutely destitute of protection.

Of course, the city and county of Los Angeles wanted us to replace those troops, or get them back there.

The police department immediately added 1,200 policemen to their force. But you can imagine what 1,200 policemen would be able to do in a serious situation. That is about the size of a regiment of infantry.

They took charge of the situation insofar as that particular strike in that part of the State was concerned. But we were utterly helpless to go down there to help them.

We would have had to resort to the drafting of men. We would have had to resort to calling for volunteers and trying to get arms and ammunition, but, of course, they had no uniforms, to try to save the State of California, as we were really in a situation of revolution.

I think the question of national defense should be given consideration as a national proposition, and I should like to say something about our position as the frontier of the Nation on the west coast, in the case of any trouble with a foreign country.

Mr. BLANTON. Before you leave that subject, let me ask you this question: How many men were there who caused that trouble—that revolutionary condition? Approximately how many union men were there?

General HOWARD. In the neighborhood of 1,300.

Mr. BLANTON. Then 1,300 union men put California and the country to all that trouble and expense?

General HOWARD. Yes; there were only a very small number of actual agitators originally; less than 300, I should say.

Mr. BLANTON. That is a situation, in my judgment, that is ruining and menacing the whole world.

Mr. BOLTON. What has been done with those men?

General HOWARD. The ringleader, who went around in San Francisco with a bodyguard of 14 men, is now the president of the union. He is a citizen of Australia, and we have never been able to topple him from his high perch. He still controls things out there.

Mr. BOLTON. Has the Department of Labor taken any steps in reference to that matter?

General HOWARD. No, sir; we inquired during the trouble of the Department of Labor and the Secret Service as to what could be done with this man, because I wanted to pick him up. I was told it would be better to let him alone, because the Federal authorities were trying to get something on him.

Mr. SNYDER. You said he was the president of the union; what union is that?

General HOWARD. The Longshoremen's International Union.

I would say that at least 60 or 70 percent of the people who actually caused this trouble were not American citizens.

And concerning the bill which Chairman DICKSTEIN has been trying to get us to let him pass, the following is what Commissioner MacCormack says:

We have stayed deportation in approximately 1,200 cases of persons of good character who would be the beneficiaries of the legislation if enacted.

I now want to quote an excerpt from the splendid statement made by my able colleague from Texas [Mr. DIES] at the time he introduced his present bill, H. R. 5921, which contains the same provisions that were in his bill H. R. 4114, which Chairman DICKSTEIN killed in the last Congress by his deciding vote, to wit:

Mr. DIES. I have just introduced a bill that will not only end the organized and even subversive propaganda called attention to by the Dickstein Nazi committee, but will strengthen existing deportation statutes as urged by the Department of Labor, deport gangsters and racketeers convicted of possessing machine guns, permanently exclude aliens convicted of crime and lawbreaking, require eligible aliens to become citizens or depart, further restrict immigration by reducing the existing quotas 60 percent, and applying them to countries of this hemisphere, take care of law-abiding aged parents and near relatives of foreign born in this country by reserving the quotas for them, and deport aliens engaged in smuggling and bootlegging aliens into this country.

Last year's immigration statistics show an increase of 50 percent in quota immigration—that is, new seed immigrants—an 8-percent increase in total aliens admitted, and a 60-percent decrease in alien deportations. During the last 10 years of quota restriction over three and a half million aliens have entered the United States, and our last census revealed the largest number of foreign born, over 14,000,000; the largest foreign-stock population, over 40,000,000; and the most aliens, nearly 7,000,000, in our history. While the alien departures reported by the steamships and railroads do exceed the alien arrivals counted by our immigrant inspectors, our alien population has continued to increase by surreptitious entries and by the atrocious, alien deserting seamen hole in our existing legislation that my bill would plug up.

The bill I have just introduced would also deport alien Communists by making any alien deportable who is a member of communistic organizations. Most of the leaders of indefensible strikes like the recent general strike on the Pacific coast are aliens with "red" records, and of such we have quite enough of our own naturalized and even native born without importing any more or permitting them to operate in this country, just as we have enough unemployed and dependents without importing any more or permitting aliens to swell their ranks. Each country should care for its own dependents, delinquents, defectives, and unemployed. Charity should begin at home, just as employment should.

The deportations in 1931 were 18,142. In 1932 they were 19,422. In 1933 the deportations were 19,865. But since our good friend from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] has been passing his amendments, the deportations last year were only 8,879.

If I were Chairman of the Immigration Committee, I would get reported promptly and would pass here in this House a bill to stop all immigration for 10 years, and a bill to deport every Communist, and a bill to deport the several million aliens who are now in the United States unlawfully, like Bruno Hauptmann, and a bill to deport several more aliens who are here lawfully, but who do not think enough of our flag to fight for it, when called on, or to take out citizenship papers and become Americans. And I would pass a bill to stop the publication of Communist newspapers in New York and Cleveland and everywhere else in the United States.

I hope sincerely that every Member of this House who wants to save American jobs for Americans, and who wants to take such American jobs away from foreigners and give them back to Americans, would sign the petition which I have on the Clerk's desk, to discharge Chairman DICKSTEIN'S committee from further consideration of my bill, and then we can get it on this floor, as soon as 218 Members sign that petition, and pass it. And then we will preserve American jobs for Americans.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein certain excerpts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] anticipated I was going to talk on immigration, so he thought he would get a march on me by talking about immigration himself. It so happens that I did not rise today to talk about immigration. I rose for something entirely different. Since the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has discussed the question of immigration and his bill, may I call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that the Committee on Immigration tried to bring about repatriation of over 100,000 aliens? I caused this bill to put on the Consent Calendar of the House and my friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] objected to consideration by the House on February 18, 1935, and he again objected on March 4, 1935, and so this House has been prevented from voting on this bill. My friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] will not let the Members of this House even consider this meritorious bill.

I think it is significant that just recently a former Federal officer, Edward Corsi, formerly immigration commissioner at New York, has publicly testified in a hearing in New York to the effect that there are over 32,000 alien families in New York City alone receiving public relief, and he estimates—notice I say he estimates—that about a million and a half aliens are on Government relief rolls throughout the United States.

But the most significant statement by Mr. Corsi during his examination was that he advocated the policy that it would be better for the Federal Government to use relief money to send these indigent aliens back home instead of supporting them here in the United States. He said many of them would be glad to go back home, and he estimated it would cost about $90 for each alien who wants to go.

This is the purpose back of H. R. 3472, which my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] objects to this House considering on its merits.

Mr. BLANTON. And I do not believe the House will ever pass it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I refuse to yield, Mr. Chairman.

I brought up another bill to repatriate 30,000 Filipinos and send them back to the Philippine Islands. They could not come back here because they would have to file a pauper's oath. I brought that bill before the House on the Consent Calendar and my good friend [Mr. BLANTON] objected to that on February 18, 1935, and March 4, 1935.

Every bill as reported from the Immigration and Naturalization Committee and put on the Consent Calendar has been objected to by a troop of objectors, who set themselves up as dictators of this House and prevent the enactment of legislation much needed now.

Mr. BLANTON. Since the gentleman has mentioned my name, will he not kindly yield? He mentioned me in a derogatory way.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I did not intend to do that. I am simply stating facts and calling attention to the effects on legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman said I killed two much-needed bills, when the bills I killed were bad ones.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not want to yield just now.

Mr. BLANTON. Please be fair enough to yield for a proper correction.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If I have the time I shall yield later.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If I have the time I will yield later.

Mr. BLANTON. Then please do not mention me in connection with certain bills without yielding to me to correct erroneous statements.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want to repeat to this House that several weeks ago the Committee on Immigration unanimously reported out a bill to repatriate aliens who are stranded in the United States, who are willing to return to their native lands, who are on relief rolls, and one month and a half relief to these aliens would take them back to their homes and keep them there, but consideration of this bill was objected to on the Consent Calendar day by my good friend, Mr. BLANTON, who talks so much about making jobs for American citizens by keeping out aliens. Why does he not permit this House to vote upon this bill which would get rid of some of the aliens who are here and are willing to go home?

Mr. BLANTON. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield for one short question.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask my friend if it is not a fact that we killed those bills dead as hell because they needed it?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not understand your language at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, that is pretty plain but understandable language—"killed them dead as hell"—because they would not do what we wanted done about immigration.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I am going to speak about certain matters that were mentioned on the floor of this House yesterday afternoon. I hope some day in the very near future BLANTON and I will have another opportunity to match wits on the question of immigration. I want to say this, however, with respect to restrictions upon immigration matters, at least, I want honest restrictions. I do not want professional restrictions so as to go out on election day and say that I have kept this alien out or that alien out. I am willing to have restriction, yes; but let us do it in a sensible way. Let us not deprive people of some of their rights to have families together in their homes on American soil.

On yesterday before this House the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], who is rather on the Blanton side, made this statement:

> I thought it was the unusual prerogative of my good friend from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] to defend the United States against communism, but I see the Navy Department is competing with the activities of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

In other words, the gentleman from New York says that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization is in competition with the Navy to rid this country of communism. Well, I am happy to say that he has put me in good company.

Then he talks about the fact that we have six gunboats out in China and that the admirals of the Navy are trying to prevent communism in China. But he fails to emphasize that the quotation he read, referred to protection for Americans in China against the use of force and violence upon them by Chinese Communists. Does he disapprove?

I want to say to the gentleman from New York that I am not interested in communism in China or Japan. I am interested in preventing the spread of communism within the United States when it seeks to overthrow our Government by force and violence.

I do not know whether or not the gentleman intended to appear to criticize me because I have taken the position, both in the committee and on the floor of this House, that it is our duty as Members of Congress to do everything possible to prevent the spread of communism within the United States. But I may say to him that while I am a Member of this House I shall do everything in my power to prevent the spread of this un-American doctrine.

In their own booklets we can find that the Communists hold out as a part of their program in the United States this strange proposal—I quote from one of their own books:

> The revolutionary workers' and farmers' government—an alliance of the working class with the other toiling sections of the population—will establish a real democracy for the overwhelming majority of the toilers and a stern dictatorship against the capitalists and their agents. It will confiscate the banks, the factories, the railroads, the mines, and the farms, and the big corporations.

This quotation is taken from a Communist booklet which indicates the contents are the manifesto and principle resolutions adopted by the eighth convention of the Communist Party of America.

Our Committee on Immigration and Naturalization reported another bill to this House and the purpose of that bill was to assist the Department of Labor to get rid of people who come here for the purpose of spreading propaganda about communism, nazi-ism, fascism, and other isms, which may work in foreign countries but will not be tolerated in this country, which for over 150 years has prospered under democratic principles of government of our own formation.

But the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] was instrumental in preventing this House from considering that bill on its merits on March 4, 1935, and again on April 1, 1935. That bill is known as "H. R. 5839."

Let me call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] that a special committee of this House, appointed by the Speaker—the late Mr. Rainey, of Illinois—spent considerable time investigating these subversive activities in our midst and that committee recommended to this House, among other measures, as follows—I quote that committee's report:

> That Congress should enact a statute conferring upon the Secretary of Labor authority to shorten or terminate the stay in this country of any visitor admitted here under temporary visa, whenever in the judgment of the Secretary such visitor shall engage in the promotion or dissemination of propaganda or engage in political activity in the United States.

I cannot for the life of me understand why anyone should want to prevent this House considering a measure designed to carry out that recommendation.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF] yesterday made certain charges against Mr. Hearst. I have heard a number of charges against Mr. Hearst because he has printed in his newspapers a certain attack upon certain teachers in our public schools, and this gentleman yesterday said that he more or less defied anybody to protect Mr. Hearst. I am not here to protect Mr. Hearst, but I am here to say this for Mr. Hearst: His newspapers to a great extent were instrumental in exposing the infiltration of, and teaching of, communism within certain schools of higher education in the United States, and for his patriotism in this particular publicity he is to be commended rather than being subjected to criticism.

My good friend then went on to state that he has no Communists in Wisconsin and, quoting his own language, he states:

Stop these glaring inequalities and communism would wither and die. Continue them and no man can foretell the consequences. Out in my country we do not know what a communist is and we care less. We have no interest in communism. We do not need it at all. If you talk to a farmer out in the Mississippi Valley about communism he would laugh at you. Why? Because he has never had any contact with it; because he has more pressing problems; because he is interested in getting the cost of production for what he raises.

Well, that is just the trouble, my friends, because he has apparently come to believe that his constituents have no communism in Wisconsin, that does not mean we have not communism in Boston or in New York or in New Jersey or down East. I would like for some of these gentlemen who never saw a Communist to have a chance to look at them and see some of the activities they conduct in the East. Let them look at some of the soap-box platforms and listen to some of the speeches they make. I say more power to Hearst if he is conducting a campaign to expose a lot of aliens and other persons whose efforts are subversive to our form of Government and who seek, through our institutions of higher education, to destroy our Government by force and violence. I say that we should at least give Mr. Hearst credit for conducting a campaign of patriotic purpose and intent.

I have not the time now, but under the grant to extend and revise my remarks I am going to give you a partial list of documentary testimony dealing with Communist schools. They have their own educational system in this country.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman include in that list a list of names furnished in the Red Network?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am just going to list some testimony given before the Committee on Un-American Activities as a result of information that committee received and some of it secured through the committee's own agents, bearing directly on certain activities in various schools. I do not charge all of the schools and I do not charge all of the teachers with being un-American.

However, let me point out to my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF] that perhaps the pressing problems that he says are troubling the people of his State, in common with the people of many other States, may be conducive to, and fertile ground for, the propagandists and agitators of the Communists to get a foothold among his constituents before he is aware that the subtle influences are at work out there.

Some very significant facts are obtainable from the printed literature of the Communists. They are quite frank in some of their statements to their own members.

In his annual report and remarks at the last annual convention of the Communist Party of the United States, the executive secretary of that party, in part, says—

From the beginning of this movement, the Communist Party safeguarded itself against all the lying accusations of its enemies by having a large majority of non-Communist individuals in every controlling committee of the movement.

At another part of his report the executive secretary said in part:

Another auxiliary movement of growing importance that has appeared as a serious factor only in the last 2 years, is the revolutionary movement among students. * * * The movement began principally in the higher institutions of learning with predominantly middle-class composition. It has rapidly spread into the secondary schools and involved a large number of proletarian students in its activities. Led and organized by the National Students' League, this movement has established a base in hundreds of high schools, colleges, and universities; it has become national in scope; it has exerted a great and growing influence upon all intellectual circles. From the beginning it has been clearly revolutionary in its program and activities. * * * By organized participation in helping strike actions, defense movements, the Scottsboro case, etc., the students have been brought close to and participation in the general class struggles and taught them the practical meaning of working-class leadership.

And later in his statement to that convention, we find this statement, in part, as follows:

The broadest movement of mixed-class composition has been the American League Against War and Fascism. * * * The American League in its program proclaims that the working class is the basic force in the struggle against war; from the beginning it has never tried to avoid the issue of Communist Party participation in its broad, united front. It is our task to see that the American League, organizationally, gets that working-class foundation and active participation of the Communists for which its program provides.

Here, gentlemen, we have the official statements made, to the Communist Party in convention assembled, by the executive secretary of the party, all of which show how close the Communist movement is to all this agitation among the students and teachers in our schools, colleges, universities, high schools, and other institutions of education.

Here we have from their own official booklets the very broadest confirmation of all that Mr. Hearst has brought out in his newspaper articles. There certainly is reason to believe that a great part of what Mr. Hearst has said on this subject is based more on fact than on fiction.

While I do not want to say that I agree whole-heartedly in everything that appears editorially or otherwise in the papers under the control of Mr. Hearst, I do believe he is to be commended for his patriotic service in bringing this tragic situation so graphically before the American people in his effort to arouse all of us to the subtle seriousness of this communistic influence in our educational systems.

There are thousands and thousands of teachers and professors in our institutions of learning against whom no charge of Communism could be placed. These noble men and women need no defense on the floor of this House—their place is assured in their own communities and in their own schoolrooms. Their conscientious devotion to duty is honorable.

Many of these instructors and professors and teachers have affiliated themselves with organizations against which no just criticism can be placed. Others have united for legitimate purposes with the American Federation of Labor for mutual employment improvements, such as the American Federation of Teachers. This latter organization is highly regarded both by the American Federation of Labor and by the National Education Association and I join in expressing my regard for their Americanism.

However, the subtle influence of communistic propaganda reaches out to plant the alien Communist philosophy of government and economics within the ranks of otherwise upright and legitimate Nation-wide organizations.

President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, made the following significant statements on December 17, 1934, when he testified before the special House Committee on Un-American Activities. In part he then said:

This statement is based upon my experience in dealing with them in the American Federation of Labor movement. Communists and communistic philosophy thrive in America very largely because of a lack of understanding on the part of the public of the communistic philosophy. It is deceptive, insidious, and misleading, for as a rule the subsidiary organizations organized for the purpose of carrying on communistic propaganda in the labor movement, and among other groups conceal their real purpose. They base their activities upon something extraneous, something misleading, for the accomplishment of a single purpose—the advancement of the Communist philosophy. To be accomplished through the gradual acceptance of the plan they may outline, and to effect in the ultimate acceptance of the Communist philosophy."

At another part of his testimony, Mr. Green was asked as follows:

Mr. Green, you made the statement that they were boring into the American Federation of Labor. Apparently it is a situation, which as you say, requires your constant vigilance and is always a source of danger?

Mr. Green replied that—it does require constant vigilance and they are annoying.

Continuing in the same thought, Mr. Green added, in part:

They attempt to influence the local union to espouse the closest approach to Communist philosophy that is possible, always keeping it within what they think is the opinion of the local union. They adopt resolutions. These, on their face, seem to be innocent and perhaps constructive. Then some of their periodicals will immediately make public the fact that local so-and-so of the American Federation of Labor adopted a resolution espousing this and espousing that which was a near approach to communism. That is their method of procedure.

Thus, may I call your attention to the fact that this Special Committee on Un-American Activities received testimony way back in last December which practically confirms most of what Mr. Hearst has published with regard to the subtle boring into the educational system of this country by those who are either Communists or persons who sponsor some or all of the basic communistic philosophy which advocates the ultimate use of force and violence for the overthrow of this United States Government, as well as all other organized Governments which do not accept the Communist theory of government and economics.

So you will see that even local groups of every legitimate organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, the National Education Association, and others which, like them, are adhering to the American principles of government and economics must be ever watchful of their own local members and how their local group contributes to or sponsors activities at home proposed to them by organizers and agents whose distant affiliations are not fully known, since perhaps a trap may be laid which may later convey to some persons erroneous impressions of the local group and may with reasonable interpretations erroneously imply wrong motives upon their national organization without any real foundation therefor.

The subtleness of the plans followed by some people engaged in this communistic propaganda in this country should be understood by more of our citizens so that proper safeguards may be made effective in our cities and communities.

I do not see why such a fuss was made yesterday because somebody wanted the teachers to take an oath of allegiance. I would not object to taking the oath of allegiance every day to the flag of my country. What is the trouble with the teachers taking it?

Mr. SCOTT. Why do you not make the doctors of the country take it?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Oh, the gentleman is splitting hairs.

Mr. ENGEL. I will tell the gentleman why: Because the doctors do not teach young America.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the fact that a teacher refuses to take an oath of allegiance indicate any disloyalty on his part?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Certainly not. However, the more loyal a school teacher, a university professor, or college instructor is, the more willing he should be to take the suggested oath in his selfish interest to prevent any unjust criticism gaining headway against either himself or against the institution which pays him his salary. The loyal, faithful teacher will not resent taking an oath to support and safeguard American institutions—he or she lives such an oath, anyway, whether it is demanded or not.

I see a lot of fuss is being made in some quarters because some teachers have been asked to take an oath of allegiance as a prerequisite to the continued performance of teaching duties. I do not see why anyone should object to this proposal.

Now, I said something earlier about Communist schools. If you had seen some of the officials who appeared before our investigating committee, trying to explain what was taught in these Communist schools, you would have wondered how those schools were permitted to go on teaching their seditious principles.

I submit here a partial list of cities and places where these Communist schools carry on:

Los Angeles Workers School, Los Angeles, Calif.; San Francisco Workers School, San Francisco, Calif.; New York City Workers School, New York City; Boston Workers School, Boston, Mass.; Detroit Workers School, Detroit, Mich.; Chicago Workers School, Chicago, Ill.; Oklahoma City Workers School, Oklahoma City, Okla.; Cleveland Workers School, Cleveland, Ohio; St. Louis Workers School, St. Louis, Mo.; Richmond Workers School, Richmond, Va.; Seattle Workers School, Seattle, Wash.; Agricultural Workers School, Bismarck, N. Dak.; Milwaukee Workers School, Milwaukee, Wis.; Washington Workers School, Washington, D. C.; Philadelphia Workers School, Philadelphia, Pa.

I will insert here an extract from testimony given during the last few days of the life of the special committee in Washington:

Communism is penetrating into our public schools, colleges, and campuses. Its influence almost reaches the cradle, taking boys and girls into the movement at the age of 8. The Communists maintain their own 300 or more schools in the United States, where revolution, strike tactics, and hatred to our Government and its institutions is taught.

The Workers School in New York City, located at 31 East Twelfth Street, opened with an enrollment of 1,500 students. This school, the leading school in the United States of the Moscow-directed rebels, is headed by A. Markoff, who is also "Grand Klegel" of the entire Bolshevik school system in the United States. Among the New York schools' numerous instructors are Art Stein and W. W. Martin. The executive committee of the Communist Workers' School consists of Max Bedacht, Scott Nearing, Sam Darcy, William Z. Foster, William Weinstone, and Beatrice Carlin. The national advisory council includes John J. Ballam, Cyril Briggs, Rev. William Montgomery Brown, Prof. John D. Passos of Columbia University, Robert Dunn, Elizabeth G. Flynn, Joseph Freeman, Ben Gold, Mike Gold, A. Heller, J. Jerome, Robert Minor, M. J. Olgin, Mark Rosenberg, Grace Hutchins, Anita Whitney, Mary Heaton Vorse, and S. De Leon. This school has 57 instructors. Over 63 courses are given in Communist Party functions and history, including strike strategy and military communism.

Max Bedacht, chairman of the executive committee, says, "The course of studies in the school are for the training of young workers in the Marxist and Leninist teachings so as to help in the development of trained revolutionists who will be able to effectively lead the working class in the performance of its historic role to overthrow the capitalist system of society and to establish a dictatorship of the proletariat."

The instructors in these Communist schools should most assuredly be called upon to take an oath of allegiance to the United States Government before they are permitted to instruct young men and women or even grown men and women.

The insistence of this oath of allegiance being taken by these teachers would perhaps act as deterrent in their methods of instruction and might even have a beneficial effect upon the courses of studies which they willingly teach.

The loyal, conscientious teacher fully in sympathy with the institutions of the United States and our philosophy of government and economics would not object to the requirement of taking an oath of allegiance to the United States and its flag. Many of them will consider that as an additional badge of honor to their profession.

If the requirement of such an oath of allegiance from any person or group of persons, who instruct our growing young people in the formative stage of their lives, arouses objection from any who may actually be imbued with a belief that their position as a teacher justifies the teaching of communistic philosophy and results in the removal of such from the teaching staff of our tax-supported educational institutions, I say that the wide publicity given this treacherous subject by Mr. Hearst will be a blessing to this country.

As I stated earlier today, while I may not whole-heartedly support everything that may appear editorially or otherwise in the papers under the control of Mr. Hearst, I think his effort in this subject of Communist influence getting into our public schools and tax-supported institutions of educational instruction is a most worthy exposure and he should be commended for his patriotic utterances on this subject.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nevada, a member of the committee [Mr. SCRUGHAM].

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, the principles involved in this naval appropriation bill are of vital importance to the national welfare and should be clearly understood by every Member of this Congress. The announced objective of the Government, as stated by the Secretary of the Navy in his annual report to the President, is as follows:

To maintain the Navy in sufficient strength to support the national policies and commerce and guard the continental and overseas possessions of the United States.

Admiral Standley testified before the Subcommittee on Naval Appropriations to the effect that—

The operations of our naval forces are carried out, as thoroughly as funds permit, in such a way as—

(a) To exercise and train the units of the fleet to the highest state of efficiency;

(b) To organize the Navy for operations in either or both oceans so that expansion will be necessary only in case of national emergency;

(c) To protect American lives and interests in disturbed areas;

(d) To cooperate fully with other departments of the Government and with the States;

(e) To cultivate friendly international relations; and

(f) To encourage civil industries and activities useful in war.

In the interpretation of these clearly stated objectives there exists a wide difference of honest opinion. On one hand we have a school of thought who advocate an American Navy equal or superior to any in the world, practically regardless of expense entailed.

To this point of view the majority of the naval personnel naturally are not opposed. The warship builders, manufacturers of munitions, and allied interests all add their bit to the big-navy propaganda.

On the other hand we have another extreme element who sincerely and literally believe in total disarmament, and an application of the doctrine of brotherly love to all foreign nations. They would immediately stop all expenditures for materials of warfare.

In compiling this naval appropriation bill our subcommittee, under the strong leadership of our chairman, Mr. CARY, has formulated a measure which, in our opinion, fulfills every requisite of national defense and with due regard to the following principles:

First. A balanced program of construction of airships, airplane carriers, battleships, cruisers, destroyers, submarines, and so forth.

Second. Recognition of the fact that the rapid advances of military and naval science will render nearly every piece of construction and armament more or less obsolete in a very few years.

Third. The cost of the program will exceed $500,000,000 a year for many years to come.

Fourth. There should be no dependence upon foreign nation for any of the essential raw material supplies needed in time of war.

Fifth. Encouragement of civil industries and activities useful in war.

Probably the weakest point in the naval program, and to a lesser degree the War Department program, has been the dependence upon foreign sources of supply for many of the strategic minerals necessary for military and construction purposes. The principal items are as follows:

Chromite having origin in Rhodesia, Cuba, New Caledonia, Greece, and India, and used for alloy steels for tools, electric plating, and pigments.

Tin having origin in the Malay States, Bolivia, Dutch East Indies, Siam, and China, and used for bearings, food containers, solder, cables in aircraft construction, inside of salt water pipes, bomb fuses, in bronze, and for journals and castings.

Tungsten having origin in China, Bolivia, and Burma, and used for high-speed cutting tools in all kinds of machine work.

Optical glass having origin in Germany and France, and used for cameras, binoculars, periscopes, telescopes, and range finders.

Nickel having origin in Canada and New Caledonia, and used in steel for making guns and armor plate.

Antimony having origin in China, Bolivia, and Mexico, and used for bearing metal, battery plates, paints, and chemicals.

Manganese having origin in India, Russia, Brazil, Cuba, Gold Coast of Africa, and Egypt, and used for propeller hubs, propeller blades, engine frames, gears, gun-mount castings, and torpedo-tube castings.

Quicksilver having origin in Italy and Spain, and used for explosives, paints, drugs, and electrical apparatus.

It is proposed to purchase adequate stocks of these materials produced and processed in the United States.

This policy of accumulation of reserve stocks of strategic minerals of domestic origin is recommended by the National Resources Board in its recent report to the President, page 416, and is also authorized and directed by inference in an act of Congress, Public, No. 428, Seventy-second Congress, title III, section 2.

Another item worthy of special comment is the additional support given the Naval Research Laboratory.

The committee has increased the estimate for this establishment from $210,000 allowed by the Budget, to $310,000. Of the increase, the sum of $30,000 has been allocated for the employment of additional scientific personnel.

The construction of a modern warship requires the application of practically all of the arts and sciences. The improvements in the designs of the future will depend upon the scientific advancements and their applications. Naval research should be aggressively prosecuted in times of peace in order that the benefits of science be available for use in war, because months and often years are required to incorporate the results of research into the fleet. Mobilization for war is too late for the mobilization of science for long-time problems.

The character of naval matériel requires that the Navy look to itself for a large part of its research, particularly that part which is secret or has no commercial application. In the solution of its research problems the Navy should be unhampered by pressing current needs in other directions; in other words, the Naval Research Laboratory should have adequate funds for research work, independent of the Bureaus' appropriations. The class of problem that now suffers most is the difficult, expensive, and often long-time problem that requires the establishment of new facts for the solution.

In conclusion, let me express the opinion that this bill as presented represents the best judgment of the entire subcommittee, free from partisan or sectional bias, and for the best interests of the whole Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX].

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I did not rise to say anything about communism, but since the subject has been so recently discussed, I want to say a word.

Of course, you have Communists in New York and in Boston and other large cities. We have some in Cleveland, in Toledo, and other cities.

You always will have some Communists, but be sure that the quickest way to end communism in this country is to give every man a job and give every man who is willing to work an opportunity to earn a decent and honest living.

In Ohio we gave them a ticket at the election last fall. In Ohio we had a communistic ticket. We had a communistic candidate for Governor, a candidate for Senator, and a candidate for Congressman at Large. As I recollect it, my opponent on the Communist ticket got 17,000 votes out of the entire total vote of 2,000,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Not now. I did not intend to say anything about the farm situation, but now since this subject has been mentioned with criticism leveled at the Democratic administration, I feel compelled to say something at this point.

You have been told that the processing tax is a failure. You have been told that the herculean efforts of the Roosevelt administration have gone to naught insofar as recovery of the farmer is concerned.

I call attention of the House to the price of hogs. In 1932, the last year of the Hoover administration, I sold hogs from my farm for 2½ cents a pound. Today hogs are selling in my country for 8½ cents a pound. That does not include the processing tax, which means an additional $2.75 per hundred. Do you mean to tell me that you can go out into Ohio, that you can go into Iowa, or into Nebraska, and tell those hog farmers that they are not more prosperous than they were in 1932? Do you mean to tell me that you can go into the South and say to the cotton growers that the processing tax and the triple A is spelling their doom? All you need is to remind them that in 1932, the last year of the Hoover administration, cotton was selling for 5 and 6 cents a pound; that they had a surplus then of around 12,000,000 bales; and that today cotton is selling for better than 11 cents a pound and that the carry-over, or surplus, has been reduced to about eight or nine million bales. The proof of the pudding is in the eating, and I say to you that all we need is a crop year; that the restored prosperity of the American farmer will, in another year, be reflected in every avenue of trade, every channel of commerce; and you cannot stop it.

I have not posed at any time as a champion or defendant of Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, but I do believe in giving the program and the administration all the credit and praise that is due, because, for the first time in many years, not only an attempt has been made but a real constructive program has been adopted and put into force that is bringing this prosperity back to where it first belongs—namely, down to the grass roots of the country. [Applause.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Not now. I have a letter here from a man in Darke County. Darke County is the largest and richest agricultural corn and hog county in the State of Ohio. This letter is dated April 18. He says:

> Certain industries, financial interests and parasites of the agricultural industry, are at the present moment bringing great pressure to bear upon the public and its representatives to discredit the A. A. A. programs.
> I wish to assure you that the A. A. A. programs have been the means of restoring the confidence of Ohio agriculture in itself and its future.
> The support you have given the agricultural program in the past has been greatly appreciated.
> To drop the programs at the present time would mean the loss of what stability has been attained in rural Ohio.
> Your continued active support of the interests of rural Ohio is necessary to the future prosperity of Ohio farmers.
> The statistics being quoted by nonagricultural interests as proving the A. A. A. a failure, and showing that the processing tax is the cause of the excessive retail prices of controlled products cannot be substantiated when all the facts are considered.
> May I not urge your careful scrutiny of all material presented to you for the purpose of discrediting the agricultural programs?

This letter is signed by Dale C. Williams, president of the Darke County Corn and Hog Control Association. That is the answer to all of this criticism that is now hurled at the administration farm policy. Eight and a half cents for hogs as against two-and-a-half-cent hogs under the policy of do nothing, under the policy of letting the farmer work out his own salvation and having him lift himself over the fence by his own boot straps.

Mr. Chairman, last night a meeting was held in the city of Detroit that was not only of interest to the citizens of that city, but was of like interest to the citizens of that State and to the entire citizenship of the country. I refer to a meeting that was held and sponsored by that fighting radio crusader, Father Charles E. Coughlin. I read in the newspapers today that Father Coughlin was attempting to found a third party. I do not believe it. I am not in sympathy with third-party movements at this particular time. I am in sympathy with many of the aims and the objects proposed in his program and his League for Social Justice. I wonder if many of you have read that program very carefully? I wonder if you fully understand what is proposed in that program, and feeling that no Member of this House will take offense at a brief recital of the program I shall give it to you:

> No. 1. I believe in the right of liberty of conscience and liberty of education, not permitting the State to dictate either my worship to my God or my chosen avocation in life.
> No. 2. I believe that every citizen willing to work and capable of working shall receive a just and living annual wage which will enable him to maintain and educate his family according to the standards of American decency.
> No. 3. I believe in nationalizing those public necessities which, by their very nature, are too important to be held in the control of private individuals. By these I mean banking, credit and currency, power, light, oil, and natural gas, and our God-given natural resources.
> No. 4. I believe in private ownership of all other property.
> No. 5. I believe in upholding the right to private property, yet of controlling it for the public good.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. TRUAX (continuing):

> No. 6. I believe in the abolition of the privately owned Federal Reserve Banking System, and in the establishment of a Government-owned central bank.
> No. 7. I believe in rescuing from the hands of private owners the right to coin and regulate the value of money, which right must be restored to Congress, where it belongs.
> 8. I believe that one of the chief duties of this Government-owned central bank is to maintain the cost of living on an even keel, and the repayment of dollar debts with equal value dollars.
> 9. I believe in the cost of production plus a fair profit for the farmers.
> 10. I believe not only in the right of the laboring man to organize in unions, but also in the duty of the Government which that laboring man supports, to facilitate and protect these organizations against the vested interests of wealth and of intellect.
> 11. I believe in the recall of all nonproductive bonds, and thereby in the alleviation of taxation.
> 12. I believe in the abolition of tax-exempt bonds.
> 13. I believe in the broadening of the base of taxation, founded upon the ownership of wealth and the capacity to pay.
> 14. I believe in the simplification of government and the further lifting of crushing taxation from the slender revenues of the laboring class.
> 15. I believe that in the event of a war for the defense of our Nation and its liberties, there shall be a conscription of wealth as well as a conscription of men.
> 16. I believe in perferring the sanctity of human rights to the sanctity of property rights. I believe that the chief concern of government shall be for the poor, because as it is witnessed, the rich have ample means of their own to care for themselves.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I fail to see a single thing in this program or this platform that cannot be accepted and adopted by any real progressive, liberal citizen in this country of ours.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Not now. I am sorry.

Naturally, we all believe in the liberty of conscience, education, and of religion. Thomas Jefferson, more than a century ago, laid the cornerstone of progress upon those very principles. Eleven million men who walk the streets today seeking a job that does not exist but is only a mirage, are not greedy when they ask for a decent living wage. What matters it to them if they are employed for only a few months in the year at good wages, but during the balance of that year must go to the Federal relief rolls for food and clothing? I say to you that the workingman who, after all, creates all of the wealth and pays all of the taxes, is as fully entitled to a decent annual wage or living as is the millionnaire with his tremendous wealth and gold.

Why should we not nationalize the banks of this country? Why should we not nationalize the public utilities of this country? Within a few days I hope to have an opportunity to give you my views upon nationalizing the banks, but at this moment I will confine myself to nationalizing public utilities. Why should Mr. Morgan, Mr. Rockefeller, or Mr. Sinclair come down to my farm or my neighbor's farm back in Wyandot County, Ohio, and have the privilege for drilling for oil and gas and then, if they strike that gas, paying me or some other landowner 15 cents per 1,000 cubic feet for that gas? They pay for only one-eighth of it, and then they mix that gas with a generous supply of air and they sell the consumer in the city the entire eight-eighths of that gas at a price ranging from 65 cents to $1 per 1,000 cubic feet. Why should those powerful vested interests go down to the rivers of my State, to the Sandusky River at Ballville, Ohio, and there harness that mighty power that has lain there slumbering and transform that into electric energy and then peddle it to consumers in the cities at prices which will render them magnificent profits?

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, these most wonderful resources ever found in any country belong to all the people, instead of to the favored and the overprivileged few.

Who is there, my friends, who honestly believes in the perpetuity and perpetuation of the privately owned Federal Reserve banks? Founded upon a capital of $140,000,000, those privately owned Federal banks collect from the American people and taxpayers an enormous total every year. It is not the bankers that I condemn, but it is the system under which they operate. It was that system which enabled those American bankers, when the collapse of the banks came in 1933, to show on their books deposits of $44,000,000,000, when, as a matter of truth and of record, there were less than five and one-half billion dollars actually in existence in this country. It was that same iniquitous system that enabled those same bankers in 1929, when the country was at the peak of its supposed prosperity, to show book deposits of $59,000,000,000, when there was still less than $6,000,000,000 actual money in existence.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. TRUAX was granted permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRUAX. I continue with other sections of the Coughlin program.

Fourth and fifth. I, too, believe in private ownership of all other property, but never private monopoly.

Sixth, seventh, and eighth. I repeat, who believes in perpetuating the privately owned Federal Reserve Banking System? Do the farmers, the tillers of the soil, those who keep the Nation's bread basket full, believe in it? Do the 50,000,000 wage workers believe in it? Do the 11,000,000 unemployed believe in it? No; the vast majority do not believe in it nor those outside of the banks themselves or direct beneficiaries of the banks. They do not believe in it and will not make so bold as to defend it. They believe in the abolition for once and all time of such an iniquitous system.

Ninth. Certainly no fair-minded man or woman will disagree with the principles enunciated here. Personally, I have fought for the past 15 years for cost of production of farm products. I fought for it way back in 1923, when as director of agriculture for the State of Ohio I warned the people, who at that time were mostly nonbelievers, the calamity that would befall this Nation if agriculture was to continue producing food and the raw materials for clothing at a financial loss. I urged, implored, and begged the people not only in my own State but in many other Corn Belt States to believe in and support the McNary-Haugen bill. Back in those early days of pioneering for farming quality, so-called "leaders", the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, and others agreed with Coolidge, Mellon, and Hoover that the farmer must work out his own salvation, that he must pull himself up over this fence by his own boot strap. Back in those days, instead of talking about cost of production, we called it a "minimum prices." That is what we are fighting for today, minimum fixed prices that would cover cost of production plus a reasonable profit. That is what Father Coughlin, of the National Union for Social Justice, fights for today.

Tenth. Is nothing more nor less than approval and endorsement of section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act. It is endorsed by the American Federation of Labor, it has been endorsed by President Roosevelt, it was endorsed by Donald Richberg, but due to his willful misinterpretation section 7 (a) has lost its teeth and fangs and remains impotent insofar as fulfillment of that pledge to labor is concerned.

Eleventh and twelfth. Who does not want to recall and cease to issue tax-exempt bonds which are responsible for the most staggering burden of debt ever unloaded upon a long-suffering people. A monstrous burden of debt that is not only crushing to the ground the struggling taxpayer of today but the generations of taxpayers that are to follow him and the generations to come. When generations yet unborn shall wade through the musty pages of history they shall find there written in words as unerasable as they are enduring, that the curse, the scourge, the demolition of a country once powerful and strong was that grim destroyer—tax-exempt bonds.

Thirteenth. Translated into simple language, this means the taxing of wealth. The distinguished Senator from Louisiana, the all-American kingfish, the Honorable HUEY P. LONG, is too modest, too mild, in his slogan of "share the wealth." I do not want to share it with the plutocrats. They did not share it with me. Did they share it with you? Did they share it with the farmer when he was about to lose his farm? Did they share it with the unemployed workman when he was about to lose his home? Did they share it with the boys who fought their country's battles and upheld the Nation's glory and honor when they demanded their pensions and bonus? No; they did not share it with them, so why should we share it now. I would conscript wealth the same as we conscript men in time of war.

Fourteenth. I am heartily in accord with the principles enunciated. I would lift the crushing taxation of the laboring class by an adequate and proper tax imposed on wealth.

Fifteenth. In the McSwain bill recently passed in the House of Representatives we did conscript the wealth of the plutocrats and industrialists the same as men were to be conscripted. Then after voting in all those good amendments, which constituted the best antiwar profit and antiprofiteering bill ever enacted, we turned squarely around and voted to strike out all the good amendments that we had adopted. So I would go one better than our friend Huey in the other end of the Capitol and conscript wealth and not wait for war but do it now.

Sixteenth. The rich do not need my help; the holders and owners of vast wealth and of special privilege do not need my assistance. I am for the common people.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to avail myself of this opportunity to say that it has been a great pleasure to work with the distinguished gentleman on the Navy subcommittee in the preparation of this bill. The chairman, Mr. CARY, of Kentucky, proved himself to be not only a fine presiding officer but fair and unprejudiced in all respects, and Mr. DITTER, of Pennsylvania, and myself, of the minority, are happy to have served under him. At the same time I want to compliment our subcommittee on having the services of Mr. John Pugh, the efficient and able clerk. All who have come in contact with Mr. Pugh and who have had an opportunity to observe his work will agree with me in saying that the committee could not have had the assistance and valued cooperation of a higher-qualified or better-informed expert on the question involved. His deep and exhaustive knowledge of fiscal affairs and national defense have earned our keenest admiration.

Mr. Chairman, I desire at this time to call to the attention of the Members of the House my observations as to the methods and manner in which certain "emergency" funds are being used by the various Government departments to defray normal operating expenses, which ordinarily would be included in regular appropriation bills.

The operation of our Government is a most serious business, influencing as it does, with most far-reaching effects, the varied actions of our daily routine. In the proper conduct of the affairs of our Government there is no room or place for the false fronts and painted screens of stagecraft. I want to concur with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] when he said constructive criticism of the acts of the administration is desirable.

Stage props and clever devices for fooling the public are justly a part of the theater producer's trade, but when used by a government they become mere shams and result in an inexcusable and unforgivable deception where only the soul of honesty and integrity should exist.

The present administration has shown by more ways than one that it is an adept at borrowing pages from the book of filmdom. Imitation and adaption of cinema-studio technique to Government routine began with the age-old practice of hiring professional ballyhoo artists. Just as an actor or a showman of the stage have employed press agents to help "sell" them to the public, so has the administration engaged the services of a veritable corps of "Government press agents" and "public relations counsels" to sell various phases of the new deal to the voters.

The latest innovation is the "stage-prop" budget. For many years the country managed to get along with one Budget. Our expenditures were all classified in such a simple and straightforward manner that any taxpayer could tell just how much the Government was spending and how the money was being spent. Those days passed with the inauguration of the double-budget system.

Taking the cue from theater technicians, the administration has adopted a dual budget accounting system for Federal expenditures. When Mr. Citizen looks at the mounting tide of Government spending, he is comforted by the cheerful and brightly painted stage scenery set to create the illusion of thrift and economy in normal governmental expenses.

He is told that normal expenditures are being kept down and that the enormous outlay which arouses his nervous instincts is occasioned by "emergency" expenditures. His natural fears are calmed by the soothing assertion that the billions of dollars he sees being spent are but temporary and necessary means of fighting the depression. He is told that these "emergency" figures are not to be confused with the ordinary operating expenses of his Government.

These statements sound plausible to Mr. Citizen. Why should they not? The speaker who tells him these things is his own Government. In his Budget message, did not the President say:

> If this Budget receives the approval of the Congress, the country will henceforth have the assurance that, with the single exception of emergency relief, every current expenditure of whatever nature will be fully covered by our estimates of current receipts. Such deficit as occurs will be due solely to emergency relief, and it may be expected to decline as rapidly as private industry is able to reemploy those who now are without work.

Mr. Citizen is not in the moving-picture theater where mere show is the expected and accepted practice. He does not possess the time nor the facilities, usually, to penetrate behind the false front of glittering figures set up by those who owe him the highest measure of faithful and honest service. He is obliged to accept the statement of those in whose hands have been entrusted the affairs of his Government.

Ever since the United States Congress began to function, bills have been passed periodically, carrying certain well-defined appropriations to defray the operating expenses of the various branches of the Government. These appropriations formerly gave an accurate picture of the expenses of Government departments. This is no longer the case under the present "stage prop" budget system and the spending methods it engenders.

For instance, the pending naval appropriation bill calls for an appropriation of $457,786,261 to run the Navy for the coming fiscal year. Anyone, however, who accepts the total of this appropriation bill as indicative of the cost of the Navy for the coming year will be greatly mistaken. To arrive at the true total, the inquiring citizen will have to wend his way past the props and painted budget scenery which obscure the facts.

Once past the stage paraphernalia, he will notice a busy hum of activity, financed by so-called "emergency" funds. He will find regular operating expenses, ordinary maintenance, ordinary and necessary repair work being paid for out of P. W. A. and N. I. R. A. funds.

During the recent hearings on the naval appropriation bill before the House subcommittee it was brought out that although $500,000 was appropriated last year for machine tools, none of this money was spent. Instead, a grant of $1,451,220 was received from N. I. R. A. "emergency" funds and expended for necessary replacements of worn out and obsolete machine tools.

Naval experts estimated that $2,525,000 would be required during the coming fiscal year for machine tools for construction and repair. Did the appropriation bill call for this amount? It did not. Why should it, when "emergency" funds would be available? When the final estimates were sent to the Appropriations Committee by the administration the amount had been reduced to but $350,000.

The following excerpts from the committee hearings will help to throw some additional light on this subject. I read from page 459 of the hearing:

> Question. This $2,525,000 was the estimate submitted to the Secretary of the Navy?
> Admiral LAND. To the Navy budget officer.
> Question. It was refused by the Navy budget officer, not by the Bureau of the Budget; is that correct?
> Admiral LAND. I am not prepared to answer that.
> Question. Is it your hope that you will be able to receive part of this $2,525,000 from N. R. A. or P. W. A.?
> Mr. CARY. He has already answered that. He said he hoped to get all he could out of it.
>
> Question. No; not on this particular item. He has not answered that.
> In other words, of the request you made of $2,525,000, all you had in this bill was $350,000. Is it your hope that you will receive a part of that $2,525,000 from P. W. A. or N. R. A.?
> Admiral LAND. It is my personal hope that if any money is allocated to the Department, some of it will go to this project; and I understand that in various projects, with their priorities, that have been prepared by the Department as a whole, that item is listed.

This example is not an isolated exception. The adroit camouflaging of ordinary and regular expenses by means of the painted screenwork of our so-called "emergency" budget is becoming the established rule.

In corroboration, I would like to cite these additional facts concerning the use of "emergency" funds for essential repairs at the Naval Academy, which were brought out during the hearings on this bill. I read from page 276 of the hearing:

> Question. Would you say that all of it (the repair work) was definitely necessary?
> Answer. I would; yes, sir. The two big items pertaining to the wharves, amounting to over $85,000 out of the $88,622, were absolutely necessary. I know that, because I got there in time to see the finish of the wreck. The wharves were badly mauled by the high tides and heavy winds.

If further substantiating evidence were wanted to show that "relief" funds are being diverted for ordinary running expenses of the Government, it would be found in the following excerpt from the same hearings. I refer to page 281 in the hearings:

> Question. Do you believe that sum of $830,000 (spent on the Naval Academy) should have been included in the appropriation bill last year?
> Answer. Yes, sir.
> Question. You think it should have been included in the Appropriation bill instead of being provided for from P. W. A. funds, where it improperly belongs. It is strictly a Navy appropriation bill item, is it not?
> Answer. It is strictly a Naval Academy matter.

These citations serve to give some idea of what really exists behind the stage pieces of the "emergency" budget. The only difference between the artificial settings of the administration technicians and those of the theatrical producers lies in the fact that the former conceal a scene of busy activity while the latter merely hide vacant lots and empty spaces.

While these questionable practices are tantamount to outright and willful deception of the public, it is a deplorable fact that they are probably technically legal. By no stretch of the imagination, however, would it be possible for even the most prejudiced "new dealer" to claim with accuracy and truth that these tactics are either morally honest or justifiable.

These obscuring and deceptive screens labeled "emergency", which have been placed before Government expenditures, are nullifying and destroying the effectiveness of our Federal Budget system.

I have mentioned the naval appropriation bill at some length, not because I criticize or disapprove the expenditures themselves, but simply as an illustrative example of what is going on in our Government today. The Navy Department is in no sense to blame. It is bound to receive the money it needs from whatever source may be designated by the administration. Actually, the Navy Department is only one of the many branches of the Government whose expenses have been distorted and disguised by a dishonest resort to bookkeeping legerdemain.

A report recently submitted to the Senate by the Treasury Department lists some astonishing uses which have been made of funds made available under the $3,500,000,000 Public Works Appropriation Act which became operative on June 16, 1933.

This document shows that without even the specified approval or knowledge of the Congress, although under the blanket provisions of the far-reaching act, the Executive branch of the Government created the Federal Alcohol Control Board and allocated a half million dollars for its administrative expenses.

One million dollars was spent to establish retail stores in the Tennessee Valley to sell electrical appliances in competition with private dealers.

The following list is illustrative of some of the other instances in which public works "emergency" funds have been used instead of applying for expense money in the regular way:

Office of Adviser on Foreign Trade, $350,000.

Immigration and Naturalization Service, $88,000.

United States Employment Service, $1,300,000.

Bureau of Labor Statistics, $10,000.

Office of Secretary of Labor, $16,000.

Office of the Secretary of the Treasury, administrative expenses, $1,141,000.

Public Health Service, $43,698.

This same report also shows that $830,000 of the "emergency" funds went for administrative expenses of the Oil Code.

When we take these plain facts into consideration, it at once becomes apparent that the talk of one budget for emergency and one for operating expenses is sheer absurdity. The result is utter confusion.

This practice of attempting to disguise normal Government expenditures by labeling them "emergency" is chiseling away at the very elements of enlightenment and honesty upon which all good government depends. This rank deception cannot be excused by saying that these expenditures were necessary. That is not the issue. The point is that the people have been grossly misled by the administration into believing that funds were being spent for emergency projects when the question of emergency was not even involved. The unpalatable fact remains that a dishonest pretext has been resorted to for the sake of concealing the true operating expense of the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN], 20 minutes.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, in the Seventy-third Congress I introduced House Concurrent Resolution 32, which was passed June 15, 1934. This resolution provided that the Federal Trade Commission conduct an investigation of the milk industry. The investigation was begun last July. Because of limitation of funds allowed by Congress the inquiry was confined to the State of Connecticut and to the Philadelphia milk sheds, comprising eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, and parts of New Jersey, Maryland, and West Virginia. My original resolution called for an appropriation of $150,000. With that sum it was anticipated the investigation could be carried on as a Nation-wide inquiry. Unfortunately the amount requested was cut down to $30,000 at the suggestion of the Bureau of the Budget. Had the sum I requested been granted, it would have been unnecessary for me to come before you today.

On April 5, 1935, the Federal Trade Commission filed its report with Congress. It is my hope that every Member of Congress, at least every Member in whose district there is a single dairy farmer or a milk consumer, has read that report; and, if not, I hope that you will within the next few days. I wish I knew of some way that would compel this report to be read by every consumer of milk and by every farmer in America. In my humble judgment, this would compel as nothing else the cooperation of the people with every milk producers' cooperative organization in America, to the end that their efforts on behalf of the farmer and the public may be strengthened through the activity of our Government. At this very moment I have information from a very high source in the industry that the Milk Trust is actively at work engaged invisibly in a well-planned drive to defeat any legislation attempted by this Congress which would bring about a further and complete investigation by the Government into the malpractices which today obtain in the milk industry.

But before I go into the detail of this report, I want to point out the importance of the dairy industry to this country. In the first place, milk is produced in each one of our 48 States. Secondly, more than 3,000,000 farmers are engaged in the production of milk and sell the product in one form or another. Thus more than half of this Nation's farmers are producers of milk. The majority of these 3,000,000 dairy farmers depend upon milk as their sole source of income.

Dairying is the most important agricultural enterprise in these United States! Almost 25 percent of all the money farmers receive in this country comes from milk. No other single crop or livestock product gives the farmer as much money as milk does.

But what has happened to the money the farmer receives? From 1929 to 1933 the farm prices of butterfat declined 58 percent. The farm price of butter declined 54 percent. The farm price of milk sold at wholesale by producers decreased 49 percent. And the purchasing power of dairy products fell from 92 percent in 1929 to 63 percent in 1933. Thus with a given volume of dairy products the farmer could buy in 1933 only 68 percent of the manufactured and industrial goods he could have bought in 1929. Do you get the picture? The purchasing power of the dairy farmer fell over 30 percent, while on the other hand, the profits of the distributors and processors continued outrageously higher and higher.

Mr. Chairman, the dairy situation today is no better than it was last year or the year before. Prices of dairy products have only increased slightly in the past year. But this increase has been offset by the higher prices which farmers must pay for feed and other things that go into producing milk. The result is that thousands of dairymen are being forced off their farms. While this is going on, the city milk supply is being endangered. It costs money to produce milk in accordance with modern health requirements. Our milk producers are not being paid enough to meet these increased costs.

From the report of the Federal Trade Commission I learn that while many farmers have been receiving low average prices for their milk and many of them have been reduced to financial distress, the majority of milk distributors have been prosperous all through the years of the depression, and in many instances have paid enormous dividends in addition to high salaries. In other words, no matter how little the farmer received for his milk, the trust has always made sure that it gets a huge slice with which to pay high salaries and healthy profits.

The distributor has been selling milk for all that the traffic could bear. Out of this he has been taking his chunk. And the little that was left went to the farmer. That is the way this milk business is run. That is the way it is in spite of the farmer cooperatives and other bargaining agencies designed to get for the producer a fairer share of the money paid by you and me for milk.

I have the highest respect for the cooperative milk marketing associations which for more than 15 years have been fighting the battles of the milk producer. These organizations represent the individual farmer in demanding that distributors pay dairymen fair prices. The cooperative milk marketing associations have done a wonderful piece of work in stabilizing marketing conditions and improving returns to farmers. But in spite of all that has been done, the battle for decent and fair returns for farmers has not been won. The milk producers cooperatives have not gone far enough, and as long as they have to deal with the present methods in which milk distributors do business, the hands of these cooperatives will remain tied.

At the present moment the only way that a farmer cooperative can sell milk to distributors is by playing ball with the trust. The distributors are on top of the pile and are in position to dictate to each and every farmer. The Federal Trade Commission's report shows how the trust first dictates the price of milk sold the consumer, then, after counting on a healthy margin for itself, sets the price to be paid the farmer. Because of the perishable nature of his product, the milk producer is powerless to do anything to correct the situation. The investigation disclosed that farmers who protested against the action of their cooperative or of their distributors often found themselves without a market for their milk. The investigation also showed that in some instances directors of cooperative milk producers' associations were favored as against other members of the organization.

Mr. Chairman, the milk distributors and dairy-products manufacturers have been hi-jacking both the farmer and the consumer in spite of our Federal laws against price fixing. The investigation developed beyond a shadow of doubt that the Dairy Trust interests have been acting together in fixing prices and in eliminating competition.

Ice-cream manufacturers in Pennsylvania were found by the investigation to have agreed on prices. Concrete evidence of this was found in a letter from Mr. Harry Williams, Jr., treasurer of the United States Dairy Products Corporation, to W. J. Kennedy, president of W. J. Kennedy Dairy Co., of Detroit, Mich., a subsidiary of the United States Dairy Products Corporation. This letter was dated June 28, 1934, and reads in part as follows:

> You will probably be interested to learn, in the event that you have not already been advised, that shortly after Walter assumed the "reins" of management he tackled the Philadelphia ice-cream price situation by personally interviewing the operating officials of the Abbott, Supple, and Breyer Cos. in Philadelphia, and as a result thereof succeeded in having a meeting called for the consideration thereof last Tuesday. This meeting was held as arranged and resulted in an increase from 84 cents per gallon to 92 cents per gallon, to be effective July 1. While Walter was disappointed that he did not get the price restored to $1, at the same time he stated that the feeling prevailing among the competitors as a result of this get-together meeting has been greatly improved, and he is hopeful that it will result in further benefits to our future operations.

I wish to explain that the "Walter" referred to in this letter was Walter Justin, who was elected executive vice president of the United States Dairy Products Corporation on June 6, 1934, with the responsibilities and duties of president, the office of president being vacant at that time.

Price fixing and elimination of competition in the dairy industry are quite common practices. The Federal Trade Commission in its investigation found that a subsidiary of a large distributor operating in Philadelphia was a party to an agreement between and among the dealers of Norfolk, Va., eliminating competition in bidding on supplies for the Naval and Marine Hospitals. The following excerpt is taken from a letter found in the files of a large distributor in Philadelphia which owns and operates subsidiaries in other milk sales areas. I quote:

> Mr. Halstead does not like to sign the second clause in the supplementary. He is afraid that this clause might at sometime give us trouble, as it refers to the Naval Hospital and Marine Hospital and to the spread of 15 cents per gallon to be given us on the sale of milk to these Government agencies. While he expects to carry this out without question as we agreed, he does not think it advisable to place same in writing, in view of the fact that if the Government should ever find out that any agreement or understanding had been made to control the price of milk furnished them they would bar us from the Government agencies in the future and possibly cause us other trouble.

Mr. Chairman, this excerpt which I have just read shows conclusively that even the Government hospitals cannot get a chance or even a fair deal from the Milk Trust.

The Federal Trade Commission found evidence of a hard and fast agreement between and among the milk distributors in Detroit. Let me read you another letter written by W. J. Kennedy, president of the Kennedy Dairy Co., of Detroit, a subsidiary of the United States Dairy Products Corporation. The letter was found in the files of the United States Dairy Products Corporation and was written April 20, 1932. Mr. Kennedy wrote:

> For the past week I have done hardly anything except try to stabilize the milk prices. I took it upon myself to call all the dealers of Detroit together at a special meeting at the Statler Hotel last Friday. I am pleased to say that every dealer in Detroit was present with the exception of the National and the Borden, who I asked not to attend this meeting.
> I wanted to see what could be done with the Independent group first. * * *
>
> When I went into this meeting, I drew up an agreement, as per the attached copy, and toward the finish of the meeting I asked each man to sign it. But before signing it I wanted them to read it very carefully as I did not want any distributor to sign this agreement without he absolutely intended to carry it out to the letter, so I am pleased to say that each and every man signed up to start the new program this morning, Tuesday, April 19.
> I then called a meeting for the National and Borden for Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, and they were more than pleased with the outcome. I then demanded from them that they absolutely agree not to put on any stores for a week while we were trying to put over this program. Our mutual friend Ebling, a director of the National Dairy Corporation, was so much impressed with what had been done with the other dealers that he wanted to take a copy of the agreement down to McInnerny, president of the National Dairy Products Corporation, as he was leaving on Monday for a National directors' meeting in New York.

By way of explanation, I wish to say that the agreement referred to in the excerpts from Mr. Kennedy's letter, which I have just read, was signed by individuals representing 25 distributors in which they agreed that they would keep up the prices to stores and prices to the public. Ladies and gentlemen of the House, this certainly shows the intolerable conditions existing in the Detroit milkshed. I further point out that only by mere chance did the Commission discover evidence of price fixing and throttling of competition in milksheds other than Philadelphia and Connecticut where the investigation was centered.

Mr. Chairman, we often hear the charge made that milk and dairy products are in the hands of a trust and monopoly. Let us look at the picture. Take the National Dairy Products Corporation. This is a holding company incorporated under the laws of Delaware in 1923. Since its organization the National Dairy Products Corporation has acquired the most profitable independent milk distributing companies. One by one it has picked them off until today the National Dairy Products Corporation is the largest distributor of milk and dairy products in the world. Since its organization this corporation has acquired, either through acquisition of capital stock or of physical assets, 194 separate corporations which, with their subsidiaries, represent 331 separate units. Practically all of these holdings were obtained by the exchange of stock of National Dairy Products Corporation. Little, if any, cash was ever paid. By a process of consolidation and elimination, National Dairy Products Corporation, at the end of 1933, consisted of 144 separate corporations. This huge corporation distributes milk, cream, and ice cream in 30 States and Cuba. It sells cheese and butter in every State in the Union and in the Dominion of Canada.

The Federal Trade Commission investigation showed that the National Dairy Products Corporation came into Connecticut in 1928, and during 1928, 1929, and 1930 acquired the two largest milk dealers in Hartford and two large dealers in New Haven, paying for them with paper only. The National Dairy Products Corporation brought no money into Connecticut. True to its policy, the corporation bought what were among the largest and most efficient independent and home-owned milk companies in the territory. Through these four milk companies National Dairies distributes approximately 40 percent of the milk sold in Hartford and 30 percent of the milk sold in New Haven.

Let us look into the affairs of another big milk company, the Borden Co. This is another holding company. In making acquisitions the Borden Co. acquired either the capital stock or properties and assets of more than 100 independent companies which have been reorganized and consolidated into approximately 60 operating companies.

In Connecticut the Borden Co. acquired two milk companies in Bridgeport and Norwalk and now controls the distribution of 33.5 percent of the milk sold in Bridgeport.

Since National Dairies went into Connecticut, the Federal Trade Commission has found that they have paid farmers per quart for all milk regardless of use, less than the average prices paid by the independent distributors.

The Federal Trade Commission's investigation shows that the companies have engaged in every questionable practice.

Mr. Chairman, the Commission has uncovered a story of coercion and threat which put the best of such stories to shame. The Farmers' Cooperative Dairies, Inc., was organized in Connecticut by a group of farmers to process and market their own milk. This new producers' cooperative had a contract with Hotel Garde at Hartford to supply it with milk and cream. The Garde Hotel is owned by the Travelers Insurance Co., of Hartford, one of the largest and best insurance companies in the world.

The Federal Trade Commission's files of the investigation disclose that Mr. Harris, manager of the Garde Hotel, told John Rankl, manager of the Farmers' Cooperative Dairies, that the National Dairy Products Corporation threatened to withdraw its insurance business from the Travelers' Insurance Co. if the Hotel Garde did not stop buying from the Farmers' Cooperative and resume buying its milk and cream requirements from R. G. Miller & Co., a subsidiary of National Dairies. Needless to say, the Travelers' Insurance Co., faced with the threat of losing the business, including group insurance of so large and powerful an organization as the National Dairy Products Corporation, stopped business with the small group of farmers who were struggling for their existence.

I wish I had the time available to tell you of the many other ways in which the farmers of this country are being deprived of what is rightfully theirs. You would hear the story of how artificial milk surpluses are created by the trust through the importation of milk and cream from distant producing areas in order to depress prices to local producers. You would learn how milk producers are cheated in their weights and butterfat tests; how farmers have to pay milk station and hauling charges which, as a side-line business, nets certain distributors handsome returns in excess of actual costs. All of these practices and more are revealed in the Federal Trade Commission's report. May I say quite frankly that this report is so striking, so startling, that it reads like a novel. Those of you who have the interests of the farmer and the milk consumer at heart would do well to read this report.

Mr. Chairman, a while ago I mentioned the fact that thousands of dairymen are being driven off their farms because of conditions within the industry. I pointed out that while the price of milk sold by farmers has been declining, the milk distributors have always made sure of getting their slice, and the price to the consumer has remained at a constantly high level.

During all of the depression years the milk distributors of the United States have been living in their own land of plenty. During these same depression years our milk producers have been driven to the wall of despair—to live in want and poverty. And during these same depression years we find that housewives in our cities—millions of them—have been unable to buy fresh milk for their children because the price has been too high. And this during a period when farmers were practically giving their milk away to the trust.

Mr. Chairman, there is something radically wrong with the present system under which our dairy industry operates. When a product produced by 3,000,000 farmers is literally kept from tens of millions of men and women and children in our cities because of practices in a man-made distribution system which benefits but a small group of operators, the situation should become one of wide-spread public concern.

The investigation developed facts showing that milk distributors have been generally prosperous. Their officers have received generous salaries and most of the dealers have paid dividends to their stockholders regularly. The president of the National Dairy Products Corporation receives in 1 year a salary which I know is not equaled by what is earned in a year by 100 average milk producers combined. In 1931 the National Dairies president received a salary of $187,947. In 1932 he received $171,099. In 1933 and 1934 he received $108,000 each year.

It was found that in 1933 that officers of the National Dairies and subsidiary companies, not including the president, received salaries ranging from $10,000 a year to $75,000 a year. In 1934 officers of the National Dairies and subsidiary companies, not including the president, received salaries ranging from $11,250 a year to $60,100 a year.

The Borden Co. paid its president $108,030 in salary in 1931. In 1932 he received $108,350, and in 1933 he received $100,000. In 1931 other officers of the Borden Co. received salaries ranging from $30,000 to $107,225 per year, and in 1932 officers' salaries, including the president, ranged from $20,000 to $63,200 per year.

But high salaries alone do not tell the story. In addition to the enormous salaries paid officials of subsidiary operating companies the investigation has revealed that these subsidiaries have paid the parent company handsome dividends. For example, the General Ice Cream Co., the subholding company operating National Dairy plants and subsidiary milk companies in Connecticut and other New England States paid the National Dairy Products Corporation $10,030,396.50 in dividends during the last 6 years.

This is but one of the 144 separate units of the National Dairy Trust.

The National Dairy Products Corporation operates two subsidiaries in Philadelphia. These are the Supplee-Wills-Jones Milk Co. and the Breyer Ice Cream Co. From these two subsidiaries National Dairies collected a total of $27,453,337.50 in dividends during the last 6 years.

Mr. Chairman, all of these enormous earnings were made and huge salaries and large dividends were paid by milk distributors during depression years while thousands of farmers have gone broke, and while millions of people in our cities could not obtain milk because the price was too high.

And yet, when we talk about improving these conditions for the benefit of both the milk farmer and the milk consumer, and when we take steps in that direction we see the leaders of the vicious Dairy Trust standing on the housetops shouting their condemnations against our efforts to stop these abuses and protect the farmer and the people.

Right now the various manufacturer and distributor interests in the dairy industry have ganged up against the farmer and against the consumer. Witness the activities of the Dairy Industry Committee in its drive against any and all measures which are designed to give the milk producer and the milk consumer a better break than they have had in the past. The Dairy Industry Committee, Mr. Speaker, represents six national trade associations comprised of distributors of fluid milk, and manufacturers and processors of butter, ice cream, cheese, evaporated milk, and powdered milk. All of these distributors and processors—members of the Dairy Industry Committee—buy their milk from farmers and sell either directly or indirectly to the consumer. What chance has an individual milk producer or an individual milk consumer to stand up against such powerful interests? That is why the milk distributors and the milk processors are in the saddle. That is why they are riding high, wide, and handsome, fearless of the farmer, fearless of the consumer, and disrespectful and fearless of the law.

Mr. Chairman, milk is the most important article of food consumed by human beings. Babes, invalids, the poor, and all classes of people are largely dependent upon milk. It has a greater nutritive value than steak and various other articles of food which bring larger prices on the market. It is necessary and vital that the consumers obtain milk at a price that the poorest can afford to pay in order that those who need it most may have this life-giving fluid unstintingly. The farmer, who produces and ships to the urban centers this necessary commodity, is doing society a great service and should be encouraged. He cannot stay in this business at a loss and if the Members of this Congress will scrutinize closely the report of the Federal Trade Commission you will find that his profit, if any, is so infinitesimal as to be unworthy of the name of profit. While on the other hand the distributors are waxing rich. The Federal Trade Commission has been able to investigate only in two milksheds. The result of their investigations show conclusively that there should be a Nation-wide survey so that the next session of this Congress may have a composite picture of this important industry not limited to two milksheds in the same section of the country but covering milksheds in every section of our land.

Was the investigation worth while? Did the Congress act wisely in passing the resolution calling for the investigation? Did the money spent by the Federal Trade Commission bring any immediate results? Was the time spent in this investigation thus far of any benefit? The answer to each and every one of these questions is emphatically "Yes." Time will not permit entering into many of the details which are in the report, but let me give you just one, only one, of the many accomplishments and results emanating from this meager investigation.

The Federal Trade Commission discovered in the year of 1934 alone, without regard for what happened in all the years before and for what is happening today, in the Connecticut and Philadelphia markets—not in all the other markets of the country; just these two—that the milk distributors had underpaid the poor and defenseless farmers $600,000 by a system of cheating. If the $30,000 we paid out for this investigation did nothing else, it at least returned to farmers a 2,000-percent dividend. Within 24 hours, in my State of Connecticut, after this information was brought out, the Connecticut State Milk Control Board issued orders calling upon distributors to return the money to the farmers or suffer punishment through the courts. They even went so far as to publish the names of those offending distributing companies, so that everybody might know them. I expect that if this investigation is permitted to go on, and if the Milk Trust lobby is not able to crush the further investigation through any influence it may bring to bear upon Congress, not only will all the other farmers of the Nation be returned moneys which undoubtedly they have been cheated out of but all the other malpractices will be uncovered and the legislation necessary to correct the many, many evils which are still existing in the dairy industry will be enacted.

It would be calamitous indeed if the investigation stops at this point. To this end I am preparing and will shortly introduce a resolution calling for an appropriation sufficient to enable the Federal Trade Commission to continue its good work and to make a close and rigid investigation into the milk industry on a Nation-wide scale. It is necessary and vital that this course be pursued, as I say to you in all seriousness that from the standpoint of the producer the milk industry is prostrate and practically destroyed. The farmer cannot be expected to produce milk and supply it to the dwellers in the cities at a loss or at the insignificant profit which he is now receiving.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I join with the ranking minority member to pay my respects to the genial chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY], to thank him and also the majority members generally for the courtesies they extended to us. Throughout the hearings every possible courtesy was extended to the minority group. I believe the chairman of the subcommittee did a good job. He was conscientious and painstaking, and I have the highest regard for him. He deserves the commendation of the House. [Applause.]

Yesterday I ventured to supply for the gentleman from Iowa figures showing the amount we were spending for maintenance as compared with Japan and Great Britain, which I then felt, and now believe definitely reflect the cause for the greater amount spent in America for maintenance of the Navy as compared with Great Britain and Japan. I cite these figures by way of comparison: The pay in the United States Navy of a chief petty officer is $126 per month. The pay of a man in a similar grade in Great Britain is $58.81 a month, and the pay for a man in a similar position in Japan is $15.79.

The pay of a first-class seaman in America is $54 a month, in Great Britain it is $27.89 a month, and in Japan it is $3.73 a month.

A second-class seaman in the United States Navy receives $36 a month, in Great Britain $19.10 a month, in Japan $3.80.

In other words, in America we are paying to our second-class seamen practically 12 times the amount paid to second-class seamen in Japan, and more than 14 times as much to our first-class seamen. These figures definitely bear out the assertion which I made yesterday that the maintenance cost of the Navy of America reflects in a very large degree the salaries we are paying our enlisted personnel. This increase is further reflected, however, in the matter of the cost of shipbuilding. I tried to secure authentic figures as to the construction costs per ton in the United States, Great Britain, and Japan. The Naval Intelligence Department could not give them to me with a degree of accuracy which would permit of their being used here today. I shall direct the attention of the House, however, to an item which I believe can be used as the basis for a reasonable comparison. The bids on the steamship President Wilson, made by firms in the United States, Great Britain, and Japan afford this very interesting comparison: The per ton bid in the United States was $364.29, in Japan $141.38, in Great Britain $288.17. On this basis the cost of shipbuilding in America is 158 percent greater than in Japan.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. Was the ship built in Japan?

Mr. DITTER. No; the ship was not built in Japan.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DITTER. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. I was interested in what the gentleman said regarding the pay of the personnel of the Navy. On pages 24 and 25 of the report is set out in detail the cost of pay, subsistence, transportation, maintenance, and a great variety of other items. The total appropriation recommended in the bill for these items is $185,000,000.

If we paid our personnel nothing, allowed nothing for subsistence, nothing for transportation, and all these items, the bill would still carry an appropriation of $282,000,000, which is $81,000,000 more than Japan spent for her Navy in 1934.

Mr. DITTER. Of course, the gentleman has not taken into consideration the difference in the cost of ship construction which I have just mentioned and which is an important factor in the present appropriation bill.

Answering the gentleman further, his premise is so fanciful, imagining that we are running a charitable institution in the Naval Establishment, that I really believe he is not serious in presenting his argument.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania gave us the idea that the cost of pay and subsistence of the enlisted personnel is what brought up these totals in the amount carried in this bill for the next year. I pointed out that if we did not have to pay anything for personnel, or subsistence, we would still be appropriating $81,000,000 more for our Navy for next year than Japan spent on her navy in 1934.

Mr. DITTER. But the gentleman certainly should recognize that the increase is not reflected entirely in this item. It is reflected also in the cost of ship construction, in the cost of repairs, and in every one of the items which go into the maintenance of the Navy.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman undertook to account for the increase by citing differences in rates of pay in the different countries.

Mr. DITTER. I used those only as examples.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman undertook to show that it was cheaper to build ships in Japan than in this country, cited bids on the steamship President Wilson, and then said that the ship was not built in Japan.

Mr. DITTER. The gentleman certainly cannot be using that as an argument that we should close our shipyards and have our ships built in Japan, is he?

Mr. BIERMANN. Not at all. I am arguing now along the line that we are spending $457,000,000 a year to defend ourselves against Japan; and I still would like to direct the question to the gentleman from Pennsylvania or to any other member of the committee: Against whom are we preparing and against whom are we going to spend these billions and billions of dollars? Will the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. DITTER. First, let me counter with this suggestion to the gentleman: In view of his attitude, and in view of the number of requests which I have for appointments to the Naval Academy, I do wish that he would transfer to me the appointment privileges which are his as a Member of Congress.

Certainly, in view of the present attitude of the gentleman, he would not want to appoint any men to Annapolis. I have good use for these privileges and would certainly be happy to build up the appointments at Annapolis with men who I believe would stand for a navy second to none and such a navy as the committee supports in connection with this present program.

The fanciful enemy the gentleman is trying to bring to our attention now is something I cannot answer. I can only refer him to the very able declaration made by the chairman of the committee when he said very positively that we were not in any way attempting to create in the mind of anyone the fear of an enemy, but we do feel a preparedness program is the best protection. [Applause.]

Mr. DARROW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DARROW. In making these comparisons with Japan, is it not fair to take into consideration the London Treaty which gave Japan 3 to our 5 ships, with their navy not as large? Consequently, they would not have as many ships or as much expense in keeping them up to treaty strength.

Mr. DITTER. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion. He will probably concur in the further observation that just recently Japan definitely repudiated or at least served notice that she would no longer be bound by the treaty which she had previously entered into, and as of 1936 she would no longer consider herself obligated under the agreement.

Mr. BIERMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BIERMANN. There are 5,000 miles of ocean separating Japan from our western coast. Does the gentleman imagine if the Japanese fleet were twice the size of ours that Japan could land hostile forces on our western coast?

Mr. DITTER. May I answer the gentleman by saying that he as a member of the majority should direct an inquiry of that kind to the Secretary of the Navy. I do not presume to know what the purposes of the Navy Department are with reference to the operations of the fleet. I think that is a matter of administrative policy. I would not presume to imagine just why the present administration feels that the operation should be in the Pacific, or what potential danger faces America in the Pacific or elsewhere.

Mr. BIERMANN. Then the gentleman believes this Congress should vote whatever appropriation the Secretary of the Navy asks?

Mr. DITTER. I believe this Congress should vote every dollar that is necessary to provide a Navy that is second to none for the adequate defense of America. [Applause.]

Mr. BIERMANN. If the gentleman proceeds on that theory right along, he will find himself voting more and more appropriations for the Navy as long as he is in this body. We are voting half a billion dollars this year, and in a few years I predict the Navy will be wanting a billion dollars.

Mr. DITTER. I do not care to enter into an argument with respect to policy, but may I just give the gentleman this further information which I believe is pertinent. I wish the gentleman would study the hearings and examine the character of food provided for the enlisted personnel of the Navy of the United States. I wish he would submit that to somebody who might be qualified to pass upon the subject of food values. A comparison of the ration components of Japan, Great Britain, and the United States discloses some interesting facts.

An estimate of cost discloses that the price in this country is estimated at 45 cents; in Japan, where the menu is largely made up of fish and rice, the cost is 15 cents; in other words, one-third of ours; and in Great Britain the cost of 26 cents.

May I make the further suggestion to the gentleman that he examine the bill and ascertain the amount that is being provided for the American enlisted man for welfare and recreational activities, none of which are provided for by Japan. I wish he would look into the amount that we provide for hospitalization and medical service, and then try from that compendium that he quoted from yesterday, to secure a figure as to what Japan is doing with reference to the care of its enlisted personnel; comparing those figures with the cost of the care that the United States provides for its enlisted personnel. Recreation, welfare, and the well-being of the American seamen were considered by those of us who support this present bill. We are willing to pay the price in order to provide the privileges for the American seamen, ignored entirely by Japan in its program.

Mr. Chairman, I want to spend a little of my remaining time to make some observations on the new-deal Navy policy. We have a new-deal Navy procedure. I want to give encouragement to the gentleman who has been so much concerned about lotteries and the contribution they may make to the well-being of America. May I say to the gentleman that he should be one of the most encouraged Members of the House today. In season and out of season, he has declared with consistency his belief in a lottery program. I honor him in his opinion. I feel he has a right to that opinion. I may not agree with him, but he is to be admired for his persistency.

I want to call his attention to the fact, however, that the Navy Department has already adopted that program. In the past we let contracts for naval construction on the basis of the most responsible and lowest bidder receiving the award. We have inaugurated an entirely new policy. Instead of doing this in the regular order, the Department now gathers together the individuals who desire to submit Navy bids. We put their names in a hat, or else their names are placed in capsules. Then, on an appointed day, we have a great sweepstakes affair in the Navy Department. Havre de Grace, Bowie, and all the other racing places have nothing on what the scenes at the Navy Department are on that day. I can just imagine the scene down there as the contract jockeys bring out their horses to run in the race to see whether or not they are going to get the award of a fat, juicy contract as a result of pulling names out of a hat.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KENNEY. Does the gentleman know that the Kingdom of Italy raises money by lottery for the support of its Navy?

Mr. DITTER. I tried to indicate to my genial friend from New Jersey that I was in no way taking exception to the program he is sponsoring. I rather wanted to encourage him; that under this new deal there was a hope of his program being adopted, in view of the fact the Navy Department has already taken it over, body and soul. We were once told that the money changers were to be driven out of the temple, but we were not told that the contract chance artists were to be invited to take their place.

Mr. KENNEY. I thank the gentleman, and will the gentleman yield to me to submit a unanimous consent request to insert in the RECORD the revenues for her navy derived by Italy through lotteries, as well as the revenue of some of the other countries from lotteries?

Mr. DITTER. I should not care to have that inserted at this point. I feel confident that if the gentleman will address his request to my genial friend, the chairman of the committee, in due course and at its proper place, he will find he can have it inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. KENNEY. May I say to the gentleman there is no time remaining.

Mr. DITTER. The gentleman well knows that in due season, when we go back into the House, he can address a request to the Speaker to have the matter inserted as an extension of his remarks.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I shall be happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HARLAN. The situation the gentleman is describing is due to the fact that under the new industrial picture that we now have, the bids are all approximately the same and all come from firms that are equally reliable.

Mr. DITTER. As to the first premise, I must agree with the gentleman. As to the second premise, I have no knowledge whether that premise is correct or not.

I will agree with the gentleman that uniformity of the bids results from the N. R. A. program, and as has been testified in the hearings, is the direct result of previous bids being placed or filed with code authorities, so that those bids may be either uniformly high, as they are in many instances, or else a similarity exists with regard to all of them. Competition is destroyed and monopolies and exorbitant prices result.

Mr. HARLAN. In view of that situation and assuming that such a condition exists, over which the Navy has no control, of course, how would the gentleman suggest that the Navy select one contractor over another?

Mr. DITTER. I should suppose that those characteristics of stability which have been evidenced in times past as a result of the contractual relationship existing between the Government and certain bidders would appear as to reputation and reliability and prompt those in authority to award the contracts on the basis of worth and value rather than adopt this hit-or-miss policy, which is the direct result of the N. R. A. and the new-deal program.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I have only 5 minutes. If I have a moment at the end of my remarks, I shall be pleased to yield. I want to point out just one or two things that I believe are pertinent. This is the new-deal method of awarding contracts and saving the taxpayers' money. It is the new-deal theory of economy in government. Let me quote from the hearings:

Mr. CARY. Now, what would happen if a number of concerns bidding on an article got together and filed with the code authority excessively high prices, and then came to your Department and they all had the same bid, and it was an excessively high bid? What would you do then?

Mr. DITTER. That is exactly the line of inquiry that I was going to follow, Mr. Chairman.

Admiral PEOPLES. My dear Mr. Chairman, I want to say this, that the principle, the theory upon which the code system was based, was to prevent unfair and cutthroat competition, to prevent unfair practices, and so forth.

Mr. DITTER. I am glad that you used the word "theory" there.

Admiral PEOPLES. And I lean the other way, and think that industry makes a mistake when it does not provide for the possibility of having competition as between themselves.

I believe that there should be certain restrictions; I believe that there should be a certain minimum wage per hour, and a certain maximum number of hours of work per week, and then, all in between that, leave it up to the initiative, the facilities of the firm to get the business. In other words, cause competition.

Mr. McLEOD. You have seen competitive bidding, also, in your experience? In other words, you have witnessed both during your term of experience in this capacity?

Admiral PEOPLES. I think that I can very properly answer your question by saying that, in my opinion, I believe lower prices would have been obtained.

Mr. McLEOD. And money would have been saved to the Government thereby, had it not been for these codes; is that correct?

Admiral PEOPLES. That naturally follows.

Mr. McLEOD. The money would have been saved to the Government; is that correct?

Admiral PEOPLES. That naturally follows.

* * * * * * *

Mr. DITTER. Would you not say that the operation of the steel-furniture group tended to that?

Admiral PEOPLES. I think that under the system of filed prices at that time they were trying to take advantage, but it did not result that way.

Mr. DITTER. Just to get back again to my question, does not competition tend to create monopoly? The fewer the competitors there are, that must of necessity mean that the field is limited; and the narrower the field the greater the opportunity of absolute control, which is monopoly. Is not that true?

Admiral PEOPLES. As a general proposition.

* * * * * * *

Mr. DITTER. Now, with respect to those ships building in navy yards, in those instances the materials, as I understand it, were purchased from certain contractors, steel contractors and other contractors.

Admiral LAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. DITTER. Plates would be bought from certain steel mills.

Admiral LAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. DITTER. And other materials going into the construction of ships.

Admiral LAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. DITTER. Now, will you tell us what policy was followed by the Navy with respect to the selection of the companies to whom those contracts for materials were let?

Admiral LAND. You are talking about navy-yard ships now, are you not?

Mr. DITTER. Yes.

Admiral LAND. In the selection of them, it was a matter of wide-open competition—no selection.

Mr. DITTER. There was bidding, was there not?

Admiral LAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. DITTER. When the codes first went into effect, they were quite rigid with regard to the cost of those particular pieces of steel, but they were all according to specifications.

Admiral LAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. DITTER. And there was a certain degree of rigidity with regard to price, was there not?

Admiral LAND. I think that is true.

Mr. DITTER. Even to the extent that there prevailed in many instances a uniform price in the bids as they were made. Is that true?

Admiral LAND. I do not know about the uniformity, although I think that is correct; but in the making of our contracts, they were awarded by taking names out of a hat.

Mr. DITTER. By taking them out of capsules.

Admiral LAND. That is a new name.

Mr. DITTER. They were taken out of capsules, hats, or they were drawn in some other way, were they not?

Admiral LAND. I believe that is correct.

Mr. DITTER. It is a fact that with respect to the letting of contracts for plates and other materials going into the navy-yard shipbuilding program under the P. W. A., it was a matter of lottery or chance with respect to the awarding of the contracts.

Admiral LAND. That has been the case in many instances; yes, sir.

Mr. DITTER. It is also a fact that in practically all cases, or in a large number of cases, the estimated prices for pieces of steel or steel plate were exactly the same in 1933, particularly, and, also, in a part of 1934. Is that true?

Admiral LAND. That is my general understanding; yes, sir.

Mr. DITTER. Four, five, six, or more companies used prices that were exactly the same. Is that correct?

Admiral LAND. On ordinary steel, I think that is correct.

Mr. DITTER. Now, with respect to those items on which there might be absolute uniformity of price, after this codification procedure that you have just referred to, how is an award made to bidders if more than one bidder is on exactly the same price level?

Admiral PEOPLES. If the prices are all uniform, the award is made by lot publicly drawn.

Mr. THOM. Now, let me state your position as I see it. First of all, you are opposed to codes. Now, I do not propose to discuss them. Let us eliminate them. Secondly, if, having codes, they produce equivalent prices, then I think the Army and the Navy are perfectly justified in pulling the bids from a hat and drawing out, for their own protection, the names of the successful bidders; because otherwise, if the bids were equivalent, the man that awarded that contract would be under suspicion and would be charged with all kinds of wrongdoing, and his only defense is to put the bids in a hat and proceed to draw.

Now, we come to the second situation, in which you say that the drawing process has resulted in two companies getting most of the awards of contracts for steel plates, and that necessarily raises the question whether the scheme of putting the bids in a hat and drawing out the successful bids has been conducted with fairness and equality. That is where your argument is directed, and that is the eventual conclusion of it.

Mr. DITTER. That is correct; and I offer this further observation: Whether, if it has to be done by drawing from hats, it would not be better, under the motive of P. W. A., to spread those contracts over larger areas and provide larger opportunities for employment, rather than centering them in one district under this lottery scheme.

Mr. THOM. That is a perfectly fair question.

Mr. DITTER. Now, let us assume—and, understand, I emphatically say that I have no knowledge, no intimation, that the thing has not been done absolutely honest, and I am not imputing in any way that it has not been honest, for I have a high regard for the Secretary of the Navy, and Admiral Peoples impresses me very highly—but supposing, Mr. THOM, that we have this equality of bidding, and instead of pulling the bids out of a hat, you have a steel concern in your State, and I have a steel concern in my State, and Mr. CARY has one in his State, would not we probably carry out the purposes of P. W. A. and these emergency allotments to provide employment better by having some go into your State, some into Mr. CARY's State, some into Mr. McLEOD's State, and some into my State, rather than presenting the possibility of luck providing all to go into Mr. CARY's State?

I wonder whether the House knows that 29 percent of the allotments requested as of February 27, 1935, by the Secretary of the Navy for emergency funds, are for projects outside the United States.

It was my understanding, and I have heard it repeatedly stated, that these emergency funds were to provide for reemployment here in America. I ask the Membership of the House to what extent reemployment is going to be provided by the expenditure of vast sums of money in Hawaii and Cuba and Puerto Rico and Guam and Alaska. Twenty-nine percent of the amount requested by the Secretary of the Navy is to go overseas. We have spent of P. W. A. money, we have spent of N. R. A. money, such a sum, in addition to the regular appropriation, that I think my distinguished friend the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN], if he really got into the figures, would probably be prostrate as a result of the examination.

Thirty-one million seven hundred seventy-one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars has been requested by Mr. Swanson of P. W. A. money for projects in Hawaii, the Canal Zone, Panama, Alaska, Samoa, Guam, and Cuba, and if you think that $31,000,000 spent over there is going to give us reemployment, I cannot agree with you.

I wish you would go into these hearings and find the admissions that have been made in these hearings on the result of the N. R. A. program. I again refer my friend on the question of costs to what N. R. A. means to the Navy in this respect—how much our equipment costs, how much our food costs, how much our construction costs have been increased over the amounts which would have been estimated had it not been for these fantastic schemes of your administration to raise prices.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman voted for the N. R. A. bill, did he not?

Mr. DITTER. I voted for it? I did not.

Twenty percent in construction, 18 percent in equipment, 15 percent in foodstuffs, is the percentage, with the admission throughout the record of the hearings that they can be definitely attributable to codes and other programs of a fanciful character to create a spirit and a philosophy of scarcity in this land of plenty.

Mr. BIERMANN. But the increase in the appropriations for next year over this year is more than 60 percent.

Mr. DITTER. Well, I suppose they figure down there that the N. R. A. and the silver program and a lot of the other "brain trust" programs are going to bring about more increases.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 8 additional minutes.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I quote further from the hearings on the subject of codes as they affect the maintenance costs of the Navy and thus have a double barreled effect on the pocketbook of the American people:

Mr. McLEOD. Is the cause of the increase in the cost of food due to the increased number of men?

Captain SCHOFIELD. No; to the increase in the unit price of food.

Mr. McLEOD. Would you say that the increase in the price of food is due to the codes?

Captain SCHOFIELD. Well, I would not be able to say what the price is due to, but the rising prices of food will probably be more fully explained when we come to the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, they have to do more with those things, but it was contemplated in this and, I understand, other appropriations that the prices of the commodities would be higher in 1936 than they were in 1935.

Mr. McLEOD. When this budget was submitted to you by the various departments under your jurisdiction, and this increase in the cost of food and maintenance was included, what was your assumption that it was due to—the codes themselves?

Mr. CARY. You did not have to assume anything at all, did you?

Captain SCHOFIELD. No. Whatever it was due to, it would not affect my figures. I simply expected that there would be an increase.

Mr. McLEOD. But you did not form any opinion as to what the increase would be due to?

Captain SCHOFIELD. If I had formed an opinion, I would have said that it was due to the codes.

Mr. DITTER. Admiral, you were connected with this procurement division prior to the time of the codes, were you not?

Admiral PEOPLES. No, sir; commencing just about the same time.

Mr. DITTER. Did you not have some experience in the matter of Government purchases prior to that?

Admiral PEOPLES. Oh, yes; I have had experience for 30 years, sir, in purchasing for the Navy Department, particularly.

Mr. DITTER. Do you know whether or not the number of bidders supplying the various commodities bought by the Government has increased or decreased since the time that the codes have been put into operation?

Admiral PEOPLES. Frankly, Mr. Ditter, I have not noticed any difference. In other words, it has not been brought to my attention in any way whatever that there are fewer bidders under the codes than there were prior to that time. In fact, I think that in many respects it would show the other way. I know of the purchase of a lot of brass pipe for the Navy Department, where there were 78 tie bidders.

Mr. McLEOD. All equal?

Admiral Peoples. Yes, sir.

Mr. McLEOD. And that is due to the code?

Admiral PEOPLES. That is absolutely due to the code, to the system of filing open prices before the bidding.

Mr. McLEOD. Which is a phase of the question that you do not agree with—is that a fact?

Admiral PEOPLES. Exactly, sir.

Mr. McLEOD. The question of open-price bidding as provided in codes, therefore, would have a tendency to increase the prices rather than to decrease them, would it not?

Admiral PEOPLES. Mr. McLeod, the theory of it is that there is competition in advance of the opening of bids, the idea being that bidder A files a price of $1 a pound—that is the open price for him—and you come along as bidder B, and you say, "That fellow is going to bid $1, I will bid 90 cents"; and bidder C says, "I can underbid them, and make it 80 cents"; and bidder D will say, "I will make it 75 cents", and there we know the thing stops, and the lowest filed price then is 75 cents a pound, and then they all bid 75 cents.

Mr. McLEOD. And if this were not done, there might be a bid below 75 cents?

Admiral PEOPLES. Yes.

Mr. McLEOD. That none of the other bidders would know about?

Admiral PEOPLES. I will take the closed method.

The program of the Government to bring the Navy up to treaty strength has received the general approval of the country. Our people, however, continue hopeful that the international arms race may be terminated, and that all nations may refrain from resorting to war for the settlement of international disputes. America has done its part honestly and conscientiously in these laudable endeavors. Those who sponsored these endeavors deserve the commendation of all men. We have adhered to the spirit as well as the letter of the Kellogg Pact. We have endorsed the declaration by which the parties to that agreement condemned "recourse to war for the solution of international controversies and renounced it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another."

We have endeavored to translate the idealism of world peace into the realism of accomplishment. We have accepted the solemn assurances and covenants of other nations without reservation. We have evidenced our confidence in these covenants by specific and positive acts. Disappointment and disillusionment have been our portion. Upon the other nations rests the failure of the altruistic hopes of mankind for the limitation and the reduction of the armed forces of the world.

Hope for the peaceful adjustment of differences among the nations springs from the nobler endeavors of men and women throughout the world. It is the soul-cry of all people who have suffered from the ravages of war and who have paid an enormous tribute for the panoply of arms. Would that we might end this tribute! Would that we might forever hush this soul cry of despair and anguish! We are not surrendering our hopes for a discontinuance of competitive arms building. The goal toward which we will ever strive and toward which we hope the other nations of the world will turn again is that we may "beat our swords into plowshares, and our spears into pruning hooks; that nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall we learn war anymore." We still pray that fear and suspicion may be dispelled.

I believe we should strive to develop means of avoiding the use of death-dealing agencies with as much fervor as we employ in devising improved methods for carnage and destruction. But, in the light of present world movements, adequate preparation for defense is a primary obligation of our Government. We must ever be mindful of the fact that one of the most solemn obligations placed upon the Federal Government by the Constitution is "to provide for the common defense." Our Navy must always be the most important factor in our national preparedness program and in our defense plans. This does not contemplate a delight in resorting to the fiendish passions resulting from a participation in a struggle of arms. It does not mean that we approve of the atrocities of war or that we invite the somber shadows and mournful incidents growing out of carnage and battle.

Our present program is not founded upon an appeal to fear, nor upon the creation of prejudices, and certainly it is not founded upon the glorification of war or the chivalry of arms. Our purposes are not prompted by the propaganda of war lords or those who profit from human misery. We are still eager that the best efforts of men shall be directed to the enjoyment of the arts of peace.

We love peace, but not peace at any price. There is a peace more destructive of the manhood of living man than war is destructive of his body.—Jerrold.

There are interests by the sacrifice of which peace is too dearly purchased. One should never be at peace to the shame of his own soul, to the violation of his integrity or of his allegiance to God.—Chapin.

I subscribe whole-heartedly to this doctrine.

There is truth in the admonition given by Washington, "To be prepared for war is one of the most efficient ways of preserving peace." From the standpoint of defense, our naval forces must be adequate for our national needs. We endorse the declaration that our program should be "to maintain the Navy in sufficient strength to support the national policies and commerce, and guard the continental and overseas possessions of the United States." Failure to maintain a naval establishment of this character invites difficulties and threatens national safety and security. The maintenance of a greater force imposes an economic burden which cannot be justified. No one will deny that the justifiable strength must perforce depend upon world conditions, upon the comparative naval establishments of the other nations, and upon the attitude of other nations as expressed in their armament programs.

On December 29, 1934, Japan declared its intention of terminating the Naval Treaty of Washington. It is, therefore, a certainty that as of December 31, 1936, Japan will no longer be bound by the limitations provided for under the Washington agreement. Japan has already adopted a program and made the necessary appropriations to bring her naval establishment up to treaty strength in 1936. Great Britain has also inaugurated a program of naval construction which will insure its position on the seas. These nations have been joined by the other leading nations of the world in pursuing a policy of increased construction of naval armaments. We cannot ignore these evidences of activity. We dare not invite the disastrous consequences of unpreparedness. We have but one safe course to pursue, to maintain a Navy in conformity with treaty provisions.

Our national defense, however, depends not alone on battleships, cruisers, submarines, and aircraft. Men, more than materials, will determine the adequacy of our defense. Security is not primarily dependent upon the size of either our Army or our Navy. The strength of America rests upon the sturdiness of the character of her people. The strength of America is measured by the courage, the industry, the thrift, the honesty, the self-reliance, the loyalty and the devotion of her people; homely virtues which have always been the warp and woof of dependable American character. The strength of America depends upon a regard for her traditions, upon an appreciation of her accomplishments, and upon a love of her institutions.

We should not build units for the fleet and at the same time tear down fiber for character. It is inconsistent to expect adherence to peace pacts abroad and at the same time repudiate solemn pledges at home. It is impossible to develop national zeal and at the same time destroy individual initiative.

It is difficult to dispel suspicion among the nations and at the same time foster doubt and uncertainty among our own people. We have as much responsibility in providing for the sinews of character as we have in appropriating for the instruments of war. With the building of fleets let us build men. Let us reestablish an assurance that virtue is more worthy than depravity, that industry is more desirable than indolence, that ambition is more deserving than indifference, that thrift is more profitable than prodigality, and that self-reliance is more estimable than dependency.

Let us strive for a reincarnation of the spirit of the American pioneer and patriot; let us rededicate ourselves to the principles of constitutional government and depend upon the assurance which springs from a conviction that justice, morality, reason, and experience will continue to be the motivations of our national life. Supported by this spirit, our forces will be invincible and our security assured. [Applause.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 18 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, I am totally unable to account for the large attendance of Members at this sitting of the Committee this afternoon, except possibly upon the theory that it leaked out that I was going to make a speech. I had intended to keep it a secret. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER], who just preceded me, said a good many things with which I agree. He couched in very elegant words, beyond my power and ability to describe—and he was right about it—the feeling the great majority of the American people have for the other countries of the world, and he quoted from the Scriptures about beating the spears into pruning hooks and the swords into plowshares. I wish those eloquent words of his might get to all the nations of the world; but I am very much afraid that the other people of the world, the other governments, are going to see only the fact that we are making an appropriation of $457,000,000 for a Navy for the next year; that we are establishing a policy, as Admiral Standley said at the hearings, involving an expense of $558,000,000 in each and every year to keep up this Navy. And that we will in all probability appropriate for another year pretty nearly, if not quite, a billion dollars for the preparation for war.

Our friends on the committee and my other friends who do not quite agree with me say that it is a preparation for peace and security.

Now, I am sorry I have not anything—I am going to be frank about it—that I am going to be guilty of making a few general remarks and not be able to discuss the details of the bill in its technical aspect.

I think there are very few Members of the House—and this is no reflection on their intelligence and ability—there are very few who, when they come to vote on the bill tomorrow, are going to know much of anything about it.

As I say, I do not mean any reflection whatever on the very fine subcommittee headed by my friend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY]. I think they have done a splendid piece of work—only I do not agree with them that $457,000,000 at this time is necessary. I cannot see it, my friends. And I do not mean by that to criticize the committee for the fact that this bill and report were not available until a few minutes before the bill was called up the other day. I do not know whether the hearings were available or not. I did not try to get them, because it has been my experience that it is not of much use to read the hearings until you have the bill and report.

But there were nine hundred and more pages in the hearings. It was a monumental piece of work, and they did the work well.

I do not agree with my friend.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. DITTER. The gentleman will certainly admit that if the bill or the hearings were out long before the consideration of the measure that these "war lords"—to which he has referred—would have had a greater degree of opportunity of influencing the Members of the House than otherwise would be possible.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, I don't think so. I think that the munition makers, the steel manufacturers, the Army and the Navy know pretty much all about it. They were your witnesses called before your committee. I did not read the report, but, as I recall the list of witnesses, the only witnesses who appeared before the gentleman's committee were the rear admirals and the other naval officers, and various officers in the Navy Department, including the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Henry Roosevelt, and—oh, yes; there was another gentleman that the committee heard, who was the head of a manufacturing concern that manufactured jackets for propeller shafts. The committee heard him complain because his profits were being cut down by competition from the New York Government Navy Yard. You are not getting very far in taking the profits out of war when the committee does that.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. DITTER. We heard him because one of the gentleman's distinguished colleagues addressed a request to the chairman of the committee, and the courtesy existing between Members of the House would certainly require the chairman to grant his colleague's request. May I ask the gentleman this further question?

Mr. SISSON. And may I interrupt there to say that I do not intend any criticism of the chairman of the subcommittee or of the gentlemen on the subcommittee for hearing him. I think you ought to have heard him, only when the gentleman makes the statement that if all of these had been made available 2 or 3 weeks ago there would have been some enormous influence exerted by the munitions lobby, I do not agree with him.

Mr. DITTER. Did the gentleman request the privilege of appearing himself?

Mr. SISSON. No.

Mr. DITTER. Or of gathering in any of these groups?

Mr. SISSON. No; I was too busy with another committee, the Banking and Currency Committee, and I would say that that committee is more guilty than the gentleman's. I am not intending any adverse criticism of the chairman of the subcommittee. The practice indulged in the other day is a practice that has grown up, and my own committee is more guilty than the gentleman's, but I think it is a practice that ought not to be permitted.

Mr. DITTER. And may I encourage the gentleman with this further observation: That during the course of the hearings I was visited by some very delightful ladies who are keenly interested in this peace program and who brought all the wiles and charms at their command to try persuade me to their cause?

Mr. SISSON. But the gentleman remained adamant, nevertheless?

Mr. DITTER. To join in the cause in which they are interested, so that they did have an opportunity indirectly to present their cause, and they had their day in court.

Mr. SISSON. I am not saying they did not have opportunity. I was merely replying to the gentleman's observation that if this had been made available for study earlier the war lords would have gotten in their work more effectively than they did.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SISSON. I know that the gentleman is capable of making a better speech than I am, but I have to make a part of this speech myself, because it is in my system and I must get it out. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ZIONCHECK). The gentleman from New York has 8 minutes remaining.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I repeat, to make it more emphatic, in what I have had to say and what I shall say I intend no criticism of the subcommittee, who simply have followed a practice which has grown up here which I believe does not afford adequate consideration for important bills.

It is extremely difficult, if not impossible, for anyone not versed in the lore and technique of naval tonnage, to compare what this bill will accomplish with the maximum limits of the Washington and London Naval Treaties. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN] has well said, "The only comparison between our naval force and that of the other great powers, which makes any sense to the lay person, is in the amount of money that we are spending on our Navy, and have spent on our Navy, since the end of the World War, in comparison with what the other nations are spending and have spent since the World War. And as has already been pointed out in the general debate upon this bill, we have already, during the years from 1923 to 1934, inclusive, spent $4,052,000,000 on our Navy alone, as compared with $3,342,000,000 expended by Great Britain on hers, $937,000,000 expended by France, and $1,357,000,000 expended by Japan. If we did not already, prior to 1935, have a Navy second to none then we have been wasting a good many hundreds of millions of dollars.

It is also very difficult and probably impossible for most of the Members of this House to really grasp the significance of this bill, the possibilities of its evil influence upon world psychology at this time when there is so much danger that war hysteria and the fear of each of several nations of the others, may again sweep the world into a war that will be the end of civilization. Instead of doing our part, a part which we are in a better position to perform than any other nation of the world, to act as a stabilizing and a friendly and peace-promoting influence, we are, in passing this bill, doing what is best calculated to cause each of several other great powers to speed up their armament race and do that which is best calculated to bring on war through preparation for war.

I say it is difficult for most of the Members of the House to grasp the significance of this bill and understand or discuss it, because of the way in which the bill has been prepared and the manner in which it has been brought before the House.

My good friend, Governor Tobey, of New Hampshire, pointed out, the other day in making inquiry about this bill, that this bill making an appropriation of $457,000,000 was brought before the House without even a Member of the subcommittee having seen the bill or the report, and that Members had asked for the bill for several days prior to the time when it was called up and for the report on the bill and had been turned down. Members of this House should not with complacency acquiesce in the perfunctory passing of a bill making up nearly a billion dollars for Navy and Army, in preparation for war in a single year, without having more time than has been afforded to study the bill, the report, and the hearings held by the committee. I obtained, on the day that the bill was called up a copy of hearings held by the subcommittee. They contained 956 pages of printed matter. It is usually not of much use to read the hearings on a bill until you have the bill and the committee report on it. I have read only a small part of the hearings on this bill. I read enough, however, to note that the witnesses, who appeared before the committee were admirals, rear admirals, retired admirals, or other naval officers, with very few exceptions. All of them, of course, were interested in a navy second to none or a navy bigger than all the others combined program. The few exceptions were Assistant Secretary of the Navy Henry Roosevelt, a far more strenuous advocate of brandishing the big stick than his kinsman, the late Theodore; some instructors from the Naval Academy and other members of the Navy Department; and, last but not least, one or more representatives of naval armament manufacturers, one of whom appeared before the subcommittee to protest against what he called the unfair competition to which his particular corporation was subjected in the manufacture of propeller-shaft sleeves for naval vessels by the Government navy yard in New York. When representatives of armament makers are given hearings before our committee on naval affairs to complain because they are not making enough profits, it would appear that we are not going very far, as yet, in our effort to discourage war by taking the profits out of it.

Personally, I think it might be enlightening, even to some of the Members of Congress, if this Congress were to pass a law to compel Army and Navy officers, who are here in Washington, to protect us against invasion and to provide for our defense, to wear their uniforms when appearing before congressional committees or watching the proceedings from the House and Senate galleries or otherwise busying themselves about the Capitol and House and Senate Office Buildings.

I read the following significant statement from pages 1 and 2 of the report:

> The Budget estimates of appropriations for the Navy Department for the fiscal year 1936 will be found in detail on pages 471 to 508, inclusive, of the Budget, and in House Documents Nos. 102 and 138 of the present session. In the aggregate they amount to $485,443,847, which not only seems but is a huge sum, and particularly so when contrasted with the total amount ($284,658,799) carried in the Naval Appropriations Act, fiscal year 1935, and with the totals of such annual measures for prior years; but, of course, a substantial expansion of the naval budget is a natural and anticipated sequence to the attainment of a Navy of the proportions contemplated by existing international agreements to which this Government committed itself when it ratified the Washington and London Treaties and to which end it has more recently committed itself through both funds made available to the Chief Executive for employment in naval building programs and legislation of scarcely more than a year ago authorizing the provisions of funds to build and maintain in under-age status the whole number of our treaty quota of naval vessels and such number of aircraft as may be deemed commensurate with a treaty navy.

That language is somewhat misleading because it implies that what is intended to be a maximum limit is something to which we obligated ourselves in the Washington and London Treaties; which, of course, is not the case. We obligated ourselves not to build beyond it. I am in favor of an adequate Navy for defense, but against whom are we preparing to defend ourselves?

With Canada, a peaceful neighbor on the north, with no defenses, either naval or otherwise, except the custom boats on the Great Lakes maintained by either country between us; with Mexico on the south, certainly against whom we need no Navy; and bounded by the Atlantic and Pacific on either side; we are in no danger of having to maintain a defensive war of any real proportions. And yet, situated more advantageously than any other nation in the world, so far as security is concerned, we are spending more upon our Navy than even England, whose dominions and colonies extend around the world and upon whose territory the sun never sets.

I intend no unfair criticism of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, which held the hearings upon and brought out this bill. The language of their report, which I have previously referred to, would appear to indicate that, as was stated in the press a few days ago—

> The committee itself believed that the huge amount carried by this bill was considerably more than was necessary for defensive purposes.

Whether that was the fact I do not know. The chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY], is an able and useful Member of this House. The gentleman was courteous and considerate in extending to me and, I think, the others ample time in general debate on this bill. I intend no personal criticism of him because the bill and report were not available for study long enough before the conclusion of this general debate, so that we could make better use of the time in the debate to inform the House. In his comprehensive remarks in explanation of the bill on Tuesday, he said in part that had we spent a few millions additional for the increase of our Navy in 1914 and 1915, we never would have been drawn into the World War, and implied that proper preparation and defense would have saved the world from the World War. That statement is contrary to the history not only of the World War but of all wars. Germany did not believe that we would ever go into the war, and a great German propaganda was maintained in this country, perhaps not as effective as the propaganda of some of the Allies. We all know now, as we did not know then, as we never know at a time of war hysteria, that it was unnecessary for us to go into the World War and that not one good thing was accomplished either by us or by the other nations.

The effective means of preventing war and securing peace are institutions for the settlement of disputes between nations, just as we have institutions for the settling of disputes between individuals and between our 48 States. Preparation for war breeds war, not peace, just as the preparation of Germany helped to bring on the World War in 1914. Preparation for war such as the gentleman advocates would not have stopped us from going into the war in 1917. It would have unquestionably brought us into the war much earlier than 1917, and the loss in money, lives, and suffering would have been simply that much greater.

A navy second to none would not have saved us nor the rest of the world from the World War. A world court or a league of nations, to which the slight upon the honor of Austria, by the assassination of her Archduke by a Serbian student, in that little obscure town might have been submitted—a place where the nations' representatives might have met around a table and threshed out their differences might have saved the world that fearful catastrophe. It is a pleasing custom among some who cannot reason from cause to effect and discern the end from the beginning nowadays, or was until 1934, to sneer at any attempts to secure the settlement of disputes between nations and to secure international justice through an institution created for that purpose such as the World Court. But no fair-minded, intelligent man can deny that except for the League of Nations a European war would have been brought on in December, last year, by the assassination of King Alexander, of Yugoslavia, and the Premier of France. The causes were equally as potent as those in 1914. Indeed, the editorial opinion of nearly every newspaper in this country was that in December 1934, the League saved the world from another world war.

A navy second to none will not save us or the rest of the world. Naval competition in armament building will not save us nor the rest of the world from another world war. We have done less to promote peace, to secure justice among the nations, far less than we should have done, far less than it has been within our power to do. If you pass this bill in this form, you will be adding just that much to the lack of understanding, the misapprehension, which the nations have of us and which to a great extent we have of them. What are the causes of war? Economic conditions, rivalries, high tariffs, tariff walls. It may all be summed up in a lack of understanding. I cannot guarantee that if we should join the World Court, if we should add the great influence which we have to that institution, that we could save ourselves and the rest of the world from another war, but I do know that that is the only means by which war can be prevented. We might be able to keep out of another war if our business men and our munition makers are willing to help us preserve our neutrality, but it will be at a fearful price. I am in favor of paying that price rather than again sending our boys to fight on foreign soil. We may be able to keep out of another world war, if one comes, provided that the fountains of information are not again poisoned by the Hearst newspapers and other jingoes. I wonder how long our people will tolerate, I wonder how long this Congress will allow Hearst to influence our foreign policy. More than anyone else, either in this country or elsewhere, Hearst was guilty of inducing this country to get into the war with Spain in 1898. I recall, because I was so eager to get into a silly and unnecessary war that I ran away from home and tried by lying about my age to enlist. I recall the contemptible methods, the lies which Hearst used to create hate against Spain. When he thought that he was not going to be able to force McKinley into the war he called him the living, breeding, embodiment of crime in the United States. He finally did succeed in forcing McKinley into the war. In 1916 he again tried to force us into war; this time with Mexico and as usual for his own personal gain.

I think the amount carried in this bill should either be substantially reduced or the bill should be defeated.

I hope that a motion to recommit will be made, with instructions at least substantially to reduce the amount carried in this bill. The means that we should adopt to secure peace should be such, as advocated by my friend MAVERICK, of Texas, and such as advocated for the past several sessions in this body by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS]. It was never intended that a little group of the United States Senate, one more than one-third, should have it within their power to defeat the will of the people of this country and keep us from adding our influence, our power, to the strength of such an institution for securing justice between nations and preserving the peace of the world as the World Court. The Congress, by a majority vote, has the power, with the approval of the President, to enable us to take our part in that institution for securing justice between the nations. I urge rather than a navy second to none or bigger than all, the support and passage of the bill that was introduced last year in this body and again this year by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], providing with proper stipulations and conditions for our entry into the World Court.

So far as a navy for defense is concerned, I am for it. I want to repeat what I have said before in this House—that in all the wars in which we have engaged, we have never waged a defensive war. We have never had to defend our own borders. We have never been engaged in a war since the time when we threw off the rule of England, which was necessary for us to get into. I do not except the War of 1812. I do not except even the Civil War. I certainly do not except the Mexican War or the Spanish-American War, both of which were wicked and unjustifiable for us to carry on.

Unless the committee sponsoring this bill is willing to substantially reduce this appropriation, I urge the defeat of the bill.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I have been watching with interest the controversy over the cotton-processing tax. At first blush this might appear to be a private fight and of no particular interest to those parts of the country which neither produce nor process cotton. The vital principle involved, however, is not one of interest alone to those engaged in the cotton industry but is of importance to all producers of agricultural products, particularly those upon which processing taxes are now being collected. If as a result of this controversy the cotton-processing tax should be done away with, it would mean in the end that all processing taxes would go and that the benefits now being paid to farmers under the A. A. A. program would cease. This is not, in my opinion, a political question, but is purely and simply a matter of economics. However, speaking from this side of the aisle, and coming from the banner Republican State of the Union, I do not intend to say anything, nor will it be necessary for me to say anything in the course of these remarks which is not entirely consistent with good Republican doctrine as exemplified in the past.

For many years we Republicans in the Middle West have voted for protection because we believed in it as a matter of principle. We may have had our doubts at times as to whether we were getting as much out of it as other sections of the country, particularly New England, but we stood for the principle just the same and consistently voted in Congress for Republican tariff bills. In our innocence we thought for a long time that other sections of the country which stood for protection were for it as a matter of principle also and that they were willing to apply the principle to all sections of the country alike.

My first disillusionment in this matter came while the 1930 Tariff Act was under consideration and arose over the proposal for a tariff on petroleum. At that time the oil industry in this country was flat on its back. It was in much worse condition than the textile industry now finds itself in in New England. There is no question but what a large part of this distress was due to the importation of crude oil from Venezuela and other countries having low production costs. In our distress we turned to our friends in New England, feeling sure that, having tasted the fruits of protection, we could count upon their help in relieving that portion of the distress which was due to importations. To our amazement and chagrin, we were told that New England was opposed to protection for the oil industry and that its industrial interests demanded cheap, imported oil.

Coming at a time when there was pending in Congress a bill containing great increases in tariff protection for New England interests, it was hard for us to believe that we could possibly be treated thus in what we thought was the house of our friends. To make a long story short, due very largely to the opposition of New England and, I think I should say, in part to the lateness with which the matter was brought before Congress, the 1930 Tariff Act did not contain a tariff on oil. The industry was in such a serious condition and imports constituted such a menace, however, that the fight was carried on and finally consummated in an amendment to the 1932 tax bill which provided for a tax—very inadequate, to be sure—upon imported oil and gasoline. The fight against this tax—which, of course, was nothing more or less than a tariff—was made by New England, and it is interesting to note that the roll call on that amendment, as contained in volume 75, page 7327, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, shows practically every New England Member of Congress, Republican and Democrat, voting against this item. In particular, every Member from Massachusetts voted against this amendment, including, of course, those who are most strenuously opposing the processing tax on cotton.

Now, I do not criticize my good and able friends from Massachusetts for carrying out what they feel are the wishes of their constituents in these matters. I do, however, sympathize with them in having to represent a constituency which is so blind, selfish, and self-centered that it requires its Representatives to assume such inconsistent and ridiculous positions on tariff matters.

Now let us get down to the matter of the textile industry and the processing tax. Concededly the textile industry is in a bad way. It is suffering from numerous ailments, and it is to the credit of the Members of Congress representing districts in which that industry is important that they are doing all in their power to bring about relief. Even if my New England friends proved by their votes that they had no sympathy for the plight of the oil industry in its distress, I am willing to go along with them in any reasonable measure to rehabilitate the textile industry. I do not, however, propose to stand by and see an attempt to rehabilitate that industry at the sole expense of the American farmer. I would make that statement even if I felt that the processing tax was detrimental to the textile industry, which it is not, as I shall presently show.

As it stands today, the processing tax is the farmers' tariff. Every argument that can be made for the tariff can be made for the processing tax, because both are based upon exactly the same principle. If it were possible for the farmer who produces commodities of which we have an exportable surplus to be fully protected by the tariff, then I would say there was no need for the processing tax. With the exception of sugar, processing taxes are not being applied today upon any commodity except those of which we have an exportable surplus. In the case of sugar the processing tax is being applied to compensate for the reduction in the tariff, so that in no instance is the processing tax being used except to complement and supplement our tariff system. That great farm organization—the National Grange—has for years taken a position of not opposing the tariff system but of insisting that all industries must all be treated alike under that system. In other words, if there was tariff protection for one, there must be tariff protection for all. May I say that has always been my understanding of the Republican position on the tariff, and is exactly the position I am taking today. As long as the farmer must buy in a protected market he must have the benefit of the processing tax on products whose price is fixed in world markets. Agriculture has been fighting for this principle for years, and it is not going to give it up at this time, no matter how loud the wails from New England. Whenever you get ready to give up the tariff system, whenever you are willing that the textile industry should operate without protection, then American farmers will be ready to listen to the proposal to take off the processing tax.

The processing tax has not injured the textile industry. Every penny of this tax has been passed on to the consumer, and like other taxes, no doubt in some cases something has been added. The extra cost in the retail price of cotton goods caused by the processing tax has been so little as to be insignificant and has in most cases been much less than the increased cost, due to the operation of the N. R. A. codes. There is no evidence to show that the imposition of the processing tax has resulted in any decrease in the consumption of cotton goods. There is no evidence to show that former consumers of cotton are using competing commodities, and protection against this is expressly provided in the law and regulations, because there is imposed a compensatory tax on competing products. The processing tax does not interfere with our exports of cotton goods because it is provided that there shall be a refund of the tax when such goods are exported. It does not put our domestic manufacturers at any disadvantage as far as imports are concerned, because the amount of the tax is added to the tariff. As a matter of fact, the processing tax is fair and just in every way, and the only basis for the objection to it is that cotton manufacturers are not willing to pay the farmer a fair price for his cotton. This is really the only issue. The fight on this particular item furnishes an interesting sidelight as to the hypocrisy of processors of farm commodities. In appearances before the Agricultural Committee they have consistently maintained that they were in favor of high prices for farm products. They said they wished they could pay more; and yet the first time that machinery has been set up which might enable them to pay more, and do it on a basis which will not be to the disadvantage of any textile manufacturer, we find that their wails and howls fill the air.

The processing tax does not and cannot in any way hinder or interfere with the exports of raw cotton. I think that the policy of Government loans on a basis higher than world cotton prices has resulted in a serious injury to our cotton-export business. I think such loans should be discontinued, or at least made on a basis less than world prices. I think also that these loans have put the textile industry at a disadvantage in making it necessary for cotton spinners in this country to pay more for cotton than their competitors in other countries, but all this has nothing to do with the processing tax. If textile manufacturers desire to render a service to the cotton industry and to themselves, they could well concentrate their efforts on a campaign to do away with this policy of cotton loans.

Now, in conclusion, let me say that if the processing tax on agricultural commodities goes—and it will go on all commodities if this attempt to repeal the processing tax on cotton is successful—then our tariff system goes. This is not a threat, but I am simply stating an economic fact, because under present conditions the American farmer cannot buy in a protected market and sell in a world market. So I suggest to my good friends from New England that they go back to their constituents, tell them to get over their hysteria, tell them that Congress and the country sympathize with their plight, and are willing to help them, but that such help must not be solely at the expense of the American producer of agricultural products. Tell them further that Americans demand fair play, and that they are willing that the American textile industry shall be afforded all necessary protection, but that if it is, the cotton producer, the wheat producer, the tobacco producer, and the producer in every other branch of agriculture is entitled to the same protection. [Applause.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, 37 years ago the United States declared war against Spain. Many of the Spanish-American War veterans are still living, and I do not hesitate to say right now that the amount of compensation which they are receiving from the Government is insufficient. Many of the Spanish-American War veterans are on the relief rolls. They have not been given a square deal and they are not getting one now.

I also want to say a word or two in behalf of the World War veterans. Many of them are also on the relief rolls. Many of those men and their dependents have lost their homes. It seems to me if we would spend some of this money to assist our ex-service men and their dependents, instead of spending it for battleships, we would demonstrate that we have a humane feeling for those men and women who preserved our Nation. I believe that our country should be well fortified, but I do not think it is necessary to spend half a billion dollars for our Navy. If we would spend half of that amount to eradicate the slum districts, it would be a progressive step in the right direction and our crime wave would be reduced considerably. Crime in the United States is costing the Federal Government fabulous sums of money.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. KNUTE HILL].

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Mr. Chairman, in derision we who oppose war except in case of actual invasion are called pacifists. I, for one, accept the challenge. The first great pacifist was the lowly Nazarene, the Christ. And we dare to call ourselves a Christian Nation! I am a member of no church, but I submit that the very essence of Christianity is action, not profession—mere words.

Members protest that they abhor war. I go far beyond that; I oppose war. Look at the greatest exponents of war. Alexander the Great (God save the mark!), sitting in tears because there were no more worlds to conquer. Grieving not because he could not be of service to mankind but blubbering like a baby because, forsooth, his inordinate lust for power and glory could not be satiated! And Napoleon, that idol of modern war worshipers. A glorified world conqueror and then a miserable exile on the lonely isle of St. Helena. We who have studied our history did not need to read his recently published love letters to know how puny he was, physically, mentally, and morally.

Out along historic Bladensburg Road are the grounds where many a bloody and fatal duel was fought. That was more than a century ago. Today we have advanced far enough to brand dueling as an outlaw, morally and legally. In that day, however, the duelists were the principals. They did not skulk behind their seconds. Today the instigators of war—the Hitlers, the Mussolinis, the Hearsts—incite to war and delude the masses, the rank and file, to fight each other, they know not why nor wherefore.

Individuals no longer arm against each other. Neither do cities, counties, nor States. Then why nations? Only to serve special interests. There were two main causes for our entry into the World War—to swell the already bloated fortunes of the munition makers and the war profiteers, and to distract the attention of the American people from their own economic conditions and problems. It is my humble opinion that if Woodrow Wilson had refused to be led into war and had been wise enough and courageous enough to have given his whole attention to our domestic ills and try to solve these problems in the light of his "New Freedom", not only would there have been a greater luster to his fame but a far greater measure of social justice and security in America today.

It has been stated time and again on the floor of this House that we are sitting on a volcano. Yes; it is too true. But it is a man-made volcano. You cannot stop this human eruption by ridicule and threats as the Hearst papers are daily pouring out against the college youth and the college professors who are really thinking for themselves. Nor can you longer delude the farmers and laborers with mere promises. If you do not remove the cause of this unrest, a standing Army of millions of men and an appropriation of billions of dollars will not quell the disturbance. Only through the avenues of free thought and free expression can we solve these problems and attain recovery through sane reform. It is to stifle this discussion that our war lords are talking about and preparing for the next war. The next great war! Even the sponsors of this bill agree with everybody else that the next great war will destroy civilization. The big air raids, the gas attacks, will spare neither friend nor foe, militarist nor civilian. If it is coming, why prepare for it? It will be complete annihilation. If it is not coming, why prepare for it? It is a snare and a delusion.

Let us see what this "defense program" is. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY] boasts that our Navy shall be "mistress of the Seven Seas." In "defense" of our far-flung possessions, I presume! And listen to this:

NAVY REVEALS PLAN FOR NEW BATTLESHIPS—BIGGEST AND MOST POWERFUL EVER CONSTRUCTED INCLUDED IN PROGRAM, HOUSE TOLD

The next big step in the administration's naval program will be the building of modern battleships, Representative GLOVER H. CARY (Democrat), of Kentucky, Chairman of the House Appropriations Naval Subcommittee, said today, unless a world naval conference further reduces the number of these men-of-war.

Consideration of the new $457,000,000 naval supply bill in the House revealed that high naval officials already are studying plans to replace obsolete battleships, which cost from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 each.

BIG SHIPS FAVORED

American naval experts favor building the biggest and most powerful battleships ever undertaken unless a world agreement intervenes. Representative CARY said:

"The administration's naval policy will bring us to the building of modern battleships, unless those we have can be modernized and unless a naval conference changes the situation. They are considered necessary to the Navy and are in the program."

Eleven battleships will be over age by 1937, and with expiration of treaty limits, new ones can be built. Two more ocean fighters will be over age by 1938 and two more by 1940. Since it requires 4 years to build a battleship, high Navy officials are known to favor prompt action on the program.

We quibbled over giving our farmers $60,000,000 for seed loans to raise crops to feed the people and now propose dreadnaughts costing almost that much apiece. In a few years they will be obsolete or sunk in a battle off the coast of Siam. We grudgingly dole out $15 per month to our citizens who have become aged and decrepit in the service of their country and nonchalantly build airplane carriers at $29,000,000 apiece. And then we wonder that we are "sitting on a volcano." The wonder is that we have not been blown to atoms by an exploited and enraged people.

My very estimable friend and colleague from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] spoke yesterday about the cost of war, stating: "Our trouble is not the cost of war. Our trouble is the cost of panics and the depressions which inevitably follow them" (p. 6331, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD). Exactly. All this is the result of war. The grim and ghastly Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse ever ride in the wake of war, and their fearful depredations can be rightfully charged up to Mars, the war god. But let me remind my good friend that he did not count the whole cost. Let him go down across the Potomac to Arlington Cemetery and there sadly count the little white slabs, thousands of them, marking the last resting place of those who thought they were fighting the last war—the one to "make the world safe for democracy." Let him go to Flanders Field and there behold the "crosses, row on row" marking the graves of their brothers in delusion, and then let him tell me the cost of war. Nay, let him count the bitter tears of little orphans, the heavy sighs of grief-stricken widows, the sobbing heartaches of saddened mothers, and then let him tell me the cost of war. Only a merciful God in Heaven can count this bitter cost and forgive his misguided children here on earth. God grant that in my humble way, in or out of office, I may lend my voice and vote for a lasting peace. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 17 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FENERTY].

Mr. FENERTY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein certain data I have prepared.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

RED MEXICO

Mr. FENERTY. Mr. Chairman, in order that I may proceed with my address in unbroken sequence, I request that I be not asked to yield until the completion of that which I hope this afternoon to say to the Membership of this House. And at this outset of my speech I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks that I may also include therein the full text of letters, editorials, manifestoes, articles, statements, and similar papers which, in part, I shall read or which may be otherwise referred to in the course of my address.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES

Mr. FENERTY. Mr. Chairman, deeply rooted in the heart and soul of America is the fundamental political principle that all men are created equal and endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. These rights, which our Nation's founders declared to be self-evident, are held by every man, not by the tolerance or grant of any State but by the laws of nature and the immutable decree of nature's God. It is not within the authority of any government to hamper or destroy them, and the government which attacks them deserves the repudiation and the contempt of all right-minded men. While it is no easy task to enumerate all the rights comprehended under the primal right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, it is nevertheless certain, as the Supreme Court of the United States decided in the important case of Meyer v. Nebraska (262 U. S. 390) that among them is the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience. The constant and unvarying interpretation of the Federal Constitution by our courts sustains our belief that the Government exists to secure the citizen in the exercise of his natural and inalienable rights, and that it may enact no law which destroys them.

To frame a constitution or to enact legislation which renders impossible man's enjoyment of his natural heritage of liberty is not within the legitimate power of government, no matter how constituted. For this inheritance descends to man by the natural law which is "coeval with mankind", and since it "is dictated by God Himself", as Blackstone writes in his celebrated Commentaries—introduction, section 2:

It is, of course, superior in obligation to any other. * * * No human laws are of any validity if contrary to this; and such of them as are valid derive all their force and all their authority, mediately or immediately, from this original.

The legislator who opposes the dictates of this law cannot prescribe a course which is reasonable, or which is profitable to the community, and since his act in no way reflects the wisdom of the natural law, which is the wisdom of the Eternal Lawgiver, it is in violation of right reason, is not law, and can impose no obligations upon any citizen. An unjust law is a species of tyranny. Meriting no respect, it can evoke no loyalty, particularly from Americans whose principles of government it outrages.

AMERICAN PRINCIPLES ARE CENTURIES OLD

These American doctrines are in accord with the teachings of Christianity, whose most eminent thinkers, such as Bellarmine, Montesquieu, Locke, Thomas Aquinas, Hooker, Grotius, Kant, and Suarez, indicated the rights of the people with which no state or ruler may interfere, insisting that such rights are above and beyond the statutes made by kings and senates, because deriving their sanction, not from the will and power of earthly authority, but from the authority of God and the dignity of man as an intelligent being.

This being so, Mr. Chairman, we are correct in affirming, in true American fashion, that modern political tendencies in some nations have not antiquated or set aside this truth of the Divine source of all authority, for it is not within man's power to destroy that which is true, nor yet within his power to change that which is unchangeable. Truth is fixed and immutable. It is possible to discover new beauty in truth so that it shines more brightly to the eyes of man, but its light cannot be extinguished. Light does not destroy light, but dissolves into it according to the universal law of its essential unity. Nor is it possible to hold that, under exceptional circumstances, a nation may acquire or assume the right to set aside the principles upon which just governments are builded and thus interfere with the fundamental rights of conscience for the supposed good of the state. The state has no title to benefit by wrong, and rights bestowed by man's Creator are beyond the legitimate power of man to suspend or to revoke.

MEXICO SETS UP TOTALITARIAN STATE

The Government of Mexico, by insisting on obedience to a constitution made without reference to justice by a little group of military rulers, contrary to human rights, and never submitted to the people for ratification, declares that the individual citizen has no rights that his rulers are obliged to recognize, that there are no limits to the powers of government, and that the citizen is the mere creature of the totalitarian state. No teaching can more certainly sweep out of existence the sturdy self-reliance of a people, sow discord within and enmity without. The sanctuary of the soul and of conscience the state may not rightly invade. Yet it is precisely this which the present Government of Mexico seeks to do, and then to justify, before the bar of American public opinion, before a people whose national ideals are in direct contradiction to the evil spirit of despotism and tyranny that actuates the laws and rulers now making of Mexico a shocking example of wrong to the civilized world.

Today, Mr. Chairman, we have the extraordinary and shameful spectacle of a foreign government not only filling our country with propaganda in favor of plans and policies so decidedly at variance with American principles, but actually abusing the free franking privilege of the United States Post Office Department to send into our Nation attacks upon Americans and those things which Americans hold sacred, and even attempting to justify and defend among us laws and conduct wholly at variance with the fundamentals set forth in imperishable documents by the fathers of this Republic. Since the Government of Mexico thus submits its case for judgment to a court beyond its own boundaries, pleading not before its own citizens, who, according to its constitution, form the only court competent to pass upon it, but before strangers who claim no jurisdiction over their neighbor's political affairs, the Government of Mexico cannot, therefore, object if the case it has thus presented for judgment be considered in the light of American principles as embodied in our fundamental laws and in the light of Christian principles, since it appeals for the sympathy of Christians; nor, since it claims great zeal for the advancement of its "socialistic" education, if the statements it has presented in support of its pleading be submitted to the test of history.

JUDGED BY AMERICAN TEACHINGS

A comparison of the conception of civil and religious freedom enunciated by the American Constitution and that of the framers and defenders of the present Constitution of Mexico merely emphasizes their entire contrast. To demand American approval for the Constitution of Mexico is nothing less than a demand upon us to repudiate the work of the fathers of our own Republic. We cannot commend the one without registering our condemnation of the other. And what is in this regard true of the constitutions of the two countries is equally so with respect to the laws founded upon them in Mexico and the United States.

I need not enumerate for the Members of this House the rights of the citizen under the American Constitution. They are emblazoned upon every page of our history and written into the decisions of our courts. These rights have stood the test of a century and a half and our people today are undoubtedly more than ever convinced of the desirability of their continuance. For the American Government, fully and frankly recognizing the utility of religion to good government, encourages it to make greater and greater contributions to the happiness of the people, the stability of government, and the reign of order.

In disgraceful contrast to this, the Mexican Constitution and its enforcing acts thrust the citizen into a state of abject subservience to the Government, making him a creature of the dictators who, preaching communism and socialism, have enriched themselves by the debasement and at the expense of Mexico's forgotten people.

MEXICAN CULTURE HAS A GLORIOUS HISTORY

The gross inhumanity and injustice of the present Mexican Government and its oppression of the Mexican people become the more evident if we consider for a moment the possibilities of the Mexican character and the pinnacles of scholarship and cultural achievement to which the native Mexican attained before the anti-God forces assumed control.

Mr. Chairman, two centuries and a half before the Declaration of Independence was written in my own city of Philadelphia, gulf and lagoon in Mexico echoed to the music of Christian praise. The chaplains of the conquerors were still struggling with the hundred dialects of the land when, from Flanders and Spain, came 15 members of the Franciscan Order to receive the warm welcome of Cortes and win the souls and hearts of the natives of Mexico. So indelibly did the sacrificial humility of the missionaries impress itself upon the Indians that they gave to the friars a name that the seraphic Poverello would himself have loved when they called them "Motolinia—poorest of the poor"; and so enduring did the title become that one of the provincials of the order, who later founded churches, schools, missions, and towns from Nicaragua to the northern border, himself baptizing 400,000 souls and holding whole districts in civil and spiritual allegiance, is still affectionately known to history as "Fray Motolinia."

Not less typical of the friars' zeal for the cause of God was the princely kinsman of the Emperor Charles V, Peter of Ghent, who was unceasing in his establishment of churches and schools, whose primary school, with over 1,000 native pupils, gradually developed into a great civilizing center from which teachers and officials went forth for the education of the natives in their own tribal tongues. And it is amazing to realize that this devoted friar found time from his academic labors to translate the hymns of the church into the Aztec language, just as Father Alonzo de Molina composed a Mexican-Spanish dictionary that is regarded by scholars as standard even in our day.

Just as 2,000 years ago it was averred that no good could come out of Nazareth, so there were not lacking a few among the rough European soldiery who thought the Mexican Indian undeserving of the attentive care which the missionaries bestowed upon him. Reports were sent abroad expressing injured amazement that the priests were actually teaching Latin to the Indians, and with such success that the natives spoke it "like Cicero."

Perhaps the most impressive illustration of this backward attitude of mind toward the native was afforded by the colonists along our own Atlantic seaboard; for, finding here the native North American Indian, no more savage than those the missionaries educated and Christianized, the English colonists adopted as their compelling principle of action the idea that "the only good Indian is a dead one", and destroyed the native races, until today, ingloriously herded into a few reservations, the Indians of this country form less than one-half of 1 percent of the people in the land in which their fathers had hunted centuries before the white man's foot was set on the alien soil.

IT IS NECESSARY TO UNDERSTAND THE INDIAN CHARACTER

To those who, moved by racial antipathy or blinded by historical ignorance, level the shafts of unthinking ridicule at the Indian culture of old Mexico, I say:

Who founded the culture of Mexico? Who created her ancient university and colleges and trade and primary schools? What glory has Mexico that has not been given her by the teachers of whom the Mexican militarist clique would now deprive her people?

Where is the Indian of North America? When England lost her American Colonies, Mr. Chairman, they were taken by descendants of the white man—civilized for over a thousand years—while the dusky native was pursued like a hunted animal across the Alleghenies, over the Ohio and the Mississippi, across the Rockies and the Sierra Nevada, until he sought shelter beneath the cross of the California mission.

In Mexico 90 percent of the people are of full or part Indian blood. There the Indian problem was solved by preservation, by education, and religion. Here the Indian problem was buried beneath the totem poles of the slaughtered natives. It is probably because there is thus no Indian problem here that there is such wide-spread misunderstanding on the part of Americans toward Mexico, and such indifference by much of our press toward that decivilization which is today prostrating our sister land. Such an unworthy attitude may in charity be explained, if not excused, by the fact that our American people as a whole are temperamentally incompetent to value or appraise understandingly a civilization that elevated and preserved the Indian while we exterminated him, or to interpret sympathetically the culture to which Mexico owes everything but her natural loveliness.

The friars' zeal for education of the Mexican Indian, however, was shared by the Queen of Spain, who entreated her subjects to consider him as a free man and a spiritual equal, even as Pope Paul III, as early as 1537, had issued documents condemning slavery in America, giving the Indian equal standing with the white man and asserting his right to the entire heritage of Christian faith.

It is not surprising, then, that so urgent was the desire for education that, during what might be called "the cultural period" in Mexico, there were founded no less than 9,000 churches, each with its own school, academies for adults with a thousand students, trade schools, numerous colleges, like Santa Cruz for Indians and San Juan de Letran for Mestizos, which, in addition to Latin and philosophy, had chairs of music, medicine, and languages, sending forth native graduates to become teachers, mayors, and Governors of the people.

FIRST PRINTING PRESS IN AMERICA

The first Bishop of Mexico, Fray Zummáraga, founded nine schools for Indian girls and an asylum for half-castes. Seventy-six years before the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock, almost 90 years before the birth of George Washington, the Bishop of Mexico had had school texts and the Bible translated into Indian and, because of the extensive proficiency in reading taught by the missionaries, he set up the first printing press in the New World, a press which was actively productive of translations, copies, and original works even long before Father Andrew White, S. J., had performed a similar educational service for the American Colonies by establishing the first press in the United States in the little village of St. Marys, in Maryland.

AMERICA'S OLDEST UNIVERSITY

In the meantime the Jesuits, the Benedictines, Dominicans and Augustinians were busily pursuing the same plan of combining secular with religious instruction. The Jesuits founded the College of San Ildefonso, while the Augustinians established that of San Pablo. So wide-spread became the scope of missionary teaching that nearly 400 years ago, in 1553, the church founded the University of Mexico, with all the faculties and privileges pertaining to the renowned University of Salamanca. Ranking in repute with the mighty cultural establishments of medieval and later Europe, from the sixteenth to the beginning of the nineteenth century, when the antireligious group first began its destructive work, this ancient institution in the city of Mexico, the oldest university in America, coequal with San Marcos in Peru, with its affiliated institutions produced a brilliant galaxy of native poets, theologians, dramatists, historians, jurists, scientists, and even journalists, so that, comparing notably with Spanish culture and far outranking that of the contemporary English colonies, the University of Mexico was giving to the world graduates who won international renown generations before Harvard was founded and when the great monumental cities of our western world were still swamps in the prairie.

How many today remember that 200 years before Harvard began the study of medicine, 86 years before Hunter opened the first English school of dissection, the missionary teachers of Mexico had inaugurated the teaching of anatomy and surgery with dissection, while hospitals, like that of Guadalajara, founded 3 centuries ago by Mexican bishops, are regarded as models by American medical scholars of our own generation?

OUR COUNTRY'S DEBT TO MEXICO

American tourists who today gaze with wondering admiration upon the solidity and beauty of our western American missions should not forget that it was Mexico which sent the padres to our western slope. The glory of missionary culture in California was only an extension of the work in Mexico. I wonder how many of those Members of the Senate and House of Representatives who daily pass the statue of Junipero Serra, honored as California's heroic representative in the Hall of the Capitol here in Washington, recall that the beloved Franciscan educator came to us as an ambassador of that Mexican culture which the soviet dictators of Mexico would now have us forget. It was from civilized Mexico that the missionary teachers pushed their way through the uncivilized Mexican territories, through Texas and Arizona, New Mexico, and California.

It was Mexican culture that left the sandal print of missionary feet along every mile of El Camino Real—the royal road of California. It was the Mexican soul that left its monuments along the Rio Grande and the Pacific shores from San Diego to San Francisco. The old records speak in the liquid tongue of the Castilian to tell us that it was not Spain but Mexico that sent the sons of Assisi and Loyola to become the protomartyrs of our land. Through them we share in the impulse and inspiration of faith that Mexico gave to America. Her spiritual treasures become ours, her martyrs, our martyrs. Already, as has been eloquently written into history, our debt to Mexico has been acknowledged by voices which, if they do not all sing the old hymns, yet do all understand something of the message of the singers; if they do not all worship at the old altars, yet do all hold sacred the spots where the padres built them and give to the new cities that surround them the old names, to keep for our great West its traditions, its character, and its unfading charm.

BRILLIANT GALAXY OF MEXICAN SCHOLARS

Modern historians, while eulogizing progress in North America, sometimes forget whose cultural children we are, whose heritage we possess. Have we in America (even though our greatest artists study in Europe), have we produced a greater painter than the Mexican Indian Miguel de Cabrera, or Panduro, or Velazquez? Are our poets or orators superior to Altamirano? Have we produced a professor like the humble Juan Esteban, to whom pupils were sent from the countries of the old world? What American voices had more of eloquent inspiration than that of Nicholas del Puerto? Is our philosophy more profound than that of Munguia? Have we, even in Philadelphia, the city of lawyers, an attorney whose fame will outlast that of Francisco Pascual Garcia or Sanchez Santos? Cannot our journalists learn from Ignatio Ramirez or Rodriguez or Gavan? Has any surgeon of his time surpassed the ability of Urrutia? What American Indian ever became such an expert Latinist as Adriano de Tlalteloleo? Or such a historian as Valeriano? Have our scientists overshadowed the acumen of Carillo y Azcona? Or our preachers the mental attainments of Bartolome de Alba? Even in political acumen can we ignore Estagnol? Or in intelligent courage excel Mejia? Was it not with reason that Baron von Humboldt testified —even as did the American Ambassador, Henry Lane Wilson, in later years—that no city of the new continent, without even excepting those of the United States, could display such great and solid scientific establishments as the capital of Mexico?

Such, Mr. Speaker, was the Mexico of other days, before the war drums broke out in the first quarter of the nineteenth century—Mexico during 3 centuries of such tranquillity as had not been known during that period to any other country, European or colonial, throughout the world.

ANTIRELIGIOUS GROUP SEIZES CONTROL

What, then, must be said of that system of antireligion that has now persisted in Mexico for 100 years when we recall, as a brilliant English writer has averred, that at the beginning of the nineteenth century, when the antichurch forces first assumed control, Mexico had proportionately more colleges and less illiteracy than Great Britain, whereas today her great university is closed, her colleges confiscated, her people cast into an abysmal ignorance imposed by the machine guns of a mongrel minority?

Is it any wonder that illiteracy today abounds in Mexico, when you recall that her greatest civilizing and educating force, the church, has for a hundred years been ostracized from the classroom? Children may not be brought to the Christ who asked that they be suffered to come unto Him. They may only be brought to Calles and his degraded votaries who demand that they be made the custodians of the conscience of childhood. For three-quarters of a century the church has been a constitutional outlaw, forbidden to exercise her cultural influence on the life and conduct of the Mexican people.

During the 50 years after the break with Spain there were 57 Mexican Presidents and numerous wars. A peaceful interlude under the benevolent dictatorship of Porfirio Diaz enabled education and religion to regain something of their lost inheritance. But when, in 1910, President Diaz began to look with disfavor on certain oil interests affecting the United States, believing that his country was being unduly exploited—though he was probably correct, as is evidenced by the fact that Americans owned half of Mexico's wealth—nevertheless that decision cost him the Presidency of his country.

AMERICAN INTERFERENCE WITH MEXICO

By a strange coincidence, a convenient revolution broke out with help for the rebels from the United States. You will notice that our Government is not really bashful about intervening in Mexico when oil or other material interests are at the base of the problem. America has interfered in Mexico a dozen times and invariably against the best interests of the Mexican people. There was a ray of hope for Mexico when Victoriano Huerta became President. Peace and prosperity were presaged when for the first time since Mexico became a republic, President Huerta opened Congress in the name of God, as our own sessions here begin, and urged it to pray that God's law and concord would reign.

The far-seeing diplomacy of Great Britain and Germany recognized the government of this unusual Mexican leader and the American Ambassador and consuls recommended that the President of the United States extend similar recognition to what appeared to be a stable de facto government. But after the oil companies had protested with many unctuous tears, the President of the United States, Woodrow Wilson, according to his closest confidant, Col. Edward House, entered into a secret covenant secretly arrived at with Sir William Tyrrell, as a result of which Mr. Wilson induced Congress to reverse its own and his position on the Panama Canal tolls question, allowing British ships equal privileges with our own in the use of the Canal, in exchange for which concession England agreed to repudiate the recognition of Huerta by her own Ambassador and permit Mr. Wilson to have a free hand in Mexico.

Mr. Chairman, it was from this action that there followed the orgy of anarchy and persecution that today is culminating in the sovietizing of Mexico. Carranza, Obregon, Calles, all of these parasitical bandits, secured their position by American intervention. Arms and munitions were sent to Carranza in his attack upon the real government of the Republic, and when the American Secretary of War, Josephus Daniels, by order of President Wilson, sent the American marines to Vera Cruz in 1914, the oil interests were jubilant. Huerta was banished from the Presidency and died asking God's forgiveness for President Wilson, who, he said, never really understood. Revolution flared forth throughout Mexico with America supplying the fuel. Between four and six thousand religious schools, tolerated during the Diaz regime, and numerous libraries and priceless manuscripts, were confiscated or destroyed. Colleges were turned into barracks, the Carranzistas stabled their horses in the churches, priests were murdered, nuns tortured, altars defiled, religion desecrated, God mocked by decree and word and act. Illiteracy, irreligion, vice spread over the land as Mexico lay helpless under the American guns supplied to the bandits. Carranza showed his contempt for the power of the United States by expelling the American Red Cross, just as the present Mexican Government has expelled the Red Cross of Spain. The next day President Wilson extended American recognition to him as the leader of the Mexican people.

Truly the sun had set in blood upon the Mexican hills. It was night—dark as that which Moses laid upon the land of Egypt—black, dismal, murder-filled night, lighted only by the distant glow of incendiary fires; and out of the dark and the terror, with the cunning of the native coyote, stalked a stealthy, animal-like creature, capable of any crime not requiring courage—Plutarcho Elias Calles, the Red Czar of the Montezumas.

THE RED CZAR OF MEXICO

Who is this man Calles, leader of the Revolutionary Party, the present Stalin of Mexico? Who is this half-breed murderer whose name will be remembered, if at all, only as a synonym for brutality and communism—the illiterate son of a Syrian peddler who by sheer disregard for humanity has secured for himself control of the armed minority? Styled "The Turk" by the Mexicans who suspect he is of alien blood, and therefore never qualified for the Presidency; fresh from the haunts of vice, after a youth of crime and violence; a bandit leader, despised even by Madame Kollontai, the Bolshevik representative, having little by little gained control of the army by the simple process of assasinating his competitors, he announced his candidacy for the Presidency and held an election, in which his opponent, Flores, received the votes, but, as Mr. Calles counted them, he rose to the presidential sash and the palace of Chapultepec. There he entertained and wined and dined with American representatives, chambers of commerce and other organizations which occasionally hold none too laudable conventions in Mexico, where they are shown exactly what the Government wishes them to see, and are then addressed by Calles, who finds it difficult to conceal his contempt for their gullibility.

Having stolen the municipal funds as a village treasurer, Calles now takes charge of the national treasury, from which he has paid out millions of pesos to finance revolution in Nicaragua and communistic propaganda in Mexico and Central America.

Having failed in youth as a primary-school teacher in Guaymas, he later seeks to reform the whole educational system of Mexico and boasts of having closed over 20 colleges.

Having been unsuccessful as a farmer at Santa Rosa, where under his devoted care the ranch became bankrupt, he introduces an agrarian scheme destructive of Mexican agriculture.

Having been a failure as an industrialist in charge of a flour mill at Fronteras, he later issues edicts ruinous to many Mexican industries.

Never having studied economics, he embarks on an economic revolution that has inflicted untold hardship on the Mexican people. Posing as a friend of the Indian, he makes inexcusable attacks upon them. Pretending to be a friend of labor, he merely uses labor, as did Lenin, as a stepping stone to power, and he did not hesitate to slaughter workmen during a Sonora strike, and then having murdered some of them, he forced the rest to return to work for 6 cents a day.

Never having attended any church, he founded a church of his own. Having spent a youth of shiftlessness, dishonesty, and poverty, he has now become a multimillionaire by the wanton seizure of haciendas and farms, of public lands in Vera Cruz, of oil wells, mines, and other valuable interests, in addition to forcing all employees to join a union to which they are obliged to pay 10 percent of their wages—to be managed by him.

Mr. Chairman, this is the power behind the Presidential chair in Mexico City, a man who, lifted into power through the subservience of an American administration, is sustained by the continued sanction of our present Government. He it is who is the "deus ex machina"—the man who pulls the strings—a man who is compelled to live on an island off the coast so that he may not be murdered by the oppressed people; the high-souled liberal who is responsible to the world for the enforcement of the communistic laws that today make the Mexican Government at once the execration and the laughing stock of the civilized world.

DESTRUCTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Under the system of Communist philosophy imposed upon Mexico by the guns of Calles and his official murderers, human liberty has gasped and died. Freedom of religion, of education, of speech, of the press, of assembly, of petition, of individual opportunity are destroyed under the scourge of a persecution that has won for Calles the unenviable blood aureole of a Caligula.

For, according to the prevailing oppressive regulations, the God-fearing citizen has practically no rights that anyone is bound to respect. No religious organization may own land or mortgages or any other productive property. If it have any money, however little, it may not invest it, and if it retain it, it will be stolen. Though its members be teachers, it may not conduct schools. Though it be dedicated to the poor and the lowly, it may not administer charities. Though in need of help, it may not solicit funds. Services are permitted only in certain authorized buildings, so that for future purposes the officials of the Government may know who the ministers of religion may be. But the right to wear a distinctive garb is denied, so that the poor may not recognize the spiritual leaders of the people.

If more than 10 persons gather at a house and conduct religious services, the house is confiscated, even though the owner knew nothing of the service. Though the antireligious constitution was never approved by the people or their representatives, no religious spokesman for the people may criticize the laws or even vote for their repeal. No minister of any creed may hold office or conduct an assembly to petition the Government to modify its tyrannical persecution of all religious faiths. All churches, asylums, orphanages, seminaries, convents, religious schools, and residences, with every object in any way pertaining to religion are confiscated by the parasites now enriching themselves at the expense of Mexico's underprivileged people.

Catholics in particular are spied upon, their wires are tapped, their mail opened, their publications banned, their organizations destroyed, even their secular newspapers suppressed for refusal to uphold the policies of the atheist dictators. Liberty in the American sense is totally nonexistent, for no political group may even adopt a name which indicates its belief in the Creator.

MEXICAN REFUGEES FLEE TO UNITED STATES

With poverty and distress on the increase, with thousands of refugees fleeing across the American border to seek food and shelter and clothing and employment from the relief organizations and overburdened taxpayers of this country, the Mexican Government has destroyed private charity by decreeing that every charitable society of more than 10 persons must be controlled by the money changers now selling the Mexican nation into slavery. Under this system the religious citizen, even if starving, can sustain his life only by the surrender of his faith, for the hope of private charity from religious organizations is destroyed by the provision that no minister of any church may inherit property except from certain blood relatives, and if it be anyhow devised to him, it is appropriated by the political despots now misgoverning the land. As a result of such policies, I am informed that Mr. Calles is now the third largest depositor in the Bank of England. Even the Home for the Aged in Mexico City, founded by the wife of President Diaz, was ordered closed, and then reopened after the aged destitute had been deprived of the gentle ministrations of the Little Sisters of the Poor who, upon their expulsion, sought refuge in Cuba and in Spain.

In Querétaro all public employees who are Catholic or married by a priest are subject to dismissal. Federal employees have been discharged for failure to parade in the Government's public demonstrations against God and religion. Internes at the Juarez Hospital have been dismissed from their treatment of the invalid poor because they refused to take part in a similar anti-God ceremony, and, since under the law the Mexican physician is obliged to complete his internship in the country, this is equivalent to the disbarment of decent doctors from their profession.

In Huijutla, imprisonment is the penalty for teaching religion. The Mexican Indians, whose ancestors, under the guidance of religious teachers, produced eminent scholars in all walks of life, are given small pieces of property only on condition that they promise never to go to Mass or receive the sacraments of their church. If they refuse, and a large proportion of them refused with scorn, their humble homes are sacked for religious images, which are confiscated and burned.

GOVERNMENT MURDER POLICY IN MEXICO

The fidelity of the Mexican clergy to God has been characteristic of them. For instance, from 1926 to 1929 over 200 priests were murdered because they clung to their faith. The Government had given them every inducement to apostatize. They were offered Government positions. As educated men, they were offered special privileges and rights and incomes. They were threatened with prison, exile, death, if they refused to yield. Surely must they have had something of the constancy of the early Christians under Nero, for not one surrendered his belief to the Government's blandishments or threats. The Mexican representatives, paid and unpaid, in this country may shout their denials of persecution to the top of the Washington Monument, but they cannot wash from their hands the blood of the 29 priests murdered in the last few months or the hundreds of clergy wantonly butchered within the past few years—crimes for which no murderer was ever tried!

MEXICAN AGENTS DISTORT FACTS

Yes, Mr. Chairman, the hirelings of the Mexican soviet continue to say that there is no persecution in Mexico. Piously they raise their eyes in holy amazement and deny that there is any violence done to any citizen because of his faith. If I were a diplomat or a politician, I might say that these Mexican representatives are unconsciously misinformed as to the true facts. But being an ordinary garden variety of Philadelphia lawyer, who spent most of his years since coming to the bar in prosecuting criminals and detecting fraud, I have no hesitancy in asserting that the Mexican hirelings are a rather nondescript variety of undiluted and unmitigated liars.

Any paid propagandist who could not manage a more plausible falsehood than these Mexican representatives should make a reasonable and occasional effort to tell the truth.

No persecution in Mexico! Mr. Speaker, let me read to you and the House this excerpt from an article by S. L. A. Marshall in the New York Times:

The question is asked whether religious persecution is occurring in Mexico. The answer depends upon one's understanding of the word "persecution" and the permutations whereby that which is, in fact, persecution may be made to appear as an act of spotless legality.

As a case in point, five men were killed in a riot while I was at the village of Guadalupe. The riot was precipitated when a squad of judicial police was assigned to take inventory of the abbot's furniture. Their method of going about what should have been a peaceful mission was to break in a window and then arrest the abbot for not opening the door. Word spread about the village that the "red shirts" were murdering the abbot, a thousand Indians swarmed to the rescue, and the deaths resulted.

Or let me take you to Querétaro. The hour is sun down, and we walk down the long hill from Convent de la Cruz where Maximilian awaited his firing squad. Slogging toward us comes a file of Indians. Feet bare save for their hand-made guaraches, faces muffled to the eyes in their drab zarapes, they walk mechanically like men moving in sleep, glancing neither right nor left. The guard halts them opposite us.

We ask: "What crime have these men committed?"

The guard answers: "They were caught breaking into a church."

"Did they intend to rob the church?"

"No; they wished to enter and pray."

The churches of Querétaro are padlocked. The Indians violated property in State custody by attempting to enter. It was all quite according to law, and hence no persecution was involved!

Yes; it was all legal, all proper and chivalrous according to the military soviet now misgoverning the land beyond the Rio Grande. As Benen once wrote in the Far East:

You may speak of Christ to the savage, you may raise the Cross on his land,
To the Yukon go, to the Ganges go, but halt at the Rio Grande!
The Mongol will never molest you, you are safe with the dark Malay;
But bring Christ's sign to the Mexican line and a "gentleman" bars your way.

You may build a hut in the jungle and kneel at your altar there,
And a barbarous chief will thank you for teaching the ways of prayer;
But speak of their God to the children in Our Lady's land of the South,
And a highly "civilized" señor will show you his pistol's mouth.

No Indian rajah jails you if he sees you with stole and pyx;
You will find no Dyak head-hunters thieving your crucifix;
The convert redskin's honor is free of the robber's smirch—
It takes a "civilized" señor to strip the walls of a church.

Ay, sometimes the heathen's sword blade has martyred the priest and nun;
In a raw and ignorant frenzy the puerile thing was done;
But this is no band of Zulus that down on the orphanage swoops—
'Tis a highly "civilized" señor with his highly "chivalrous" troops.

You may speak in Mexico City in the name of Lenin the man,
You may speak in the name of Mammon, you may speak in the name of Pan,
You may speak in the name that is legion, you may speak in the name of hell
And you're safe. But speak in the name of Christ—there's a different tale to tell.

The teaching that tamed the vandal, the spirit that chastened the Goth,
The wisdom that gave us Christendom, sole check on man's lust and wrath,
You may spread it in cave or igloo, but not in your Mexican school—
It displeases a "civilized" señor and it's banned by his "civilized" rule.

To Christ in His living members, Good Friday comes anew.
To be honored thus by the world's dark hate is proof of their lineage true.
The spittle is flung on the Kingly Face, the thorns pressed down on the brow,
And Our Lady of Guadalupe mourns—she is Mother of Sorrows now.

"I must follow the laws of the nation", he says, and so echoes the cry
Of the Deicide rabble: "We have a law, and by that law let Christ die!"
So the minions of Nero were righteous? And Robespierre's ethics unflawed?
"Give unto Caesar", your gospel runs, "the things of both Caesar and God."

And the gentle women you harass—we know them and know their works.
Do you hate them for serving, fearless, where the deadly fever lurks?
Do you hate them for shielding the orphan, for keeping the child's soul white?
Is your warfare waged against them for this, O most doughty knight?

You may speak Christ's Name to the savage, you may raise the Cross on his land,
To the Ganges go, to the Yukon go—but halt at the Rio Grande!
Eat bread and salt with the tribesman—he will honor and guard his guest;
But break God's Bread for peon unfed—there's a señor's gun at your breast!

"A DANIELS COME TO JUDGMENT"

To add to the burden of the poor people of Mexico in their fight for freedom of conscience, our Government has sent as our Ambassador to that country a man who apparently is intellectually incapable of understanding Mexico, its people, or its traditions. Without impugning his motives, it is at least amazing that at the very time the people of Mexico are being persecuted for attempting to practice any form of religion, at a time when the Mexican Government is admittedly imprisoning and mistreating innocent men and women for daring to display any faith in a Creator, when Government employees and medical students are discharged for refusal to join in official public manifestations against God, and Americans are deprived of freedom of worship, our erratic Ambassador, according to an Associated Press dispatch of last Sunday, blandly and inanely says:

They—

the Mexican people—

deny there has been any religious persecution.

As a sample of ambassadorial stupidity, Mr. Speaker, there is a choice morsel for you. Actually the lists of official outrages upon Mexico's persecuted people show that thousands upon thousands of crimes from murder to mere overnight kidnaping have been committed by the Government officials in the name of communism and atheism in Mexico. Our Ambassador somehow never hears of them, although millions in every country in the world have the actual proofs of their perpetration and there are affidavits here in this city citing the abuses to Americans.

In addition to this, in the Weekly News Sheet of April 12, sent free through the American mails by the Mexican Ministry of Foreign Affairs, there is a copy of a radio speech by our Ambassador in which he turns press agent for the Mexican communists in an effort to round up some trade for the Rotary Convention in Mexico and says:

* * * They—

are going forward in education.

And so forth. And yet, at the very time he is uttering these words, Mexico is dedicated to a system of socialistic education that, as I shall show you in a few minutes, instills hatred of Americans into the minds of the young, that boasts that God is excluded from Mexico, that brings the most perverse forms of degenerate immorality into the classrooms, and compels the children to greet their teachers with the morning salutation, "Good day, teacher, there is no God!"

President Roosevelt knows all this—or he should. And yet he smiles and smiles and plays Pollyanna while men and women die and little children suffer in body and in soul.

COLLEGE STUDENTS CONDEMN MEXICAN OPPRESSION OF LABOR

It is but natural that the educated citizens of Mexico should condemn the tyranny now prevalent there. A strong group of college students arose to protest the 6-year plan, but the newspapers, completely cowed by the Government, refused to carry a line concerning the students' action. The Theresian College for Women in Mixcoac was, only a year ago, surrounded by Government agents who announced that they had come to assume control. The students, knowing the Government and its agents, refused to submit, locked themselves in the building, held their position for 5 days, and faced starvation as a protest against the closing of their school. Three hundred of them pledged themselves to die as martyrs rather than submit to the sacking of their college by a group of God haters. Fearing that the example of this brave revolt might inflame other student groups and dreading the possibility of this news reaching the outside world, the Government made the students a number of promises. If they submitted, their school was to be left untouched and their rights respected. At the end of the fifth day the 300 young women accepted the promises and left the school. The moment they had done so the Government violated its pledges and seizure and confiscation ended the existence of their beloved institution.

Is it any wonder, Mr. Chairman, that the Federation of University Students of Mexico, in Mexico City on February 25 last, issued this manifesto?—

The people of our country suffer misery and hunger. Innumerable working men's strikes have been called all over Mexico. The Workingmen's Syndicate of the El Mantes region, in the hacienda of El Mante, property of Plutarco Elias Calles; in the hacienda San Fernando, property of Rodolfo Elias Calles, in the hacienda El Guayalejo, property of Aaron Saenz; and in the well-known contracting company, the F. Y. U. S. A., whose principal stockholders are Calles, Saenz, and their political associates; in all these centers of production the laborers have tried in vain to improve their working conditions by means of unsuccessful attempted strikes. Their petitions have been rejected by all the above-mentioned property owners who are no others than the very ones who preach official socialism and who call themselves the "deliberators" of the proletariat. This fact completely proves the selfishness of official socialism and clearly proves before public opinion that the laboring classes are yet the victims of the abuses and the vexations committed by the men in power—the protégés of Calles.

CHILDREN DEBAUCHED BY PERVERSE SEX TEACHINGS

You can readily understand the fear that today grips the youth of Mexico when you remember that Mexican children in primary coeducational grades have been stripped naked to illustrate the facts of sex. According to writers in American publications, animals have been introduced into the classrooms to further the same ends. As stated by a writer of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin for March 19, 1935, (p. 14):

Sex education is being frankly propagated as social education. Children just out of the kindergarten are to study nude pictures of men and women, with the inscription "This is nature."

Children in some localities were even taken to maternity hospitals to witness that which in all other countries is considered to be in the exclusive domain of the physician. One child went mad as a result of this experience.

This sexual system began under Tomas Garrido Canabal, as Governor of Tabasco, and extended to Sonora, where Calles' son is Governor, and in at least eight other States in accordance with instructions of Secretary of State Bassolls, who enforced it in the Federal District until stopped by the protests and demonstrations of some 60,000 outraged parents.

The Mexican consul general who these days apparently has a set-up line of type waiting—like a trained firehorse—which reads: "It is untrue. I deny it, whatever it was," Well, the Mexican consul general denied these facts when news of them first reached the United States. Unfortunately for the official Mexican denial man, his denial contradicted the Mexican press and his own State records.

The Secretary of Public Education in Mexico issued in January of this year a pamphlet in support of sexual education prescribing for teachers the official program for sexual instruction. This, as published in Excelsior, of Mexico City, January 9, 1934, ran a set of headings for boys of the sixth grade in primary schools that are too obscene to be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the United States Congress, and a more detailed list for sixth-grade girls which was even more indecently specific. It included the minutest detail of every organ and function concerning propagation of the species. It also contained such naked details of sex as are taught only in medical schools of civilized countries.

Excelsior, of January 14, 1934, informs us, moreover, that the Secretariat of Education was distributing gratis to all Mexican children, thousands of pamphlets on sexual education and other productions, which even Excelsior refrains from describing because, as it states:

We feel that the ribbon of the typewriter on which we would type them would turn from black to red. They are calculated to awaken the most brutal instincts and excite the most feverish passions of lust.

That the Secretary of Education and General Calles' favorite, Governor Garrido Canabal, of Tabasco, did prescribe and have enacted the naked exposure of the sexes in mixed schools for object lessons in sexual instruction, the consul general in El Paso may find recorded in Excelsior and Universal and the general Mexican press; and any of the 400 Mexican mothers who braved Bassolls' soldiers to protest to him against these outrages will tell the consul all about it.

He can get it also from the 25 schools of Mixcoac, in the Federal District, that went unanimously on strike when Bassolls rejected the parents' protests; and from the 600 in the city school that revolted against their director of sexual methods, denouncing her as a "she-wolf", and from all the daily papers which record these events.

But all this, and more, and worse, the consul knows very well. He also knows that this is the meaning of the socialistic education which his headmaster Calles is just now having his Congress inject into what they call the Mexican constitution. And yet he denies what all the world knows to be true!

GRAVES OF DEAD MUST BE MARKED BY A NUMBER

Indeed, so inhuman is this Government, dominated by men who for 30 pieces of silver would not hesitate to burn a house or cut a throat, that they have even disturbed the ashes of the dead. Monuments of faith have been demolished and in certain sections of the country these vandals have ordered the removal of Christian names from the tombstones, so that, forfeiting their repose and even their identity to the communist state, the dead must now be marked by a number.

PERSECUTION OF PROTESTANTS

When you consider that the Catholic faith is the belief of nine-tenths of the Mexican people, you will realize what an easy step it is from persecution of the Catholic to persecution of all other religions. According to the Christian Index of Atlanta, the organ and property of the Baptists of Georgia, in its issue of November 15 last, the Baptist missions were closed because of the Socialist program of education and the law on religion. That my colleagues in this House may know the extent to which the Mexican dictators have carried their excesses against decency and religion, I feel that I should read to you part of the announcement:

* * * The Government of Mexico has put on an extensive socialistic program of education throughout the Republic. They have placed a ban on the teaching of all religions. The Bible is excluded from all schools, and they have now closed our Baptist Theological Seminary at Saltillo. All church properties being federalized, they have passed into the hands of the Government. Some of our Baptist churches have already been taken over as offices for school superintendents, mayors, or other public officials, and the Mexican flag is now flying from the steeples of Baptist churches. * * *

The Mexican Government is determined to exclude Catholicism in all of its phases from the Republic, and in doing so, of course, they are excluding all Baptists, Presbyterians, and Methodists alike. * * *

The Protestant Review, Puerto Rico Evangelico, which had hitherto been a defender of Calles, now denounces his Government, complaining that Protestants are prevented from placing crosses and inscriptions in their cemeteries and that Christianity is "shackled in the dungeon of governmental tyranny." And last fall it was reported that the Methodist school at Guadalajara has also been closed, while even the Mormon meeting houses have been closed in Chihuahua, despite the fact that the Mormons were in genuine accord with the requirements of the law on religious worship.

ANTI-JEWISH POLICY

It is apparent, too, that anti-Semitism is raising its ugly head with the benediction and approval of those high in the councils of the Mexican Government. The writer to whom

I referred a few minutes ago noted in the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin for March 20 that as he was inspecting some projects with a central department official, the Mexican pointed to a street of small shops near the National Palace and said:

In 2 years all this will be changed. These shops are now run by Jews. We are widening the street and rebuilding the stores. When they are open again there will be no Jews.

Very justly and wisely has the editor of the American Hebrew condemned the Mexican persecution in vigorous terms. But remembering the perennial perseverance of the Children of Israel, I imagine that it might have been more accurate to say that the Jews will be there after there are no more Calles officials left to persecute them.

A MILLION PROTESTS

The protests that have deluged our State Department and the White House in hundreds of thousands, and by this time totaling millions of our citizens, have been representative of every religion, of every profession, of every station of life in America. Catholics, Protestants and Jews have not hesitated to raise their voices in vigorous and emphatic demand that our Government arouse itself to the fact that the Rio Grande is now our bolshevist border and communistic propaganda is daily being poured across the boundary into our country. To say that America has no right to intervene is entirely missing the point. No one has ever asked for American intervention and no one expects it. But, nevertheless, President Roosevelt has it in his power to stop the Mexican persecution if he has the will to do so. Mr. Speaker, Americans are being robbed and murdered—and yet the White House remains silent, timidly hoping that things will somehow right themselves.

Outstanding Americans like Newton D. Baker, Alfred E. Smith, Bainbridge Colby, Prof. Carlton J. H. Hayes, Roger W. Straus, Fiorello LaGuardia, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, and others have not been so timorous in asserting human rights. Independent newspapers throughout the land have repeatedly condemned the Mexican Government policy.

Some weeks ago 500 clergymen, 5 Catholic and 495 of other faiths, signed a statement of condemnation. In Detroit a meeting was held at which the speakers were Catholics, Protestants, and Jews, and later in Brooklyn, a meeting was held in which the speakers were a Presbyterian minister, a Jewish rabbi, and a Catholic layman, the resolution of protest being offered by a prominent Methodist layman. Innumerable mass meetings of protest have been held in every State.

At least five States, Arizona, Illinois, New York, Massachusetts, and Maryland, have adopted resolutions demanding an inquiry into the Mexican situation.

Rabbi Philip Bernstein, who recently returned from Mexico, in a strong protest against the Mexican persecution during a recent sermon in Temple B'rith Kodesh in Rochester, N. Y., gave a luminous illustration of how the Mexican antireligion laws affect individual cases. He said:

I was standing in the antechamber of the priest's office in a little church on the Avenue Enrico Martinez, in Mexico City, when a girl rushed in weeping. She begged the secretary to let her see the priest at once, for her mother was dying and the last rites had to be administered immediately. The secretary explained in as kindly a manner as possible that the priest could not come for many, many hours. He reminded her that according to the law of Mexico there was only one priest allowed for every 50,000 inhabitants and that the priest, working day and night, could not adequately care for the needs of so many people. Others also were dying and this girl's mother would have to wait her turn. "But my mother may die in the meantime", sobbed the girl. "I am sorry", said the secretary, his face expressing sorrow and pity, "but we cannot help it."

Here was the first striking and tragic evidence of religious persecution in Mexico. A recent governmental interpretation of the antireligious constitution of 1917 limits the priests in most of the Mexican States to 1 to 50,000 of population. Obviously, no priest can serve so many people. In certain States of Mexico, as, for example, Sonora, Tabasco, Vera Cruz, Yucatan, and several others, not a single priest is permitted to officiate. How in the face of these facts known to every Mexican, President Cardenas can deny the existence of religious persecution in Mexico is hard to understand. That it was insincerity rather than ignorance which prompted his public denial recently is revealed clearly by the fact that on the very day he issued his denial to the assembled foreign correspondents, the press announced that several additional churches had been confiscated by the Government for secular purposes.

Is it any wonder that Rev. Dr. W. W. Van Kirk, of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, in an address before the State Federation of Women's Clubs in Buffalo, declared that Mexico is "bent on the extermination of all religion" and that the time has come "to think less of the things that divide us and more of the things that unite us"?

EFFORTS TO DEGRADE MEXICAN CHILDREN

The intent of the Calles faction to reduce the youth of Mexico to complete atheism and communism is evidenced by the fact that, as I told you a few minutes ago, in the State schools the children are not only debauched by public instruction in immorality, but they are taught to recite antireligious verses, just as our children recite the multiplication table. For example, "Uno, dos; no hay Dios", or as we might translate it, keeping the rime, "One, two, three; no God for me"!

Mr. Chairman, you can read the purpose of this campaign against all religion in the succinct and blasphemous utterance of a public official, Arnulfo Perez, of Tabasco, who said: "The revolution means to burn and destroy the images of the saints, to grab from the paws of religion all men, women, and children, to fight the clergy and—we must courageously say it—fight God." And you can find a real clue to the Mexican Government's attitude and intent supplied by the Calles' Governor of Tabasco, now a member of the Mexican cabinet, who gave his paternal blessing to his three sons in typical fashion when he named them "Lenin", "Lucifer", and "Satan."

MEXICAN GOVERNMENT UNITES WITH RUSSIA

There seems to be no doubt that the entire Mexican campaign against God and morality is sponsored by communist Russia. Ignoring such childish extremists as the Under Secretary of Public Education, Ignatio Garcia Tellez, who issued an order that, in deference to communism, all offices of the department must use only red ribbons on their typewriters, yet it is true that original documents are at hand in both Baltimore and Washington showing a definite link between Calles, supreme chief of the Mexican revolution, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. The Soviet Union is described in these letters written on official stationery of the Permanent Commission of the Mexican Congress and signed by the actual secretaries of that body as "The Fatherland of the Workers of the World." It is recommended in this message, meant to be a confidential communication to all State governors, that any offense toward communist adherents is to be avoided in view of important diplomatic and commercial negotiations now under way between the Mexican Government and Joseph Stalin, head of the Third International in Moscow. In another of these documents it is disclosed that the sexual and socialistic educational program of the Mexican Government is a concrete, carefully planned preparation for the dictatorship of the proletariat.

OFFICAL MEXICAN PROOF OF SOVIET DOMINATION

You will doubtless be interested in this copy of a circular letter to local legislatures from the Permanent Commission of the Congress of the United States of Mexico. The circular is signed by the two secretaries of the commission. It is dated October 2, 1934. I quote from this official circular the following, in translation:

This honorable permanent commission of the Chamber of Deputies has resolved to express to you that, making ourselves the echo of the ideology that is supported by the division general, Plutarco Elias Calles, supreme chief of the Mexican revolution, we advise you to have conferences with the C. C. governors in their respective states, so that secretly a census may be made of the so-called "Knights of Columbus", with the address of their homes, as well as the so-called "Knights of Guadalupe" and the most prominent Catholics, who at a ripe moment might constitute a danger to the dictatorship of the proletariat toward which we are going. On the other hand, all persecution against the communist elements of the Third International of Moscow shall be suspended, because our revolutionary government is having communications with Joseph Stalin in order to resume conferences, commercial and political and ideologic agreements at this very time with the great Soviet Russia, mother country of the Workers of the World. * * * It should not escape your notice, esteemed colleagues, that it is necessary to act with extreme caution and special secrecy, because the interests of a whole country are found under our immediate responsibility. * * * Before finishing the present, please keep in mind that this permanent commission will back you against the local executives if quarrelsome or fearful.

And that red socialism in a most perverse form is the primary objective of the soviet group in Mexico is evidenced by this next document, a State dispatch addressed to the governors of the State and municipal presidents by the secretariate general. Dated May 23, 1933, it reads as follows:

By express agreement of the national executive committee of our N. R. P. and superior of the C. division general, Plutarco Elias Calles, supreme chief of the Mexican Revolution, you shall take cognizance that you are to prepare the elements at your disposal for the establishment of the sexual education as the forerunner of the socialistic school which will be implanted when the next government assumes office. This measure is of supreme priority (Es de gran transcendencia) to prevent the great revolutionary family from being divided by fights of merely political ambition. The reactionary element will be frightened and will make the game easy for us.

In addition to this, Mr. Speaker, the following communication, under the state seal of Querétaro, will indicate the communist type of dictatorship now misgoverning the unfortunate people of our sister Republic. My translation is liberal:

By order of the governor, I manifest to you, that the agreement reached by you with General Calles is transcendental, and its realization with admirable exactness will be the definite victory of our cause.

Nothing is better as a banner to accomplish the dictatorship of the proletariat than the systematic attack against the clergymen, the Knights of Columbus, and of Gaudalupe, without forgetting the Catholic parishioners as their necessary aids.

The persecution of this element will impress the workers in our favor, and the socializiation will be finished "with a golden brooch"—"con-broche de oro."

The socialistic school and the sexual education will be magnificent auxiliaries in the endeavor, etc.

(Signed) FERNANDO ZAPATA ARJONA.

You will see how thoroughly this soviet campaign against all religious belief is carried on when I read to you this translation of the oath extorted from all teachers in Mexican schools at the expense of their positions:

I * * * in the presence of the Directorate of Federal Education, solemnly declare that I will accept without any sort of limitation the program of the socialistic school, and that I will be a propagandist and defender;

I declare that I am an atheist, an irreconcilable enemy of the Roman Catholic Apostolic religion, and will do all in my power to destroy it, uprooting from the conscience all religious cult, and that I am disposed to fight against the clergy wherever and whenever it may be necessary;

I declare that I am disposed to take a principal part in the campaign of "defanaticizing" (desfanatizacion) and will attack the Roman Catholic Apostolic religion wherever it might be manifested;

Equally, I shall not allow any religious practice whatsoever to be carried on in my home, nor shall I permit the existence of images; I shall not permit any of my household who may be under my paternal power to assist at any act of a religious character.

I repeat the avowal of my full mind.

JANUARY 23, 1935.

This is what Ambassador Daniels calls "going forward in education."

COMMUNISTIC POSTERS

Even the posters that are placed in strategic positions for the intimidation of the people are Russian and communistic in their inspiration. The rhetorical bombast of Mexico's leaders is the language of sovietism. Official oratory bristles with the verbiage of class unrest. Bookstore windows bulge with Marxist literature. The banner and scythe adorn public buildings and political posters, as you can see by these pictures of them which I hold in my hand. Indeed, the very display of Communist posters by the red artists in Mexico was held in a building which the Government agents proudly point out to gaping American tourists and convention delegates as a newly erected structure, no reference being made to the fact that it was once one of the great Jesuit colleges of the city.

Handbills are distributed urging the youth to despise their parents who forbid them to enter the schools of the revolution and hold them in slavery to religion's fanatic bonds. For example, one reads:

Break the bestial yoke of him you call father and of her you call mother and run to the schools of the revolution where socialist masters will teach you to be free.

Every department has sent out a questionnaire to all teachers and directors, officials and employees in schools, banks, public utilities, and all industries demanding that they state whether they profess, practice, or propagate the principles of the revolution; whether they ever attended church or Mass or any other religious service or permit their wives or children to do so; whether they ever took part in religious processions or had relatives who were clergymen or enemies of the revolution. There is a long list of similar soul-searching in order to secure absolute certainty that none but an unadulterated, antireligious communist shall hold office or position in Mexico, and that wherever the Government's power can reach there shall be excluded from position and economic employment all who are even suspected of belief in God.

BIBLE EXCLUDED FROM MAILS

In addition to this, there is further evidence of the communistic spirit of the military dictatorship now holding the people in subjection in the recent governmental edict that all works or publications teaching a religious idea are to be excluded from the mails. This decree excludes the Bible, the Imitation of Christ, the works of Dante, Shakespeare, Milton, Luther, Calvin, Wesley, St. Augustine—the works of all ancient and modern Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish religious authors, publications, or newspapers. I have an idea that it would exclude even copies of this address I am now making, though it might be good Mexican diplomacy to permit the RECORD of the American Congress to slip by. I suggest that some of you send it down there and see what happens. But you will first have to delete the Chaplain's prayer.

Our Post Office Department has weakly complied with the Cardenas orders and promptly informed some of our most worthy American publications of their exclusion from Mexico, even while Mexican propaganda attacking religion and casting slurs on Americans is carried free in the United States mails. How long is it going to take the administration to wake up to the fact that our public officials are not the masters but the servants of the people who are paying the bills for the mails and all other departments of the Government?

Not without reason, Mr. Speaker, has the State of Arizona served warning on the American people that communism is becoming deeply rooted south of the American border. Senator W. E. Patterson stated, according to the Phoenix Gazette for March 6, that handbills are being distributed in Phoenix practically threatening death to Mexicans in the United States who sign petitions asking for investigation into the true facts in Mexico. Communism in Mexico is no less audacious than its parent in Europe. National boundary lines merit no respect from the spawn of red internationalism.

INTIMIDATING AMERICANS

As another illustration of this communistic disregard of sovereign national borders, the Mexican consul at San Bernardino, Calif., had done his utmost to deter American citizens of Mexican origin from attendance at religious services held on our American soil. He inserted large advertisements in newspapers warning residents of southern California against being present at one of the religious festivals so beloved of the people of that region. According to the testimony given by the mayor and police chief of San Bernardino, it was a clear case of intimidation and threats exercised by a foreign functionary with respect to the rights of individuals domiciled within the borders of the United States. Our present administration did just nothing about it and the State Department did its best to keep the committee from including this fact in its report. Meanwhile, the Mexican consul at Los Angeles had similarly interfered in our country. Finally American indignation caused the Mexican Government to transfer to Tucson, Ariz., and to Denver, Colo., these hirelings who should have been ignominiously sent home by our Government, had there been any real American statesmanship in control of American destinies.

SCHOOL BOOKS TEACH HATRED FOR AMERICA

As a singularly impressive illustration of the soviet communistic hatred for the United States being instilled into young Mexican hearts, I now hold in my hand copies of the school books, or "readers", as we call them, used today in the socialistic Mexican schools. These, published only a few weeks ago, are for the first and second grades and are entitled "Socialistic School Series." Written by Maria Luisa Vera and Jose Munoz Cota, who call themselves "Miembros de la Federacion de Escritores Proletarios", the book for the first grade is dedicated to the "youth of the proletariat" and they are replete with revolutionary doctrine, attacking religion and America.

I have not the time to read to you all of the "red" attacks made upon religion and authority in these books. It is only necessary to point out that the State of Texas is mentioned for particular execration. Under the title "The Song of Cotton", there is a vicious attempt to stir up in the minds of Mexican children a hatred for Americans as the "white" race and for the plantation owners of Texas in particular. It might be a good thing for you gentlemen from that great State to remember that just south of your border the school books are teaching the youth that your plantation owners are exploiting the groaning workers as "blood drips from their hearts", and verses are printed in these school texts expressing the hope that "the red glow of the sun will be covered by the red blood" of the plantation owners and employers of Texas. What a gentle batch of murderers are these Mexican leaders, who, like Sir Francis Drake, are "as mild-mannered men as ever scuttled ship or cut a throat." Doubtless you will be at least mildly interested in the fact that the children in the socialistic schools of Mexico are taught that it is American throats that need cutting—a real bit of nice, official Mexican discrimination.

So too, in this other school book, at page 103, there appears a story of the protest of the laboring class of Chicago against "excessive work." In part, it reads:

> The police were given orders to disperse the multitude without the authorities taking into account the fact that there were defenseless women and children in the crowd. An enormous confusion took place; shrieks of women and children mingled with the cries of the wounded men. The ground was covered with the bodies of murdered men, but the fight for the 8-hour day had been won.

This story is accompanied by a picture of a marching crowd of laboring people with banners, one bearing an inscription to the "Victims of Chicago" and another, "May the First."

How far Mexican communism has gone in its hatred for the United States can be seen in these two instances. What remains of the policy of the "good neighbor" when the official school teaching is thus deliberately intended to arouse racial and international hatred?

Even the fulsome flattery of our forgetful Ambassador who speaks of such education as "building for all the tomorrows" cannot conceal the fact that official red Mexico is today fomenting in the school hate for America and Americans. There is something more to this propaganda than mere dislike of the American. In the very text you can see the sinister leer of Moscow. For example, in one paragraph, describing the cruelty of the mill owner, it says that "if the Negroes suffer in the fields of cotton (in Texas), in the textile mills they suffer still more cruelly." Here is a typical passage:

> But the employer thinks only of making himself rich. He exploits the machinery of his factory in order to amass money. He never gives a thought to the workers who are left to die of hunger.

Mr. Speaker, I hold no brief for the wrong sort of capitalism any more than I do for the wrong kind of labor theories, but if the Mexican Government and school authorities wish to educate their people for the dictatorship of the proletariat according to the principles of Lenin and Stalin, why do they not call attention to the so-called "capitalistic abuses" in the factories of Monterrey and Mexico City? What about the capitalist Calles, who murdered laboring men during a strike? What about his compelling others to return to work for a daily wage of 6 cents? Where did he make his millions—a bandit leader with no mental attainments worthy of serious mention? What about his rich holdings in England and other countries? What of the exploitation of Mexican workers? No reference is made to these facts. But Mexican children too young to discriminate are being taught that the United States, that Texas and Chicago, are names synonymous with slavery, race hatred, cruelty, and exploitation.

GOOD-NEIGHBOR POLICY DESTROYED

Mexican officials ask Americans to visit Mexico, to be so recreant to our own American principles as to spend our money as tourists in a land whose Government thus makes open and vicious attacks upon our country. They succeeded in inducing our Ambassador to act the part of a travel agent, to laud this sort of teaching, and to extend the welcoming hand to such Americans as are unpatriotic enough and foolhardy enough to run the risk of involving America in the broils of a foreign communist state.

Oh, the White House talks about the "good neighbor" policy! But apparently the policy does not work both ways. We must be a good neighbor to all the world at the expense of the American taxpayer, but the Mexican Government is charitably excused from displaying any good neighborliness on its own account.

Is it possible, Mr. Speaker, that the President of the United States can be ignorant of all this? And if not, how long does he expect the patience of Americans to continue? Why is there such subservience to the communists of Mexico? What has he done about the murders of the Americans, Ahern, Wilkins, and Carpenter? Why does he fail to realize that Americans have been murdered and mistreated in Mexico? Why did he (or someone purporting to speak for him) unceremoniously refuse to receive the protesting delegation of the Knights of Columbus, an organization of three-quarters of a million American men, who proved their patriotism in time of war? Like England and France, why does he not instruct our representatives to conduct an investigation into the present denial to Americans of freedom of worship in at least 14 Mexican States? If he could insist upon this in Russia, why not closer to home? Why does he not see that no permanent arrangements for the lease or purchase of Magdalena Bay as a naval base in Lower California are possible with the present treaty-breaking Mexican Government? Why does he encourage our blundering Ambassador? For the President thus constantly to shirk his sworn responsibilities to the millions who are protesting such attacks upon Americans and upon civil and religious liberty is not only aiding and abetting the red enemies of America, but seriously endangering the peace and happiness of our own people. If, as a statesman, he will not think of human rights, let him, as a politician, think of the next election.

NO ONE DEMANDS INTERVENTION

Lest our present position, as Americans, be misunderstood, let me now reassert that it is not the purpose of any American to seek intervention in the purely internal affairs of any other sovereign nation. No resolutions sent to the President have demanded that. It has never been our policy even to attempt to impose our American political principles on any people. While it is true that our Government intervened to place the bandit minority in power and by the present shipment of arms and ammunition from our munition plants to the Mexican dictators, by the sale of gold and silver, and also by the undisciplined and random utterances of its accredited representatives, still actively intervenes to sustain the tyrannous existence of the communist subsidiaries now strangling the Mexican Nation, yet speaking for myself and those I represent, we demand no intervention.

The United States Foreign Relations Papers, 1914, disclosed direct Bryan-Wilson activity in arming and urging the rebels, at the very time when Mr. Wilson was delivering beautiful utterances at Swarthmore, Pa., to the effect that "in no part of this continent can any government survive that is stained with blood", and at Mobile, Ala., that "we shall never condone iniquity solely because it may be most convenient for us to do so." This was intervention without the consent of our American people. Of course with Wilsonian consistency, Mr. Wilson, at or about the same time, stated that we should not deny to Mexico the right to spill blood.

PRECEDENTS FOR AMERICAN PROTEST

It is true that there is ample precedent for official protest. The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], a few weeks ago, inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD innumerable instances in which America had used her voice and her influence to defend the down-trodden and the oppressed of every nation and clime. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 1362 and 2747.) The waters of the Caribbean, of Manila Bay, the coasts of China and Ireland, the hills of Kishinev and Hungary, testify to America's warm intercession for the victims of persecution and tyranny. We believe that our American people still love freedom and human rights. We know that they stand aghast as Mexico is engaged in a rabid campaign out of the Soviet manual to destroy freedom and morality. We are forced to realize that American institutions built at tremendous cost are being undermined by a red government that utilizing American broadcasting stations for the dissemination of vile songs and propaganda, boasts that it acts under American sanction. We are aware that such an autocracy, distributing soviet literature through the gratuitous use of our mails, an autocracy so maliciously opposed to all sound ideas of human freedom, is a definite peril to religious and civil liberty in the United States, and a threat to our policy of the "good neighbor" with all the Central and South American Republics.

AMERICAN INTERVENTION MUST BE STOPPED

But yet we do not ask intervention. We ask that intervention be stopped. It was American intervention for the sake of oil or other material interests that turned Mexico toward communism. It is American guns that are turned against the innocent worshipers as they leave the Mexican churches. It is American voices that, making careless and thoughtless statements, have given Latin America the conviction that our Government is in harmony with the murderous minority now seeking to communize the people from Panama to the Rio Grande.

Not intervention, Mr. Chairman, but statesmanship; not interference, but withdrawal of interference is the demand of all liberty-loving Americans toward the wealthy military clique now debauching the lives of the unhappy Mexican people.

The United States Government, which reprimanded England for her price-raising rubber monopoly, which prohibited an English radical from entering America, which now threatens to deport one, which refused recognition to the Soviet until it hypocritically promised to respect liberty of conscience in Russia, which went to war to "make the world safe for democracy" at our expense, which sent battleships to China, which intervened in Cuba, which dominated Haiti and the Philippines, which forbade Chile to mobilize against Peru, which admonished Panama because it objected to its settlement of a boundary dispute with Costa Rica, which furnished arms to Obregon and crushed Huerta—this Government goes serenely on and timidly says, "Nothing can be done about it."

Mr. Chairman, something can be done about anything, if those intrusted with the people's affairs have the vision to see and the courage to act. You do not need force, you do not require an army or a navy, you do not even need to threaten. All that is necessary is a little tactful diplomacy, a little unyielding courage, and a goodly portion of sympathetic understanding of forgotten people. And we on the Republican side of the aisle will continue to demand that something be done about it until the voice of the 40,000,000 Christians and 5,000,000 Jews in America can be heard even in the White House and the State Department.

AMERICAN LEADERS FAIL TO LEAD

The Mexican situation has revealed the hypocrisy of much of the present American Government's talk about liberty. It has revealed the unreliability of some of our press. It has revealed the superficiality of our so-called "liberals". It has revealed the weakness of world-peace programs. It has revealed the weakness of those who should be strongest in defense of the people. It has revealed the lack of courage in our "great men." It has revealed so-called "statesmen" as cheap, fearful, picayune, petty politicians.

The truth can be learned by anyone who seeks it. And the truth about Mexico is the truth of brutality, barbarism, and anti-American radicalism.

I do not know what the attitude of you gentlemen over there may be, but I believe in saying what I think. You may not all agree with me, but you will have no doubt about what I mean. I can see no reason for timidity in talking about civil and academic and religious liberty. I am not awed by childish rumors of the wishes of the President and the Secretary of State. Mr. Speaker, it still is better to be right than to be President. It is said that "orders" have been given to let the Borah resolution die in committee. If that happens to the resolution of the eminent Senator from Idaho, Heaven only knows what will happen to the Mexican resolution that I introduced on February 1, 1935! I suppose orders will be sent to take it out some dark night and drop it into the Potomac from the Francis Scott Key Bridge. My resolution may be buried, but I expect to be here for a little while yet and, like William Lloyd Garrison, "I am in earnest, I will not retract, I will not equivocate, I will not be silent, and I will be heard!"

Has the Secretary of State or the President given orders to the chairman of the committee that no resolutions favoring freedom of conscience in Mexico are to be considered? What does the Secretary of State mean in inferring, as was stated in the review America for March 16 last, that such an inquiry would be an infringement upon the prerogatives of the President of the United States? "To what base uses have we come" when a similar argument was dispatched by the Secretary against the plan for public hearings on the Tinkham resolution asking withdrawal of Soviet recognition, only to have the committee set the date and then cancel the hearings after American witnesses against Soviet propaganda in America had come across the continent from California to testify? Why were the hearings canceled? Who gave the orders? Who is now stifling inquiry into the effects of Mexican communism on the United States of America?

What sort of statesmanship is it that denies to the American public the story of the atrocities cited in the files of the American Embassy and consular offices in Mexico and in those of the United States Naval Intelligence? I challenge the administration and the State Department to make public these outrages on American citizens in Mexico—Americans who had believed that even today the United States Government would have the courage to protect its nationals anywhere in the world.

MEXICO'S PLEDGE TO RESPECT LIBERTY OF CONSCIENCE INDUCED AMERICAN RECOGNITION

Is it not a curious thing that Emilio Portes Gil, Attorney General of the Republic of Mexico, who had the temerity to insult American citizens by sending here at the expense of our taxpayers under the franking privilege of the United States post office propaganda attacking the religious belief of the Mexican people—only, I may add, to discover his document totally refuted by the answer of Bishop Francis C. Kelley, of Oklahoma, in his work, Blood Drenched Altars—I say, is it not strange that Senor Gil should so emphatically deny that America had demanded a promise from Mexico that she would respect liberty of conscience as a prelude to recognition? Mr. Gil—and I remind you that he is the Attorney General of Mexico—this paladin of truth and honor declares that no such promise was ever made.

In order to refresh another official Mexican memory, I will now narrate the facts and read to you the letter that those who were most concerned in it have conveniently overlooked. On January 6, 1916, the United States Senate adopted a resolution calling upon the President to disclose what assurances had been given by the Mexican Government as to the protection of foreigners and citizens, particularly in the free exercise of their religion, in public or in private. On February 17, 1916, the President transmitted to the Senate a letter to himself from the Secretary of State, enclosing various documents. The Secretary's enclosure no. 4, representing a letter from Senor Arredondo, headed "The Confidential Agent of the Constitutionalist Government of Mexico to the Secretary of State of the United States", reads as follows:

Mr. Venustiano Carranza, depositary of the executive power of Mexico, whom I have the honor to represent in this country, has authorized me to say to Your Excellency that his public declarations of December 12, 1914, and June 11, 1915, bear the statement that the Government he represents in its capacity of a political entity, conscious of its international obligations and of its capability to comply with them, has afforded guaranties to the nationals and has done likewise with regard to foreigners and shall continue to see that their lives and property are respected in accordance with the practices established by civilized nations and the treaties in force between Mexico and other countries. That besides the above, he will recognize and satisfy indemnities for damages caused by the revolution, which shall be settled in due time and in terms of justice.

HERE IS THE LETTER WHOSE EXISTENCE MEXICAN AGENTS NOW DENY

The enclosure marked no. 7, referred to in paragraph 7 of the letter of the Secretary of State to the President, is this:

MY DEAR MR. LANSING: Complying with Your Excellency's request asking me what is the attitude of the constitutionalist government in regard to the Catholic Church in Mexico, I have the honor to say that inasmuch as the reestablishment of peace within order and law is the purpose of the government of Mr. Venustiano Carranza, to the end that all the inhabitants of Mexico without exception, whether nationals or foreigners, may equally enjoy the benefits of true justice, and hence take interest in cooperating to the support of the Government, the laws of reform, which guarantee individual freedom of worship according to everyone's conscience, shall be strictly observed. Therefore, the constitutionalist government will respect everybody's life, property, and religious beliefs without other limitation than the preservation of public order and the observance of the institutions in accordance with the laws in force and the constitution of the Republic.

Hoping that I may have honored Your Excellency's wishes, I avail myself of this opportunity to reiterate to you the assurances of my highest consideration.

E. ARREDONDO.

This letter was dated October 8, 1915, and 11 days later Secretary Lansing wrote to Señor Arredondo stating that the President of the United States—

Takes this opportunity of extending recognition to the de facto government of Mexico, of which Gen. Venustiano Carranza is the chief executive.

The final outcome of the Mexican pledge to respect liberty of conscience, a pledge that was iterated and reiterated by the head of the Mexican Government and by its representatives in Washington, appeared when the new constitution of Mexico was adopted by the Carranza party on January 31, 1917, without reference to the people. An inspection of that instrument shows that every pledge made by the representatives of the Mexican Government was deliberately and completely violated. The record made by the Mexican Government since the adoption of the constitution has shown an almost unbroken violation of the rights which the Government promised to respect.

As a result of this recognition, Mr. Speaker, we permitted Carranzista troops to ride on American railroads through United States territory in order to attack Villa, in consequence of which Villa, in reprisal, raided Columbus, N. Mex., killing a number of the citizens and several United States soldiers.

Some politicians certainly have short memories. Mr. Portes Gil now denies all this. So that the record will be in permanent and succinct form, here let me round out this phase of the question by reading to you this article of David Lawrence, the noted Washington correspondent, in the issue of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin for August 19, 1926, showing that even before Mr. Lansing became Secretary of State, religious freedom was made the basis of Mexican recognition:

WILSON AND BRYAN WARNED MEXICANS—RELIGIOUS FREEDOM MADE BASIS OF RECOGNITION OF REPUBLIC IN 1915 BY UNITED STATES—CARRANZA MADE PROMISE

Search of the files of the Department of State in the latest volumes made public shows that both President Wilson and Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan felt that the treatment by the Mexican authorities of Catholics was a subject for informal diplomatic protest by the American Government.

On the whole it shows, however, that the American Government did make religious freedom a condition of the extension of recognition to the Carranza Government, which has since been succeeded by other governments in Mexico.

Secretary Bryan said March 20, 1915: "The President has referred to me your important letters of the 23d of February concerning the present distressing situation in Mexico, with the request that I tell you very definitely what the attitude and acts of the administration have been in the matter of the protection of the rights of conscience and of worship there, a matter in which the administration, I need not say, is deeply interested, as all true Americans must be.

"A democracy must be sustained by education, and, above and beyond all, the full flower of democracy lies in religious freedom, the principle which the builders of our own Republic made the crown of the whole structure.

"This administration is, of course, the servant of the American people. It seeks to be governed by their convictions and by the principles which have governed their political life. It has felt to be its duty to urge upon the leaders of Mexico, whenever an opportunity offered, the principles and methods of action which must underlie all real democracies as they have supported ours.

"The Mexican leaders will certainly know that, in order to command the sympathy and moral support of America, Mexico must have, when her reconstruction comes, just land tenure, free schools, and true freedom of conscience and worship."

In October 1915, when recognition was extended to the Carranza government, the latter gave a written assurance to the Wilson administration that "all the inhabitants of Mexico, whether nationals or foreigners, may equally enjoy the benefits of true justice" and that the new government "will respect everybody's life, property, and religious beliefs."

Again the record shows that in 1915 the Senate of the United States requested the then Secretary of State to secure assurances from the Carranza government, recognition of which was then in question, that the said government, if recognized by the United States, would grant religious liberty to all its—Mexico's—citizens. The Mexican Government recognized our right to make the inquiry and its confidential agent—practically its then Secretary of State—wrote to the Secretary of State, as I have already stated, under date of October 8, 1915, assuring him the constitutionalist government of Mexico would respect religious liberty. The United States Senate accepted this statement and the Carranza government received recognition.

The records of the State Department will show that throughout 1914 and into 1915 up to the time of the written Arredondo pledge, President Wilson delayed recognition of the so-called "constitutional" government of Mexico. It was this pledge, the result of a conversation between Señor Arredondo and Mr. Lansing, who had succeeded Mr. Bryan as Secretary of State, that overcame the last obstacle and paved the way to the prompt recognition of the very government that Mr. Calles now dominates. Sic transit another "scrap of paper." Another pledge to America is broken and our present administration apparently does not care.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR GOES ON RECORD AGAINST MEXICAN POLICIES

I am glad to inform the House that the American Federation of Labor has publicly announced its adherence to the principles of religious and other liberty. Only a few weeks ago, on March 13, 1935, I placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (p. 3582) copies of correspondence between the President of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. William Green, and myself, in which Mr. Green read an emphatic and much-needed lesson to the Federation of Labor in Mexico concerning the principles of liberty.

This is particularly interesting at this time in view of the fact that my resolution, now reposing comfortably in the committee, besides asking our Government to protest against the Mexican war on liberty, requests that the Department of Labor investigate the condition and manner of entrance to this country of aliens in the Mexican border States who may be on relief, occupying positions normally held by American labor or otherwise disemploying our people. There are, for example, approximately 95,000 Mexicans in Bexar County, Tex., in which San Antonio is situated. For over 200 years San Antonio has been a veritable Mecca for Mexicans. Before Texas independence, of course, residents of Mexico had extensive commerce with it as one of their own cities. For the last century they have carried on a traffic with it as if it were one of their own. They like San Antonio, they enjoy visiting it, they respect its people, they think of it in their daily lives. Los Angeles is the only other city in the country which enjoys a similar reputation and it draws chiefly from western Mexico.

There are probably 70,000 Mexicans in Los Angeles, more than 50,000 in Colorado, thousands in Chicago, in the industrial region of northwestern Indiana, and elsewhere in the North, though they naturally prefer the southern climate.

Since the difficulties in Mexico began, there has been a continual exodus to San Antonio. Refugees cross the border at many towns, but San Antonio is their goal. They do not consider such ports of entry as Brownsville, Laredo, Eagle Pass, or Del Rio as goals, but as passage points. They are bound for San Antonio. With such a great affluence as there has been in the last few years, it is impossible to keep track of the numbers, and even if agencies were disposed to do so, it would be difficult to be accurate, for many are reticent about revealing their status, and they can obtain refuge among their own people without a great deal of questioning.

MEXICANS SUPPORTED BY AMERICAN RELIEF AGENCIES

While my figures may be wrong and you may correct me if you think so, I believe 8,000 would be a conservative figure of the number of refugees of all classes now in San Antonio alone. It would probably not be inaccurate to say that there are 5,000 of them receiving some form of relief.

Let us consider that 87,000 Mexicans are normal and legitimate residents of San Antonio. We add to this figure 8,000 refugees of all types. Suppose that 4,000 of these are workers capable of holding some sort of position, who have earning power. The other 4,000 we shall consider as relief subjects, without going into further detail about their status.

The economic condition of the 87,000 normal Mexicans in San Antonio is, at any time, very low. There are some who are rich and some who are well-to-do, and others who are comfortable, but the vast majority must depend upon an income of from a few cents a day to $1 as a maximum. There are many families of from 7 to 12 members who live on $1 a day or less. Under the present depression there is a high percentage of unemployment among these people. The result of these conditions is an abnormal percentage of sickness, including tuberculosis. At the last meeting of the Bexar County Tuberculosis Association it was revealed that San Antonio has the second highest death rate from tuberculosis in the United States.

You can therefore see the urgent necessity for adjusting the Mexican problem without unreasonable delay. A great burden will be lifted from the shoulders of American labor and American charity. Economic losses will be reduced by the return of thousands of Mexicans to their own country. For this reason, then, Mr. Speaker, if not from the higher aspect of human rights, our President and Secretary of State should no longer remain unmoved. And I repeat that my resolution is still awaiting action.

AMERICA IS ON TRIAL

It is a strange thing that while real Americans have the utmost contempt for the hypocritical tenets of red radicalism, yet at our very door the poisonous passion flower of virulent international sovietism blooms under the nurture of a wealthy despotism. The Government of Mexico is a bolshevist and military dictatorship that, just as in Russia, holds the population in subjection without their approval or consent and in defiance of their appeal and protest against the oppression imposed upon them.

Borrowing the words of the United States Supreme Court, we say: "The child is not the mere creature of the State", and back to us from Guadalajara comes the taunt of the red czar of Mexico: "This is selfish doctrine—the children and the youth belong to the community, they belong to the collectivity—the revolution has the inescapable duty to take possession of consciences." This is the lip service rendered to communism by the wealthy military junta now debasing the lives of the poor Mexican people. This is the challenge which they hurl at lovers of freedom in America and throughout the world.

Mr. Chairman, America is on trial before the entire world. Our people are the exponents and protagonists of freedom for all mankind. From us, from this House of Representatives, there must go forth today a mighty roll call, a call not to partisan or political bias but to patriotism and humanity. Why are you timid, you Americans of little faith? Where now is our vaunted love of liberty? Where is our unfettered American press? Where our boasted world peace programs? Where now are our courageous, upstanding, and independent statesmen? Where are those who so incessantly prate about "human rights"?

Remember that every individual, every publication, every statesman, every representative, every organization that supports the Calles campaign of revolution and robbery is his ally. The blood of the martyrs is on their consciences. Those who are driven against the walls and shot down for the crime of loving Christ better than their lives are their victims. The helpless peasants, exiled to the penal islands or massacred for the offense of believing in God, are the prey not only of Calles but of all who are silent while innocent blood drips from their fingers. Take care, men and women of America, lest it happen that there today be men and women and children under the blue skies of Mexico who will yet die, because American leaders lack moral courage!

THE VOICE OF A WASHINGTON

Yes, Mr. Chairman, the Government of Mexico has submitted its case to the consideration of enlightened American opinion. By its own actions, through its own utterances, it must be judged. We have weighed Mexico's official conduct and declarations in the scale of the American principles to which she has appealed for support. What do we find? Can we discover one vestige of freedom in all the land of Mexico?

Liberty as we know it is dead, crushed and lifeless and in its place a degradation of human rights that is not less than persecution and enslavement.

"Such," says a noble descendant of an illustrious family, "such is the slavery that today oppresses our sister nation, Mexico. There a decadent government, controlled by men who know not God nor care for His laws nor the right of men, whose only thought is self-aggrandizement, and who are devoid of every instinct of truth and honor and justice, have taken from the people the right to life, liberty, and happiness. Such was the slavery of ancient Rome when religion was dead, when morality was destroyed, when patriotism was extinguished. But the church enjoined justice in the hearts of masters and forbade hatred in the hearts of slaves, implanting there instead a mutual sense of love and loyalty, and so down through the ages has she stood by the cradle of liberty. She has unflinchingly opposed tyranny and despotism, proclaiming every man to be free and equal in the sight of God. There is nothing in the Catholic Church opposed to the genius of our Government. Here church and state function in highest harmony. Each stands for the betterment of man, for his betterment spiritually and materially. Patriotism and Catholicism to the consistent American Catholic are one and the same thing."

Who was it who declared this truth? A man, Mr. Speaker, whose noble ancestors have written their names in luminous characters into the history of mankind, a man who, honored in our midst, would today be an outcast, an outlaw, a criminal in the land beyond the Rio Grande. These are the words, my colleagues, of the great-grandson of John Augustine Washington, the brother of our first President, Father Richard Washington, now rector of the Chapel of the Sacred Heart at Hot Springs, Va.

But out of the Kremlin at Moscow comes the red doctrine that the citizen is the mere chattel of the dictator, the slave of the ruthless red International. The Soviet agents in Mexico echo the cry. They boast that they have destroyed academic freedom, political equality, religious liberty at our very door. America, they dare to assert, is next.

MOSCOWISM BLOODY AND UNADORNED

Mexican communism no longer hides its grim features. It is Moscowism, bloody and unadorned—the law of the bayonet, the law spoken by the fiery mouth of the musket, the law that gives power of tyranny to a few and misery and slavery to thousands. It is red sovietism undermining the foundations of the New World. We saw it born in Russia, but it was afar off. Now it thunders at our gates.

Persecution of religion is only a step in its program, in the creation of the red dynasty. The Soviet leaders know that communism will be accepted only by men who have their souls crushed out of them, when they are slaves, cowed and hopeless and groveling. It cannot live in a land where men are men, where they can fortify themselves with spiritual strength and stand up and say, "I am free; I am the captain of my soul!"

Mr. Chairman, behind all the persecution in Mexico is red Russia, offering help if Mexico will set up from the Rio Grande to the Panama Canal an association of radical republics. It was not without reason that delegates have been sent by the Mexican dictator to study in Moscow the Russian principles and methods of government. Communism looks across the seas, and observes that here the western world stands open. Why strain at the cross-crowned portals of Poland, Christian and warrior for a thousand years, when Mexico, already subdued by an irreligious and illiterate military clique, is ready at hand, and just beyond, the goal of all Soviet ambition—America, and American riches? The dark forces of the ancient gods, throwing out their vanguards from the battle ground of the Ural Mountains, have carried the war to us. The forces of pagan darkness, of reversalism, of communist animalism are arrayed against reason, against America, against the Christian culture of the new world. The fight is not now on the blood-stained steppes of Siberia, it is at our own door—the fight to save America from the degradation of Russia, a degradation that reduces man to the level of a soulless animal, a communized, high-powered beast. It is the old warfare between the Powers of Light and the powers of darkness, the struggle of freedom against the red czar of Mexico and the Russian Soviet in their mad endeavor to crucify Christian civilization upon the crimson cross of communism!

This, Mr. Chairman and my colleagues of the House, is the perilous situation that today confronts our Nation. I ask the President of the United States, I ask you Members of this Congress, I ask every God-fearing citizen of this country, I ask every friend of liberty in the land: In the name of God and the American Republic, what must be our answer? [Applause.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE].

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, my sole purpose in rising at this time is to read into the RECORD an unusual statement which appears in today's Washington Daily News from the hand of Heywood Broun, and also for the edification of the faithful 15 Members who still remain in the Chamber. Under the consent to speak out of order, I am going to read this article myself instead of sending it to the desk:

"Born while the guns were roaring, some of them not yet quite 17, the youth of France takes up where another generation stopped from wounds and death and exhaustion."

I quote from a press dispatch which reads: "Paris, April 23.—'War babies,' 120,000 strong, streamed to the colors today to swell the number under arms in France to 420,000. In cities and villages throughout the land the conscripts—born while the big guns of the World War were roaring—thronged railway stations, leaving for barracks for the start of their 18-month training period. Gay for the most part, the recruits sang and joked as they said 'au revoirs.' Many carried gifts of candy, cake, and delicacies."

Born while the guns were roaring, some of them not yet quite 17, the youth of France takes up where another generation stopped from wounds and death and sheer exhaustion.

"And how old did you say Pierre was now? Seventeen his next birthday? I suppose he must be quite big by now. It's years since I saw him. And yet it seems like yesterday that he was just a baby crawling along the parlor floor. And certainly it can't be so long ago that I watched him playing with his blocks in the garden in front of the house and building forts and castles."

"Oh, yes, Pierre is taller than his mother now. He has to shave regularly once a week. Only yesterday we saw him off when he went to join his regiment. He's a man and he's gone to serve his country."

Born while the big guns roared in the Great War, carried by some woman of France heavy already with the fear for her loved ones on the battle line. And perhaps she prayed for a daughter or she said, "They fight that this one close to my heart may never know the agony which is theirs."

Surely no woman bargained that she should conceive in pain to place new recruits upon the altar of anguish. "Sleep, little cabbage, close your eyes and heed not that distant rumble. It is the guns, but they are separated from you by many miles and by the years of your infancy. Daddy's gone a-hunting for that peace which shall be everlasting."

The war babies were gay as they set forth to put on horizon blue and take the chance of what the next 18 months may bring. They never heard the screams and moans of those who lay in No Man's Land throughout the night cut off from stretcher bearers.

And as they munched their chocolate they sang the lively songs of the boulevards. Not yet have they learned, "Here's a toast to the dead already and a cup to the next man that dies."

The Penrods of Paris play as yet something which is a game. They've cut the apron strings and are rollicking off to barracks. Who's afraid of the big bad war? And not even the littlest of the new recruits will whimper in the night or say to the sergeant, "Comrade, I'm homesick." And yet Herod was more merciful when he killed the new-born while they were still in swaddling clothes. These are the lads torn loose after 16 or 17 years of nurture. Nor are they being sent to war. They will but drill and fight sham fights and thrust bayonets a little awkwardly into the straw bellies of dummies swung upon a crosspiece.

"This is the thrust, little man, if you would disembowel your adversary."

Of course, this isn't war. This is the preparedness which makes for peace. The next world war is all the way around the corner.

Pierre and Gaston, Henri and Georges, be choosy with your bon bons. Take one of the better sort all wrapped in foil. Here's a maraschino cherry. You play at war. You lark and sing. But note that something stirs in the wheatfield below the ridge where you and the other babies are encamped. It moves slowly and on its belly. Infants, that is the next war. It creeps up upon you. And it will be a war of blood and torture. Take another chocolate.

You did not hear, your mother did, the guns of the last conflict. You must break free of that prenatal curse. Now is the time to say, "I will not." Speak for your own integrity and that of the woman who bore you. You are life and old men would condemn you. Death always condemns life. Choose for yourself and for the young and the quick of all the world. They are your comrades.

And you, the women of England and Germany and Italy and America, how old is your son? And are you content to wean him to carry on the line of crosses?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LUCKEY].

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a table.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak on the naval appropriation bill now before this House. I rise to voice the sentiment of the peace-loving element in America. Let us pause for a moment and consider what we are doing. Just the other day we passed in this House a bill carrying the second largest peace-time Army appropriation ever enacted. We have now before us H. R. 7672, calling for the huge expenditure of $485,443,847 for the Navy Department and naval service for the fiscal year of 1936. When we contemplate the huge sums appropriated in past years for Army and Navy purposes, especially in 1935, and then note that to those large sums there was diverted from the P. W. A. fund $238,000,000, we may well ask, "What does this all mean?" and "Where are we going?"

Are we not a peace-loving Nation, and are we not at peace with the world? Is attack or invasion imminent? If not, against whom are we preparing? Is not our geographic position one of the most favored in the whole world? Yet, in the face of all this, we propose to spend more for preparedness than any other nation. Does this not stamp as a lie our oft-repeated assertion that we are the most peace-loving Nation in the world?

Let us look at the facts and see where we stand. I give here the figures for naval appropriations and expenditures for the years 1924–34, inclusive. These figures have been compiled from Government records at Washington and they appear on page 941 of the 1935 World Almanac. I leave off the odd dollars:

Expenditures, by years	United States	Great Britain	France	Japan
1923	$346,000,000	$315,000,000	$31,000,000	$137,000,000
1924	328,000,000	281,000,000	43,000,000	196,000,000
1925	323,000,000	271,000,000	40,000,000	124,000,000
1926	317,000,000	327,000,000	49,000,000	112,000,000
1927	320,000,000	281,000,000	72,000,000	119,000,000
1928	336,000,000	282,000,000	96,000,000	127,000,000
1929	366,000,000	278,000,000	99,000,000	130,000,000
1930	375,000,000	271,000,000	64,000,000	130,000,000
1931	357,000,000	281,000,000	134,000,000	131,000,000
1932	353,000,000	250,000,000	109,000,000	104,000,000
1933	349,000,000	245,000,000	94,000,000	146,000,000
1934	282,000,000	260,000,000	106,000,000	201,000,000
Total	4,052,000,000	3,342,000,000	937,000,000	1,657,000,000

Now, what do these figures show? They show that we are appropriating and expending for our Navy more money than any other nation, and yet it is asserted that we are woefully unprepared. Then, in the name of common sense, where is this money going and why have we so little to show for it?

Is it not about time that we call a halt to this orgy of spending? Our Nation is groaning under the heavy and terrific burden of taxes. Why is the Congress asked year after year for even bigger and bigger appropriations for the Army and Navy? It is because these Army and Navy people are military minded. They think in terms of preparedness. They think in terms of war. It is their profession to do so. They ever want a bigger and better war machine.

We do not condemn them for this. We have employed them to do this very thing. But let us check their demands by the yardstick of common sense and reason. Let us not be led off on a tangent. Let us examine each item and cut out the useless and obsolete deadwood which dissipates the Navy's strength. One of the sharpest indictments of waste in the Navy comes from one of its own officers, Rear Admiral T. P. Magruder, who, a few years ago, had the courage to tell the public where he thought the Navy was inefficient. A prominent Washington writer, Raymond Clapper, in his recent book entitled "Racketeering in Washington", points out many wasteful practices in the Navy.

But why a big Navy? One of the chief arguments in favor of a large military machine is that it is the best insurance for peace. If that were true, Europe, in 1914, should have been safe from war, for all her nations were prepared to the highest degree.

It has been stated here on the floor of the House by the proponents of this bill that we must build a Navy second to none, that we must become the mistress of the sea. We must do this to protect our commerce. Well, we went into the World War ostensibly to protect our foreign commerce and to make the world safe for democracy. But where is our foreign commerce today and what has become of democracy? Our ill-fated effort has cost us over $40,000,000,000, and thousands of our boys are sleeping in Flanders Field. The tears of our Gold Star Mothers have been shed in vain and we have reaped the enmity of the world.

Are we so stupid that we cannot see the futility of it all? Have we forgotten that "righteousness exalteth a nation"? Is not the just and fair dealing with other nations the greatest safeguard for peace? Let us come back to our senses and reason together. If nations must depend on force to settle their misunderstandings, then modern scientific warfare spells the doom of civilization. I am opposed to this huge appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this huge appropriation, and I appeal to the peace-loving American people to deluge their Representatives in Congress to put a stop to this war racket. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 2½ minutes.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I would rather have the honor of returning this time to the House at this late hour than to try to condense what I have to say to fit this short time. I thank the chairman very much for his generosity in yielding to me.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk start reading the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the first paragraph of the bill.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCORMACK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7672, the Navy Department appropriation bill, 1936, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—ESTATE OF THE LATE MR. JUSTICE HOLMES (H. DOC. NO. 166)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

The Congress is aware that Mr. Justice Holmes bequeathed his residuary estate to the Government of his country. It is the gift of one who in war and in peace devoted his life to its service. Clearly he thereby sought, with a generous emphasis, to mark the full measure of his faith in those principles of freedom and justice which the country was founded to preserve.

I shall, I think, be interpreting aright the feeling of the country and the wishes of the Congress if I suggest that this striking gift be devoted to some purpose worthy of the great man who gave it. Mr. Justice Holmes was fond of saying that we live by symbols. Our fellow citizens of this generation would, I am confident, desire the Congress to translate this gift into a form that may serve as a permanent impulse for the maintenance of the deepest tradition that Mr. Justice Holmes embodied.

That tradition was a faith in the creative possibilities of the law. For him law was an instrument of just relations between man and man. With an insight into its history that no American scholar has surpassed; with a capacity to mold ancient principles to present needs, unique in range and remarkable in prophetic power; with a grasp of its significance as the basis upon which the purposes of men are shaped, Mr. Justice Holmes sought to make the jurisprudence of the United States fulfill the great ends our Nation was established to accomplish. Our generation will not soon forget, as the learned the world over will long remember, his extraordinary achievements as judge, as historian, and as philosopher of the law.

The Congress will, I am sure, agree that it is fitting to utilize this opportunity to remind those who will come after us of our sense of the eminence of Mr. Justice Holmes. In so doing we do not merely commemorate the distinction of an American to whom the whole world has paid tribute. We also mark for posterity our pride in his faith in American democracy, his confidence in the power of our legal institutions to realize, when rightly used, the highest American ideals. Posterity which learns the significance of a life such as that of Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., draws inspiration from its understanding.

I therefore commend to the Congress that the bequest of Mr. Justice Holmes be not covered into the general fund of the Treasury but that it be set aside in a special fund at this time, and at a later date be devoted to purposes which will effectively promote the contributions which law can make to the national welfare. Once it is decided that the Holmes bequest be set apart for special use the precise object may await ample deliberation. A select committee of the Congress, acting in collaboration with a committee of the Supreme Court of the United States, will doubtless evolve the wisest uses to which this noble bequest should be put.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 25, 1935.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN MUNICIPAL BUILDINGS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, presented a conference report (Rept. No. 793) on the bill S. 2035, to amend an act approved June 25, 1934, authorizing loans from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a conference report (Report No. 794) on the bill (H. R. 6223) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

STATE ALLOTMENTS UNDER THE COTTON CONTROL ACT

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 258, to provide for certain State allotments under the Cotton Control Act.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am faced with the same proposition that confronted me last night in connection with another bill which was brought up at the close of the day under a unanimous-consent request. This is not a proper practice to follow. I do not know that there is anything wrong with this resolution; the gentleman from Illinois spoke to me about it as far as that is concerned, but this is not the way to legislate, and I am opposed to it.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection a moment?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. KELLER. This is simply a committee amendment to the Cotton Control Act. The amendment passed the House unanimously.

Mr. SNELL. I know the gentleman presented it, but I did not think it was unanimously adopted.

Mr. KELLER. The amendment passed unanimously. I say "unanimously", it was accepted by everybody; there was not a single voice raised against it.

This amendment is necessary by reason of the fact that Illinois was not known as a cotton-raising State. She had been raising some cotton, but not more than five, six, seven, or eight thousand bales. The Bankhead bill provided that the allotment should be made on the previous 5-year record. During those 5 years Illinois had had a major flood in 1927, a secondary flood in 1928; and there was a very severe drought during the years 1929, 1930, and 1931. Figured on the basis of the Cotton Control Act, the amount of cotton we would be allowed to raise would be next to nothing. This amendment merely increases the amount of the allotment.

Mr. SNELL. I think the explanation of the gentleman is all right, but I do not think it is proper to legislate in this way. If the Speaker intends to continue recognizing Members to bring up matters of legislation in this way I shall insist on having a quorum present so that every Member can look out for himself.

I have tried to be decent about this matter, and I do not want to object to individual bills being brought up, but it is not the fair and legitimate way to legislate.

Mr. KELLER. I entirely agree with the gentleman, but I consulted him on Monday when I introduced the resolution.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman has been fair as far as I am concerned.

Mr. KELLER. The resolution was published in the RECORD, and I stated then that I intended to call it up at a later day. I published it for the information of the House, and unless there is some very good reason for the objection, it should not be made.

Mr. SNELL. But I am opposed to this way of legislating.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as far as I am concerned this question is purely impersonal. However, it seems to me that during this session of Congress we have got into a bad habit of calling up resolutions and bills by unanimous consent late in the day when very few Members are on the floor. It is not very much of a job to get unanimous consent to pass important legislation if only the introducer of the legislation is on the floor. I think the membership of the House generally has the right to assume that after general debate during all the afternoon on a bill such as we have had this afternoon, no important legislation is going to be brought up. I believe, out of fairness to the membership of the House generally, it is a bad habit to allow Members to ask unanimous consent to bring up and pass important legislation at this time.

The bill which the gentleman from Illinois seeks to have called up now was introduced only 2 days ago and was referred to a committee. The committee has taken no action on it, and the purpose of the Unanimous-Consent Calendar is to bring up legislation by unanimous consent. On those days every Member of the House is put on notice that unanimous consent may be asked to pass bills, but Members of the House generally have the right to assume that after general debate such as we have had today, legislation of this kind will not be called up. I think it is a bad practice to allow it to be done.

Mr. KELLER. May I make a suggestion to the gentleman? I spoke to the committee to try to find out about this matter. The bill became marooned over in the Senate. The people out in Illinois are ready to plant cotton in the two counties where they depend on cotton crops for a living, and these people ought not to be penalized in this way unless there is some greater principle involved.

Mr. MAPES. Every Member may work himself up into the feeling that the legislation which he proposes is very important and should be brought up at once. I think we ought to have action by a committee on important legislation before it is called up in the House.

Mr. KELLER. I have consulted members of the committee.

Mr. MAPES. I do not believe that legislation should be brought up at the end of the day by unanimous consent.

Mr. KELLER. I agree with the gentleman. I asked the committee if there was any other way I could get consideration of the resolution, and they informed me there was no other way.

Mr. SNELL. Consent Calendar day is not very far distant.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe this sort of thing should be allowed, and therefore, on the principle of the thing, I object.

REVENUE

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain revenue figures of foreign governments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include the following figures of revenues of certain foreign countries derived from lotteries.

The Kingdom of Italy supports its Navy in part by lottery money. The gentlemen who referred to the lottery this afternoon seem to fail to grasp the significance of a national lottery. It perhaps could not be expected of these great naval experts.

Data of the receipts from Italian lotteries follow:

	Lire
1923–24	195,500,000
1924–25	210,900,000
1925–26	475,800,000
1926–27	481,000,000
1927–28	526,000,000
1928–29 [1]	480,000,000

Lottery revenues of certain other foreign countries [2] which are modest compared to the revenues from the most popular lotteries participated in by the American people:

AUSTRIA [3]

	Schillings
1923	1,381,000
1924	2,824,000
1925	6,404,000
1926	5,805,000

BRAZIL [4]

	Milreis
1923	1,800,000
1924	1,100,000
1925	1,100,000
1926	2,100,000

CZECHOSLOVAKIA [3]

	Crowns
1924	27,300,000
1925	29,100,000
1926	45,600,000
1927 [1]	42,300,000
1928 [1]	42,100,000

DENMARK [3]

	Krones
1924–25	2,500,000
1925–26 [1]	2,500,000
1926–27 [1]	2,500,000

HUNGARY [3]

	Pengos
1924–25	200,000
1925–26	800,000
1926–27	1,200,000
1927–28 [1]	1,400,000

GERMANY [4]

	Reichsmarks
1926–27	35,800,000
1927–28	42,800,000
1928–29	47,700,000
1929–30 [1]	50,000,000

PORTUGAL [3]

	Escudos
1922–23 [1]	870,000
1923–24 [1]	1,860,000
1924–25 [1]	1,560,000
1925–26	6,600,000
1926–27	5,700,000
1927–28	9,300,000
1928–29	17,000,000
1929–30 [1]	16,900,000

SPAIN [3]

	Pesetas
1925–26	95,700,000
1926 (6 mos.)	102,100,000
1927	112,300,000
1928 [1]	113,800,000

The receipts from lottery monopolies and taxes are given in the domestic currencies of the various countries. The following are the par rates of exchange as quoted in the Federal Reserve Bulletin for January 1931 in cents per unit of foreign currency:

	Cents
Austria, schilling	14.07
Czechoslovakia, crown	2.96
Denmark, krone	26.80
Germany, reichsmark	23.82
Hungary, pengo	17.49
Italy, lira	5.26
Portugal, escudo	4.42
Spain, peseta	19.30

ADJOURNMENT OVER AND HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow. I may say I make this request because it is felt that if we begin at 11 o'clock tomorrow we may be able to finish the consideration of the pending bill tomorrow and adjourn over Saturday.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, I shall not object to the gentleman's request if he will include in the request that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next; otherwise I shall object. If that situation is definitely in front of the membership tomorrow, we will get through.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning and that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say that I agree with the gentleman from New York. We convened at 11 o'clock this morning. There were very few Members on the floor. Some of us have work to do in the mornings and also have committee meetings to attend. It was practically 12 o'clock today when we got started with general debate on this bill. I know of one Member who was promised 20 minutes and was cut down to 10 minutes. This is not the fault of the gentleman handling the time. It seems it is of little avail in the long run to meet at 11 o'clock.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think that is true, generally speaking, but at the same time the occurrence that happened this morning might have occurred if we had met at 12 o'clock. I make this request at the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, who advises me that if we begin at 11 o'clock tomorrow we can finish the bill tomorrow, and I am hopeful we may do so.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, when we meet at 11 o'clock the attendance in the afternoon during general debate dwindles down to a corporal's guard. Some of us stay on the floor nearly all the time, and I think it is manifestly unfair to those who do spend their time on the floor to meet at 11 o'clock. It is also hard on the newspapermen in the press gallery. They are not always able to be here at 11 o'clock and in this way miss a great deal that goes on. However, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to serve notice now that on tomorrow morning, after the reading of the Journal, I shall ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I called up this afternoon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BOEHNE, for 2 days, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet, in accordance with its previous order, tomorrow, Friday, April 26, 1935, at 11 o'clock a. m.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS

(Saturday, Apr. 27, 10:30 a. m.)

Subcommittee will hold hearings on bill (H. R. 6374) providing compensation for the Post Office Department for the extra work involved in the return of valuable packages from the dead-letter office to the writers. Room 213, old House Office Building.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana: Committee on Flood Control. H. R. 6607. A bill authorizing a preliminary examination of Fox River and its tributaries in Clark County, Mo., with a view to the control of floods; without amendment (Rept. No. 788). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana: Committee on Flood Control. S. 865. An act authorizing a preliminary examination of the Willamette River and its tributaries in the State of Oregon, with a view to controlling floods; without amendment (Rept. No. 789). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana: Committee on Flood Control. H. R. 6829. A bill authorizing a preliminary examination of Sebewaing River, in Huron County, Mich., with a view to the controlling of floods; without amendment (Rept. No. 790). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. AYERS: Committee on Indian Affairs. S. 1531. An act to credit certain Indian tribes with sums heretofore expended from tribal funds on Indian irrigation works; without amendment (Rept. No. 791). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WERNER: Committee on Indian Affairs. S. 1537. An act to provide funds for cooperation with the school board of Shannon County, S. Dak., in the construction of a consolidated high-school building to be available to both white and Indian children; without amendment (Rept. No. 792). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Senate Memorial 6

Whereas the city of Palatka, Putnam County, Fla., has, with the cooperation and the financial assistance of the Federal Government, converted its municipal waterworks property into one of the outstanding beauty spots of not only Florida but of the entire Nation; and

Whereas great numbers of citizens of the United States, including residents of every State in the Union, have during the winter season just closed visited and enjoyed Palatka's Ravine Azalea Gardens; and

Whereas the gardens, with their thousands of azaleas, magnolias, flame vines, crepe myrtles, cherokee roses, and a profusion of tropical plantings, have attained to the proportions far beyond local or even State-wide interest and scope: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, respectfully memorialized to enact the necessary legislation to authorize the United States Government to receive and accept as a gift from the city of Palatka, in the State of Florida, the said Palatka Ravine Azalea Gardens, embracing 85 acres of land and all plantings and improvements thereon, and to constitute and maintain such gardens as a national park or garden for the pleasure, education, and edification of all persons seeking beauty in and knowledge of flowers, vines, plants, and native trees such as are found in this place of indescribable beauty; and be it

Resolved further, That the secretary of state of the State of Florida is directed to transmit a duly authenticated copy of this memorial under the great seal of the State to the Congress of the United States and to each of Florida's Senators and Representatives in the Congress; and that our said Senators and Representatives are most earnestly requested to employ their best efforts to induce the Congress to act favorably to the accomplishment of the purposes outlined in this memorial.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Nevada Home Labor Association, Reno, Nev., favoring modification of the law governing the awarding of contracts so as to more rigidly compel contractors to employ Nevada citizens and workers on any and all public works within the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of the United States, praying for an investigation of charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana relative to the qualifications of the Senators from Louisiana [Mr. LONG and Mr. OVERTON], which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance, of Little Rock, Ark., and vicinity, praying for the enactment of the so-called "Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Westmoreland County Council, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Jeannette, Pa., favoring the prompt enactment of the so-called "Patman bill", providing for the immediate cash payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate the memorial of John B. Watson, of Media, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the prepayment, or payment in advance of maturity, of the adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram from the Square Deal Association of Louisiana, by Oscar R. Whilden, leader of the First and Second Congressional Districts, New Orleans, La., relative to certain alleged statements of the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] in connection with the disbursement and distribution of Federal funds in Louisiana, and pledging the support of the association to the national administration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BARBOUR presented a memorial of the New Jersey Women's State Republican Club, representing 1,500 women, remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called

"Wheeler-Rayburn public-utility-regulation bill", a "central banking bill", and the "Wagner labor-disputes bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented a letter from Earl B. Clark, chairman of the Chenango County Farm Bureau Executive Committee, Norwich, N. Y., favoring insertion in the "Banking Act for 1935" of clauses which will result in the revaluation of the dollar to raise commodity prices to the level prevailing from 1921 to 1929, also the inclusion of clauses that will create the commodity dollar, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Arizona State Chamber of Commerce, favoring the extension of the present excise tax on copper, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Glenwood Landing Post, No. 336, American Legion, of Glenwood Landing, Long Island, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation to create a bureau of alien deportation in the Department of Justice, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Binghamton, N. Y., praying for the enactment of House Joint Resolution 167, known as the "Ludlow resolution", to take the profit out of war, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Memorial Associates, Inc., of New York City, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of legislation permitting the Secretary of War to furnish bronze markers for soldiers' graves instead of stone, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Buffalo and vicinity, in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of House bill 1411, permitting full cuts of United States postage stamps to be printed in stamp catalogs, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of members of Local No. 46, Metal Polishers International Union, of Ilion, N. Y., praying for the enactment of the so-called "Black 30-hour work week bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Branch No. 359, Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund, of Hewlett, Long Island, N. Y., favoring the enactment of the bill (H. R. 2827) to provide for the establishment of unemployment, old age, and social insurance, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, on April 15, 1935, the Philadelphia Board of Trade adopted a report of one of its committees relative to the N. R. A. wherein it urges that individual enterprise be encouraged and given a freer hand, and that the law of supply and demand in an open and competitive market be restored in place of the N. R. A. policy of freezing prices at a certain level, upsetting the whole price structure, both in domestic and in foreign trade. The report deplores the administration policy of making reciprocal-trade treaties, letting in foreign goods produced at lower prices, causing our manufacturers to close down, thus creating more unemployment. The small business man is unable to defend himself in this scheme of things, and is compelled to close down. He can afford neither to appear at code hearings nor to carry out the codes when adopted, because the small man has not the reserves or the financial strength to compete with the united strength of the favored trusts.

The report urges Congress to deny N. R. A. a longer lease on life. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

EXTRACT FROM MINUTES OF STATED MEETING, PHILADELPHIA BOARD OF TRADE, HELD APRIL 15, 1935

The following report was submitted by the committee on domestic productions and on motion adopted:

"NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT

"This board having been among those who cheerfully subscribed to the voluntary movement initiated by the administration in 1933, sincerely seeking the rehabilitation of our commerce and manufactures, now presents to you its convictions concerning the policy then proposed, urging that individual enterprise be permitted a freer hand, that commercial and industrial competition be encouraged, and that the immutable law of supply and demand be again recognized as an inevitable force determining the value of our commodities in the open market.

"We have participated with our membership in a sincere effort to accomplish results desired under the National Industrial Recovery Act of June 16, 1933, and it is now opportune that unprejudiced consideration be given the results experienced under the Federal policy thus enunciated.

"The undersigned, therefore, have watched with interest the development of conditions under this policy and are impressed with the economic futility of this policy, viz, the attempted Federal dictation of prices, hours of labor, wages, working conditions, and trade practices, especially when the same are subject to the partisan political activities and influences characteristic of the day.

"This board of trade thoroughly respects the rights of the individual citizen as defined in the Constitution of the United States. It is sympathetic with the desire of labor to better its social position and, as consistent with sound business economy, has urged the reasonable protection of labor in the position which it occupies in the conduct of our industrial and economic affairs.

"However, the conflict and discord which obviously has been created—with or without the approval of the National Industrial Recovery Administration—by exciting the demands in one faction against another with the effect, so apparent, of preventing a reasonable adjustment of these demands in the interest of practical business economy, in our opinion, demonstrates the futility of the Federal policy referred to and prompts this emphatic request that the National Industrial Recovery Act be permitted to expire June 16, 1935.

"Exhaustive statistical exhibits are scarcely necessary in this communication to direct your attention to the impracticability of any other attitude toward the National Industrial Recovery Act as a policy than that which is now urged.

"Concurrent policies established by the administration are seeking the establishment of commercial treaties with foreign countries, admitting foreign-made merchandise to our domestic markets at prices cheaper than such merchandise can be made or marketed by our domestic manufacturers.

"The inevitable result is now apparent with the abandonment of millions of spindles in our textile trade and sharply reduced production activities asserting themselves throughout this country in almost every line of trade.

"It may be admitted that the N. R. A., so called, has favored commercial rehabilitation with certain manufacturing interests capable of a low-cost production on a capacity basis, but always this has been realized at the expense of smaller producers whose economic position does not permit of a reasonable profit on such a productive basis as that to which the N. R. A. subjects them.

"Thus, such encouragement as the N. R. A. offers certain industrial interests is afforded to the discouragement of many more individual enterprises which, if individually smaller in their corporate capacity, represent in the grand total an even larger number of employees, and hence the social status as well as the purchasing power of a greater proportion of citizens of this country is impaired rather than enhanced.

"This board of trade so recorded its convictions in the referendum of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States (no. 68), and thus summarizing its reactions to the policy enunciated from Washington reiterates its urgent request of you that you exercise your influence in defeating Senate bill 2445, which would reenact and amend title no. 1 of the National Industrial Recovery Act approved June 16, 1933, by further extending the powers accorded under that act of Congress."

THE PHILADELPHIA BOARD OF TRADE,
GEORGE L. MARKEAND, JR., President.

Attest:

H. W. WILLS, Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7132) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of Commerce to exchange a portion of the naval station and a portion of the lighthouse reservation at Key West, Fla., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 554) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD (for Mr. REYNOLDS), from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2294) for the relief of Thaddeus C. Knight, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 555) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 98) to authorize the acceptance on behalf of the United States of the bequest of the late Maj. Gen. Fred C. Ainsworth for the purpose of establishing a permanent library at the Walter Reed General Hospital to be known as the "Fred C. Ainsworth Endowment Library", reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 556) thereon.

INVESTIGATION OF LABOR CONDITIONS IN PANAMA CANAL ZONE

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a resolution (S. Res. 122), which, under the rule, was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to investigate the labor conditions in the Panama Canal Zone with a view to determine the advisability of enacting S. 1819, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the result of its investigation, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-fourth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $1,500, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 25th instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 1209. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to relinquish an easement for a water main at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii; and

S. 1610. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States a certain strip of land from the State of South Carolina.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the following nominations:

Brig. Gen. Carl Eugene Nesbitt, Adjutant General's Department, Texas National Guard, to be brigadier general, Adjutant General's Department, National Guard of the United States, from April 19, 1935, under the provisions of section 38 of the National Defense Act, as amended;

Capt. Elmer Dane Pangburn, Infantry (detailed in Quartermaster Corps), for appointment, by transfer to the Quartermaster Corps, in the Regular Army, with rank from March 26, 1934; and Second Lt. Charles Gates Herman, Infantry, for appointment, by transfer to the Quartermaster Corps, in the Regular Army with rank from June 10, 1932.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. STEIWER:

A bill (S. 2687) for the relief of Henry Ziegenhagen; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 2688) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893, as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2689) for the relief of the city of New York; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 2690) for the relief of the Eberhart Steel Products Co., Inc.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NYE (for Mr. NORBECK):

A bill (S. 2691) for the relief of E. E. Sullivan (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 2692) granting a pension to Walter E. Fink (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SCHWELLENBACH:

A bill (S. 2693) for the relief of Fred P. Halbert; and

A bill (S. 2694) to add certain lands to the Columbia National Forest in the State of Washington; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. CAREY:

A bill (S. 2695) to add certain lands to the Medicine Bow National Forest, Wyo.; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. GORE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 109) providing that the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

EXTENSION OF NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT—AMENDMENTS

Mr. HARRISON submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2445) to amend title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL

Mr. WHEELER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

WELFARE OF INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA—AMENDMENT

Mr. GORE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2047) to promote the general welfare of the Indians of the State of Oklahoma, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION OF WORLD WAR VETERANS—AMENDMENT

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to House bill 3896, the soldiers' bonus bill. I have not finished preparing the amendment, and I should like to reserve the right to hand it in to the Secretary of the Senate after the Senate adjourns or recesses, if I cannot do so at an earlier hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and permission is granted.

Mr. GORE subsequently submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3896) to provide for the immediate payment to veterans of the face value of their adjusted-service certificates, for controlled expansion of the currency, and to extend the time for filing applications for benefits under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

THREE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FOUNDING OF CONNECTICUT

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk Senate Joint Resolution 94, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the joint resolution for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) establishing a commission for the participation of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Colony of Connecticut, authorizing an appropriation to be utilized in connection with such observance, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Connecticut whether the joint resolution has met the sanction of the Committee on the Library?

Mr. LONERGAN. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that the joint resolution has been considered by the committee and was favorably reported yesterday with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on the Library with amendments, on page 1, line 6, before the word "commissioners", to strike out "fifteen" and insert "sixteen"; and in line 8, before the word "Members", to strike out "five" and insert "six", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a commission to be known as the "United States Connecticut Tercentenary Commission" (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission") and to be composed of 16 commissioners, as follows: Five persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, 5 Senators by the President of the Senate, and 6 Members of the House of Representatives by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The Commission shall serve without compensation and shall select a chairman from among their number.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000, to be expended by the Commission for actual and necessary traveling expenses and subsistence, while discharging its official duties outside the District of Columbia.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES—CALIFORNIA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am informed by the junior Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] that the construction of the California-Pacific International Exposition at San Diego, Calif., is moving along rather rapidly, and those in charge thereof are anxious to have the bill (H. R. 5914), Calendar No. 569, with reference to the coinage of 50-cent silver pieces in connection with that exposition passed. There is no opposition to it, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5914) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in connection with the California-Pacific International Exposition to be held in San Diego, Calif., in 1935 and 1936, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDRESSES ON OCCASION OF PRESENTATION OF SILVER PLAQUE TO SENATOR PITTMAN

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the speech of Ygnacio Soto, on behalf of the committee of La Fiesta de la Plata and the silver miners of Mexico, on Mexican-American boundary line, at Nogales, Mexico, August 18, 1934, in presenting to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], on behalf of the State of Sonora, Mexico, and the silver fiesta, a silver plaque in the form of a reproduction of the wonderful Aztec calendar in recognition of his distinguished and effective services in the cause of silver. I also ask that the speech of the Senator from Nevada in acknowledgment of the presentation, together with a translation of an editorial from El Nacional of September 2, 1934, of the City of Mexico, entitled "Mexico and Senator PITTMAN", may be printed in the RECORD. These statements will be found interesting and pertinent and prophetic of events of today.

There being no objection, the speeches and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRESENTATION SPEECH BY SEÑOR YGNACIO SOTO

My dear Senator PITTMAN, Señor Gobernador de Sonora, distinguished guests, gentlemen, ever since immemorial times nations have come to regard as divine gifts such resources and elements as afforded, in one way or another, permanent means to further their progress and strength—spiritually and materially. Anything that helped to make them respected and superior to others was considered as a reward and a blessing for their superiority, and such beliefs had much to do historically.

It does not sound logical nor proper to establish a direct contact between spiritual and intellectual accomplishments and physical elements, whose worth does not go beyond their intrinsic value; it does not seem usual to regard one as necessary for the other, and yet they bear a very close connection. I do not mean to say by this that moral betterment invariably keeps a definite relation to the wealth and strength of a nation; I do not mean to say that the richer a nation in money the richer is she spiritually. We have seen where nations of old and modern times have gone to their complete destruction from having too much power and too much wealth. In these instances, however, wealth and power came too fast and too easy; education could not keep the proper pace and distance, and the people were not prepared for a higher level of living conditions overnight, which accounts for such nations losing their heads completely, going after more wealth and power, forgetting the limit beyond which wealth and power only meant selfishness and destruction.

There are many notable instances where nations have acted differently, so that it can be said that physical elements can also bring sound and lasting benefits, when used properly; your great nation and my great nation are very good examples of such a statement. When and where such gifts are made good use of they may be depended upon to bring along added benefits of greater endurance, of a higher moral and educational benefit; and such advancement, beginning with the understanding and preparation of each individual nation, should eventually extend to other nations as an example to the strong ones who are likely to forget their duties and as an aid to the weak nations who need a mentor.

The silver metal in Mexico can be justly considered a gift of God that was given most abundantly; the Indians that inhabited our country centuries ago, those Indians that had such a remarkable civilization and gave us much to be proud of, primarily the blood that made us the proud and progressive Nation that we are today; those Indians that so valiantly defended their past, but were vanquished because the unavoidable sequence of events so demanded it, considered silver as one of the most valuable gifts of nature, and their remarkable perfection in the art of working and carving silver is today shown by that wonderful piece of work that has been presented to you in behalf of the mining industry of Mexico. Many other nations have also regarded silver in the same sense, notable among them stands India, where the white metal is considered something enjoying close to a Divine endorsement and demanding their veneration; after all, anything that is instrumental in furthering our own betterment should be considered in a higher level than dollars and pesos.

If silver has played an important part in Mexico in the past, with the undervaluation she has endured so much of the time, she is about to be a greater factor when silver is given a fair appreciation and value, as this will stimulate added production more than anything else. While Mexico enjoys the distinction of being the largest producer of silver, her production can be increased substantially, her mining resources being entirely unknown because of very little prospecting and development work that has been done; I dare say a lot of her mountains have not been even prospected, and this confirms what an American mining engineer said in New York sometime ago, when, referring to the mining possibilities in Mexico, he said that the amount of mining operations going on could not be considered more than a mere scratch.

The silver industry in Mexico has been most fortunate, as during the very trying conditions that she has gone through recently, including a record bottom level for our star metal, silver, when the price received per ounce did not even cover production costs, and when it looked as though she was doomed completely, a man of remarkable foresight, faith, and determination took what was then considered very daring steps that meant the salvation of the silver producers of Mexico, and, I dare say, had a far-reaching effect for the cause of silver the world over. This remarkable man, who has steered our Nation out of the stagnation and has safely piloted the ship to the port where we are making a better use for mankind of our fabulous resources, is none other than Gen. Plutarco Elias Calles. What was then considered a daring experiment, a strictly silver basis or bimetalism, as you might also call it, has been resorted to by many nations, some of which had taken action within very recent times contrary to this principle.

We have watched your untiring efforts in behalf of silver, and we have watched the splendid spirit of cooperation of some of your very notable colleagues; you have accomplished much, but we know from your own expressions that you are not satisfied and that you propose to continue your fight for the white metal until such a time as it is permanently stabilized at a fair and adequate price. We are very glad to know this, as we also propose to keep up this fight and we want you to know that we are with you; that we will give you our support according to our means.

The time is most favorable for your activities in this connection; you should lose no time in furthering your campaign, as you can gain maximum results from your activities at this time, because of the remarkable intellect and foresight of your great President Roosevelt, who has already given you so definite proofs of his faith in silver and, among other measures, enacted and put into effect the coinage of silver in a proportion of 1 to 3 of gold and the nationalization of the silver stocks in the United States.

I hope, my dear Senator, that the calendar presented to you by our beloved Governor Elias Calles will be emblematic to you of the faith, confidence, and appreciation that we hold for each other on the Mexican border, as you have plainly seen here today; of the appreciation for the work you have already done in behalf of the betterment of international relations and what you have accomplished for the white metal; of our expectations for your continued fight until you reach our common goal; and of our sincere good wishes for the welfare of your great Nation and your good self.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR KEY PITTMAN

Governor Calles, members of the committees of La Fiesta de la Plata, and the silver miners of Mexico: My dear Governor, your generous and warm-hearted words on behalf of yourself and your citizens, whilst they have touched me deeply and filled me to overflowing with sentimental emotions, have lodged in my heart and mind a great affection and admiration for you and the Mexican people that will abide there eternally. No greater gift was ever presented to a foreign citizen or more noble and generous act done by any people.

This beautiful plaque made of silver delved from the mines of Mexico, an exact and artistic replica of the wonderful Aztec calendar, the most remarkable product of ancient civilization, and conclusive evidence of the earliest achievements of learning on this continent, is humbly and gratefully accepted by me in the spirit in which it is tendered, and as a permanent memento of the great accomplishments of your President and our President and their distinguished representatives to the world conference at London.

At that conference, where 66 governments of the world were represented, pessimists may contend that little material progress was made. Had nothing been accomplished at the conference save the meeting on common ground of representatives of all these nationalities, still it will have brought about a better comprehension between peoples which is so essential for peace and prosperity throughout the world.

President Woodrow Wilson in his great speech at Mobile in the State of Alabama in 1913 said: "Comprehension must be the soil in which shall grow all the fruits of friendship." But there was material accomplishment. The representatives of 66 governments unanimously recognized silver as the basic money of over half of the people of the world, and that the prosperity and happiness of these peoples and their power to exchange their money for the products of other countries where gold is the basic money required the protection of the monetary value of silver against destruction by the adverse action of governments.

This resolution expressly provides that governments will refrain from legislation that can substantially depreciate the value of silver in the world markets; that governments will abandon the policy and practice of melting up and debasing silver coins and that low-valued paper currency will have substituted therefor silver coins. This resolution is the magna carta of silver. It ends the unnatural supply of silver that had been and was being dumped on the markets of the world derived from the melting up and debasement of silver coins. It ends forever the enactment of further adverse legislation that was the cause of the discredit of silver money, and which was rapidly working its destruction.

There is an unnatural surplus of silver on the markets of the world. This surplus is estimated from seven hundred and fifty millions to one billion ounces. This surplus cannot increase because the unnatural source has been destroyed by the London resolution and the production of silver from the mines is sufficient only to meet the current demand.

The President of the United States at the last session of the United States Congress was the proponent of silver legislation which became law. Under that act he is to restore to our monetary stocks silver to the extent that there will be at least one-third as much silver as there is gold. That means, according to the estimates of our Treasury Department, that the President will be required under present conditions to purchase in the world markets at least 1,300,000,000 ounces of silver. This will more than consume the entire unnatural surplus of silver now existing throughout the world. The effect of this process is inevitable. Through the orderly and conservative purchases made by the President the price of silver must gradually rise until it reaches the price of $1.29 an ounce. The President has the power to stabilize silver at such a price or at a higher parity price if he sees fit, because after purchasing the surplus supply of the world he will still have authority and power to purchase any additional silver that may be offered for sale. The stabilization of silver in accordance with such a program will, in my opinion, result in the opening of the mints throughout the world to the free and unlimited coinage at the stabilized price and ratio. This will mean more to Mexico and the United States than to any other countries in the world. They are the greatest producers of silver, and I believe that the great silver resources of Mexico have hardly been touched. It will make of Mexico one of the richest countries on earth.

These are the material effects of the great accomplishments for the cause of silver money. This occasion, however, may be taken as an evidence of the rapidly increasing friendship and spirit of cooperation between the people of Mexico and the people of the United States. The harsh and sometimes cruel acts of depredation along the border that marked the acts of desperate men, unrestrained by love of God or adequate law enforcement, which is natural in every pioneer section, has disappeared with the development of these sections and the growth of the power of governments to enforce justice, law, and order. Too often, and I do not deny that it is natural people judge the entire people of another country by the few outlaws and adventures who invade their borders and with whom they first come in contact.

The great development of Mexico and the southwestern portion of the United States, the settlement of these sections by intelligent God-fearing, industrious, law-abiding people, the closer communications by telegraph, telephone, radio, moving pictures, railroads, air and motor transportation, interchange of experiences and thoughts is bringing about rapidly mutual comprehension of the character, aspirations, laws, and conditions in our respective countries. Fear and suspicion have been replaced by mutual confidence and respect.

The Monroe Doctrine, which was pronounced solely for the purpose of protecting the new Republics of Mexico and South America at their inception, gradually developed with the changing times until it was the cause of exasperation to the great governments in Mexico and South America, and even aroused suspicion in the minds of the people in those countries. Woodrow Wilson, the great Democratic President and a great world statesman and humanitarian, first placed definite limitations on this doctrine when at Mobile, State of Alabama, he declared to the world "that the United States will never again seek one additional foot of territory by conquest." The new doctrine of our Government and our country has been announced by the greatest and most universally beloved ruler in the world—by our President and your neighbor and friend, Franklin D. Roosevelt. In his address before the Woodrow Wilson Foundation on December 28, 1933, at the time he quoted with approval the pronouncement of Woodrow Wilson, he declared: "The maintenance of constitutional government in other nations is not a sacred obligation devolving upon the United States alone. The maintenance of law and the orderly processes of government in this hemisphere is the concern of each individual nation within its own borders first of all." And then he goes further to pronounce the new American doctrine. In that speech he said: "It therefore has seemed clear to me as President that the time has come to supplement and to implement the declaration of President Wilson by the further declaration that the definite policy of the United States from now on is one opposed to armed intervention."

Again in that celebrated and epoch-making address he laid down a rule for conduct for nations which he invited all nations to adopt and follow, in the following language: "A simple declaration that no nation will permit any of its armed forces to cross its own borders into the territory of another nation. Such act would be regarded by humanity as an act of aggression and, as an act, therefore, that would call for condemnation by humanity." These were not empty words. They were for him the foundation for action. Cuba by its constitution had adopted the so-called "Platt amendment" to the treaty between the United States and Cuba permitting the United States the right of armed intervention in Cuba. By the treaty of Washington of 1934 between the United States and Cuba the United States Government has definitely and voluntarily repealed the Platt amendment and denied its own right of armed intervention in Cuba. Under these new doctrines which in spirit were accepted in Montevideo there must exist the highest spirit of confidence and cooperation that inevitably will draw closer and closer the ties, both social and economic, between the great Latin American Republics and the United States. I deeply appreciate this opportunity here on the border line of Mexico and the United States to repeat the words of Woodrow Wilson and our great President which mean so much happiness for both of our people. I personally wish you, Governor, and your citizens and all of the citizens of Mexico, a rapid accomplishment of all of your ideals and aspirations, and eternal prosperity and happiness.

MEXICO AND SENATOR PITTMAN

Because we consider it of special significance to our country, both internally and internationally, we refer in these comments to the cordial and elevated conceptions solemnly expressed a few days ago by United States Senator KEY PITTMAN during the silver fair on the border at Nogales.

As an antecedent to this we must record that upon the initiative of the present Governor of Sonora, Rodolfo Elias Calles, there was organized at Nogales a concourse of Mexican mining men as a manifestation of the great vitality of our country in the silver industry. To this meeting, which constituted a veritable celebration, a special invitation was extended to Senator PITTMAN, who, as is already known, is recognized throughout the world as a powerful leader in the campaign in favor of the white metal. To honor him and as a manifestation of Mexican friendship, and at the same time as a demonstration of the richness of our mines, there was presented to Senator PITTMAN a valuable piece of carved silver, displaying the Aztec calendar, which gratefully impressed the heart of the illustrious visitor. It was on this occasion that Senator PITTMAN, in expressing his appreciation, disclosed the ideas to which we shall refer.

In advance we should say that Senator PITTMAN is one of those public men who, beyond specializing his activities in the prosecution of a determined ideal, considers that all the thoughts of the public men of our time must refer to the establishment on the most solid basis of international confraternity as the best means of extending a service to contemporaneous humanity, which is so much in need of high conciliatory spirits.

In this connection the Senator referred to the World Conference in London, held a short time ago, at which 66 nations were represented, and during which, besides the fact that the conference succeeded in bringing together an exceptional international concurrence, which in itself alone permitted much getting together and the clearing up of many misunderstandings, it was unanimously recognized that silver was the basic monetary metal of more than half of the world's population, and declared that the prosperity of these peoples and the possibility of their exchanging their money along acquisitive lines for the products of other countries which are on a gold basis required that the monetary value of silver be protected.

From those proceeded the legislation which very shortly changed for the better the condition of the finances of the world, and which has brought about an increasing rise in silver in the international markets. It has been established that governments will abstain from legislating in a sense that will considerably depreciate the value of silver as merchandise and abandon their practices and programs of melting and despising silver moneys. Since the London Conference the war against silver has ceased, which was at the point of impoverishing world circulation through the predominance of the policy of the monometallic countries on a gold standard.

Effectively it happened that silver was demonetized and melted, and from this source it was sought to supply the industrial and commercial necessitives which worked with this metal, and so, practically, the silver industry was in danger of falling into moribund inactivity, highly compromising to the economic consolidation of the producing countries. After the London Conference, which brought about the rehabilitation of silver in circulation as money, this current of economic destruction was halted and an energetic equilibrium has been established, in the shade of which mining wealth has profited by an open revival.

From the beginning Senator PITTMAN has been one of the most decided supporters of this economic policy in favor of the white metal; and as much because of his experience in these matters as on account of the merit of the thesis sustained by him his activity has been of the highest importance in the world campaign for silver, headed by President Roosevelt and the United States Government.

"In conformity with the present law of the United States", said Senator PITTMAN, "there must be restored to our monetary stock the silver which represents a third of the gold value of the stock. This signifies that the United States Treasury must purchase, according to the circumstances of the world markets, not less than 2,000,000,000 ounces of silver, which will inevitably cause the price of silver gradually to rise. * * * The stabilization of the white metal, in accordance with this program, will, in my opinion, result in reopening mints throughout all the world to its free coinage, in unlimited form, according to its price and the ratio established between it and gold."

[It will be interesting to see the changes in these remarks undergone in the translation of the original from English into Spanish and then back to English.]

Considering the importance of our wealth in silver, this pro-silver movement and its powerful development day by day, under the influence of United States legislation and by its propagation in other countries, offers a brilliant future to our mining industry, or, as Senator PITTMAN eloquently said, "The great sources of silver in Mexico are still intact; it will simply make Mexico one of the richest countries on earth."

Historical fate has brought Mexico and the United States to collaborate in the phenomenon of rehabilitating silver, which, according to the perspicacity and generosity of the illustrious Senator, is a clear sign of the rapid increase of friendship and of a spirit of cordiality between the two nations. He believes that there will be terminated all the epochs of confusion and enmity that there might have been between both peoples by the working of an imperfect social development in the frontier communities of both countries. "The great development of Mexico", he went so far as to affirm, "and that of the western part of the United States; the colonization of those regions by good people, industrious and law-abiding; rapid communication by telephone, telegraph, railways, films, and automobiles; the interchange of ideas and experiences are bringing, gradually but rapidly, a comprehension of the character, aspirations, laws, and conditions which prevail in our respective countries and ambients. Fear and suspicion have been supplanted by confidence and mutual respect."

The warm and sincere words of Senator PITTMAN did not abound only in these generous doctrines. He also referred in his discourse to the transformation undergone by the judgment of the present Government of the United States to the old and discussed topic of the Monroe Doctrine, and in effect cited the words of President Roosevelt in declaring that the conservation of constitutional government in other countries is not a sacred obligation of the United States only, but that it devolves upon every nation individually, within its own limits, before anyone else. And, thinking of that other great President, who was called Woodrow Wilson, he closed by saying that from now on the absolute policy of the United States would be opposed to all armed intervention, inasmuch as "understanding must be the soil in which international friendship flourishes."

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION—EDITORIAL FROM BIRMINGHAM NEWS

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Birmingham News of April 24, 1935, on the farm tenant bill. I should like particularly to call the attention of the Senate to this editorial by reason of the arguments made in favor of the bill and the quotation from an editorial in the Commonweal, setting up reasons why this measure should be passed.

There being no objection the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Birmingham (Ala.) News of Apr. 24, 1935]

THE BANKHEAD BILL TO REDUCE FARM TENANCY

The Birmingham News on several occasions has spoken in favor of Senator Bankhead's bill to create a billion-dollar Government corporation to aid tenant farmers and share-croppers to acquire small farms of their own. When the Alabama Senator first announced his bill it appealed to this newspaper as one of the most significant and hopeful measures introduced in Congress in many years for the benefit, not merely of the agricultural population, but of our entire economic system, for the successful operation of his plan would undoubtedly have far-reaching consequences in many directions.

Above all, of course, it would aid that class of our agricultural population which is most in need of assistance, and which must be assisted if our country is not to be confronted with the danger of the development of a peasant system. The growing evil of farm tenancy, particularly in the South, has been a cause for alarm for years, since long before the depression began, and the situation has been made worse by the depression. There is no doubt that farm tenancy is the South's gravest agricultural problem, and the chief cause of the low standards of living which prevail so widely throughout this section. The farm tenant system is the root of most of our agricultural and sociological problems in the South. Reliable observers have expressed the fear that out of our tenant and share-croppers there is being created an American peasant class.

Recently a survey of farm tenancy in the South was made by a committee representing several leading educational, sociological, and other groups. The findings, to which the News called attention in an editorial a few weeks ago, were appalling. The committee, as this paper pointed out at the time, made recommendations which were precisely in line with the purposes of Senator BANKHEAD'S bill.

Now further support of the bill is forthcoming from an important source. This week's issue of the Commonweal devotes its leading editorial to the Bankhead bill, and announces that a statement is being prepared to be signed and issued by a group of Catholic leaders, both of the clergy and of the laity, in support of the measure.

The Commonweal says: "Whether or not the bill introduced by Senator BANKHEAD will be enacted into law in the present session of Congress is questionable; but it seems to us unquestionable that the proposed measure, or one similar to it, should be given the strongest support of all Americans who desire the reestablishment of the principle of private property, and of the principle of personal and family liberty—which is dependent for its practical realization upon the possession of real personal property in land by great numbers of individuals, and not upon the possession of vast holdings in land, and great wealth of other sorts, by a small minority of the Nation."

It is for that reason, the magazine continues, that the statement by Catholic leaders is being issued. The Commonweal suggests that all who agree with it "should at once begin to urge their Representatives in Congress to vote for the Bankhead bill, and to obtain public discussion and study of the measure." Its editorial gives the text of the statement, which is well worth reproducing here because of its clear exposition of the purposes of Senator BANKHEAD'S bill and its thoughtful comment on the proposal:

"The undersigned sees much merit in the Bankhead bill, which proposes to establish as an instrumentality of the Federal Government the Farmers' Home Corporation, authorized to issue bonds to the extent of $1,000,000,000 for the purpose of obtaining funds to make loans for and assist in the establishment of small individual farms and farm homes. As we understand it, the objective of the measure is the conversion of tenants and share-croppers, and of those who were formerly on the land but are now adrift, into independent small landowners upon a cost basis low enough to make it feasible for them to secure, over a considerable period of time, the independence derived from unencumbered landowning.

"Excellent precedents for the underlying ideas of the bill can be found in the successful efforts of the British to promote land ownership, through the extension of Government credit, and of the Danes to foster it through Government efforts in their country. * * * Authoritative pronouncements of Catholic spokesmen, favoring the general principles upon which the measure is based, are readily at hand. There is, for instance, the statement of Pope Leo XIII, in his encyclical letter on The Condition of Labor, that 'the law should favor ownership, and its policy should be to induce as many people as possible to become owners', and his striking description in the same document of the social benefits that would result 'if working people could be encouraged to look forward to obtaining a share in the land.'

"We deem it particularly significant that the Honorable Henry A. Wallace has seen fit to speak in favor of the measure. This would seem to indicate that it can be carried into effect without creating conflict with the present agricultural-adjustment program.

"Only two generations ago we were at the height of our homestead movement, which aimed directly at the creation of an agriculture based upon the privately owned small farm. Today fully 45 percent of our farms are being operated by tenants. Needless to add, such a development bodes nothing but ill for our country and there is every justification for taking determined steps to check it and even to turn the tide in the opposite direction. We feel that the Farmers' Home Corporation, proposed by the Bankhead bill, offers an effective medium for accomplishing this. We submit, furthermore, that because of the present disturbed and transitional condition of agriculture the time is particularly opportune.

"We take occasion to warn, however, against two possible dangers: (1) Restricting the application of the measure to only certain parts of the country; (2) linking the proposed Farmers' Home Corporation too closely with present rural relief and rehabilitation efforts. We suggest that the administration of the bill be placed under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture.

"None of the many and sometimes powerfully cogent arguments advanced against governmental 'interference' in economic problems, as tending inevitably—even in spite of contrary intentions—to bring about State socialism, can justly be made against the Bankhead bill", the Commonweal declares, and with that opinion the News agrees. Precisely those arguments have been advanced in the Senate against the measure, but the majority of the Senators have not been impressed by them.

The enactment of the Bankhead bill at this session of Congress is not so questionable as the Commonweal thinks. The Senate seems to be on the verge of passing it. For 2 days Senator BANKHEAD and other supporters of the measure have succeeded in defeating efforts of opponents to kill it by recommittal and by striking out the billion-dollar bond authorization. The indications are that the Senate will soon pass the bill. If it does, there is every reason to think that the House will pass it also. The administration, it is to be remembered, is favorable toward the bill.

With the passage of this important measure, several cubits will be added to the stature of JOHN H. BANKHEAD as the foremost agricultural statesman in the Senate.

BILATERAL TRADE PACTS—ARTICLE BY HON. WALTER E. EDGE

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article by Hon. Walter E. Edge, former American Ambassador to France and also formerly United States Senator from my State of New Jersey, which appeared in the Herald Tribune on Sunday, April 21, 1935.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of Apr. 21, 1935]

BILATERAL PACTS NO TRADE AID, ABROAD OR AT HOME, SAYS EDGE—EX-AMBASSADOR FINDS DOLLAR DEVALUATION RESPONSIBLE FOR UNSETTLED WORLD COMMERCE; FAVORABLE BALANCES WON ONLY BY UNITED STATES SACRIFICES

By Walter E. Edge, former American Ambassador to France

No doubt the midwest Republican powwow, scheduled for Kansas City next month, will effectively throw the spotlight on the many inconsistencies of the Washington merry-go-round. However, thousands of eastern compatriots trust that the conferees will recognize that a national calamity demands the same receptive cooperation among members of a political party as all shades of thought have given the present administration, irrespective of partisan alinement.

The Roosevelt honeymoon has been extended long beyond the traditional period, and almost everyone not on relief is bitterly disappointed. Now is the time for the Republican Party to present a united front and save the day, as it has done on so many historic occasions. Republicans will get nowhere scolding each other. On the contrary, if they can't initiate their campaign by a display of tolerance, they will emphasize their inability to rule. This doctrine applies to the old and young, conservative or liberals.

Most of the appeals for a rejuvenated Republican Party demand what the critics term "liberalism", and then usually fail to present the specifications.

Many agree with the formula, if the definition is what history has accepted and recorded.

LIBERALISM VERSUS NEW DEAL

Liberalism, as I understand it, is the antithesis of the policies now prevailing in Washington.

Liberalism, as defined by Professor Collingwood, of Oxford University—even before the advent of the new deal—"begins with the recognition that men are free; that a man's acts are his own, spring from his own personality, and cannot be coerced." And, again, "The function of the liberal state is not to oppose the freedom of personality, but to realize it in practice."

The liberalism as practiced in Washington today, under the new deal, is the exact opposite. There dictatorship and competition have succeeded democracy and cooperation. Extravagance and inflation take the place of a balanced Budget and sound money.

Demands that private business assume the burden and the country return to a normal state are coupled with such checks, confusing and overpowering nostrums, and even coercion that a favorable response is impossible, notwithstanding that there can be no question but that the country is "raring to go."

The administration is apparently so sensitive on this point that it has reached the nauseating stage of calling names.

Only last week in Philadelphia a Cabinet officer accused capital of cowardice because its custodians hesitated to embark on new or enlarged business activities.

EXPERIMENTS

I repeat, the Government need have no misgivings. If the theorists now in command in Washington will give business half a chance, plain, ordinary common sense, not to speak of business acumen, will assure that capital will do its full part as a matter of self-preservation as well as loyalty.

The army of unemployed is just as much, if not more, interested in a return to normal business, conducted by the individual, as the employer or the stockholder. Two years of the new deal, notwithstanding all types of temporary employment, have resulted in placing one-sixth of the country's population on relief.

The sooner unemployed labor realizes that it will not be permanently placed until capital has at least a fair chance, the sooner the depression will be effectively broken, and not before. Many of the experiments in Washington, heralded with a blare of trumpets, have been discarded, but more seem to be promised.

During my recent visit to the Orient and southern Europe I was particularly interested in observing trade and economic conditions as they might affect the United States.

If the Washington administration seriously believes the proposed bilateral commercial treaties will provide relief or make any substantial dent in the existing business stagnation, or materially increase our export trade, it will be grievously disappointed.

I use the words "materially increase our export trade" with qualifications, as, of course, it is always possible to boost a favorable trade balance, if the United States is prepared to make the major part of the sacrifice. I am convinced, because of trade conditions and policies one finds in vogue in almost every country abroad, that for any new business our producers obtain we will give up much more than a quid pro quo or we won't get the order. In other words, our experience with Soviet Russia, where we were held up with a demand for the goods and the wherewithal to purchase as well, may be an extreme, but at least should be a warning.

In the first place, the greatest detriment to increasing our international trade are the feverish and entirely undependable conditions existing with international exchange, to a great extent brought about by the unnecessary, unwise, and unproductive action of the present administration in devaluing the American dollar. Until the monetary policies of at least the major nations of the world are stabilized, business commitments beyond the necessities of the hour are out of the question.

REVERSED EMPHASIS

By urging commercial treaties under present conditions, the administration is putting the cart before the horse. Its proposed Yankee trading between countries may have some advantage in isolated instances, but as a national policy with any expectation of gain we haven't a chance.

I have no intention of engaging in an old-fashioned protective-tariff argument, but it is difficult for some of us to understand just how it is possible to decrease industrial unemployment at home through the lowering of the tariff on dutiable commodities for the obvious purpose of permitting some country to increase its sales within our borders. On the other hand, we would be giving no concession to any country with which we were negotiating by urging it to make greater efforts to increase its exports of undutiable commodities. Then when our importers are called upon to buy, as all agree trade cannot flow but one way, our devalued currency compels them to pay a 40-percent tribute. Therefore, any way you look at this so-called "Yankee" trading we must be prepared to give up something we now possess. In a word, the United States will never recover her economic or commercial prosperity if she depends on increased exports to bring it about.

As students of the situation well know, our manufactured products needed or desired by the nationals of other countries are almost prohibited by quotas, increased duties, or other trade restrictions. The devaluing of our currency only inspired other nations to instigate all types of reprisals. For example, an automobile costing about $500 in the United States costs more than $3,000 in Rome. The moment the administration made it possible to buy American dollars at a 40-percent discount other countries, in most cases, increased their tariffs or decreed partial embargoes.

Our raw materials, which ordinarily accounted for 8 percent of our exports, are annually becoming less necessary for foreign consumption, for the simple reason that our former customers abroad either have developed their own supplies or consummated more advantageous terms with our competitors. In fact, a report from the Department of Commerce, published last week, admitted that cotton exports, formerly our most eagerly sought exportable product, had decreased 40 percent during the last 8 months.

TRADE WITH JAPAN

Again, how can we compete with Japan under present price conditions?

You can buy a fully equipped bicycle in Tokyo for $5, a custom-made silk shirt for $2, a pure silk necktie for 50 cents. Compare those prices with the American schedule and with the administration's effort to have domestic commodity prices rise and tariffs lowered. The Japanese are manufacturing almost everything for the world market except the better type of automobiles, and from all indications they won't be long reaching that accomplishment.

Our relief lies right at home. We must revive our domestic market and bring back some of the 40 or more percent of shrunken or diminished local purchases. I am not attempting to make a political argument at this time, but I am convinced that we will never enjoy anything comparable to permanent recovery until we transfer the activity of stimulating trade from the Government to the governed. Colossal expenditures with increased taxation won't do the trick.

DELAYING RECOVERY

Submerging individual enterprise and initiative into regimentation and centralized bureaucratic control only will deter and delay permanent recovery. The Government may stimulate in spots and, no doubt, through these tremendous expenditures and a $10,000,000,000 deficit, has done so; but as the last 2 years have certainly demonstrated, until the public gets more confidence, it cannot be expected to assume the responsibility and take up the slack, particularly when one reviews the confusion and uncertainty at the National Capital.

I can hear an immediate observation that such a program would be going back to the old order. Such expressions are childish. There is no power, even among the most conservative and reactionary, to ever return to the so-called "old order." The experiences of the past have reached every class. Business has learned a lesson at a terrible cost, and, if government will limit or minimize its destructive competition, the results to every type of citizenship will be far more satisfactory than the apparent determination at Washington to administer as well as to regulate. The latter must always come from the Government, and should. It is the function of Congress; that is, if Congress does not completely abdicate its responsibility.

WHO LOST THE MOST

The debacle of the last 5 years has brought relatively much more catastrophe and ruin to the formerly so-called "prosperous" than to those the drastic policies propose to protect. Everyone knows the water has been pretty well squeezed out of the pre-'29 bubbles, and, with many regulatory and remedial laws since put into effect, we can be reasonably sure a return to real encouragement of the individual would promote permanent recovery rather than licentiousness.

Surely with unemployment, as recently announced by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, having reached the highest peak in history; and with the cost of relief millions above that at the advent of the present administration, no one can successfully contend that the policy of experimentation has gotten us anywhere excepting further in the mire.

No school of thought, so far as I know, differs with the conviction that the lessons of the last 5 years have made necessary a complete social-insurance program, but liberalism, so called, should be clearly defined, and not consist of a race between two political parties for popular approval and acclaim.

PREVENTION OF LYNCHING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. COSTIGAN that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 24) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing, and punishing the crime of lynching.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Am I correct in understanding that, under the rules and practices of the Senate, if at the close of today's proceedings the Senate should recess, the pending motion would not be displaced; but if, on the other hand, the Senate shall adjourn, the effect will be to displace the pending motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has stated the parliamentary situation correctly.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, as the Senate approached the hour of recess yesterday, I had taken up the bill with a view to going through the more significant sections of it and undertaking to show their import. So, by way of beginning today, I wish to read for a second time the second section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. If any State or governmental subdivision thereof fails, neglects, or refuses to provide and maintain protection to the life or person of any individual within its jurisdiction against a mob or riotous assemblage, whether by way of preventing or punishing the acts thereof, such State shall by reason of such failure, neglect, or refusal be deemed to have denied to such person due process of law and the equal protection of the laws of the State, and to the end that the protection guaranteed to persons within the jurisdictions of the several States, or to citizens of the United States, by the Constitution of the United States, may be secured, the provisions of this act are enacted.

Mr. President, this section is the heart of the proposed legislation. It undertakes to lay the foundation for all the provisions, all the extraordinary provisions, which are contained in the sections which follow. Let us look at this section. In the first place, section 2 provides in language as follows:

If any State or governmental subdivision thereof fails, neglects, or refuses to provide and maintain protection to the life or person of any individual within its jurisdiction against a mob or riotous assemblage, whether by way of preventing or punishing the acts thereof, such State shall by reason of such failure, neglect, or refusal be deemed to have denied to such person due process of law—

And so forth. That language is a judgment by act of law, and it negatives every theory of jurisprudence from which this country derives its life. The simple failure of an American Commonwealth to cope with a mob or the acts of three or four persons by way of interfering with the right of a man to pursue his ordinary existence or to live, the mere fact that the failure is adjudged not by a court of justice but is adjudged by the Congress of the United States to have been a denial by the State to such person of due process of law and the equal protection of the laws of the State, constitute an irrebuttable presumption of law, regardless of the innocence or the guilt of the party affected, which happens to be one of the sovereign States of the Union. I wish to dwell upon that point.

Congress has no power to convict anybody, and when it assumes that power we may write "Ichabod" over our doorposts. Its glories will have departed, and I should not hesitate to say that its right to existence will have been forfeited. Yet here we are, with the legislation before us seriously put forward, pleas made for it by two Senators—legislation which undertakes to arrogate to the Congress of the United States the power to declare an irrebuttable conclusion of guilt regardless of trial and regardless of the facts. If there were no other reason for the defeat of the legislation, that would be sufficient.

Congress must have a care. Once the Congress conveys to the minds of the American people that it can determine who is guilty and who is innocent, once it declares in the law that under certain circumstances either an individual or a State shall be deemed to have violated the law, it has struck down on one hand the judicial department established in the Constitution and from which the country derives its life, because we live by way of justice; and, on the other hand, has stricken down the right of every individual in the land.

If this proposed legislation should be enacted, I imagine there would rise a cry throughout the land addressed to the Congress, "Who art thou that thou hast presumed to be the judge over us?" It is absurd, it is unfounded in reason, it is a violation of the Constitution which the bill itself purports to maintain, and it is a denial of the fundamental rights of the freemen who constitute the Republic of the United States. It is an imposition upon the States, which, carried out, will destroy them.

Let me make an application which will be pertinent to the thought of one of the authors of the bill. I do not know the facts, but I read from time to time in the New York papers of gangsters, 3 or 4 or 5. The bill defines a mob as "an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert." I read of three or more persons acting in concert in the streets of the city of New York, with their machine guns concealed in milk wagons, shooting down for price some citizen who walks the street. If there is virtue in the bill now before us, if the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] means that the bill shall be given in New York the force and effect which he expects it to be given in the State of North Carolina, then under the terms of the bill the State of New York can be deemed to have denied to the person so shot down due process of law and the equal protection of the laws of the State, and the Federal Government must intervene. I do not hesitate to say that if the bill should pass, the first victim of its injustice and the first to feel the weight of its unconsidered folly would be the city of New York in the State of New York.

Moreover, Mr. President, the first section of the bill undertakes by legislative act to interpret the Constitution of the United States. It does not subordinate the law to the Constitution, but it undertakes to say what is the Constitution, and by way of saying it it provides that the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution is an amendment which provides that where three or four men may take the life of another, the State in which they take his life has defeated the amendment and violated the due-process-of-law clause of the Constitution and the further clause providing the equal protection of the laws of the State. It is an effort, Mr.

President, to strain the Constitution and to write into that great document ideas and conceptions, powers and force, never contemplated even in the heated hours when the fourteenth amendment was adopted by the people of the United States.

Again, the section I have read gives directly, and in unqualified terms, the supervision of the sovereign States of the Union to the Federal Union. When did North Carolina fall so low, when did New York fall so low, when did Colorado fall into such depths that we are here inviting the Federal Union which the 13 States created—it did not create North Carolina—to become the lord and the supervisor of the sovereign Commonwealths which constitute the Union?

Imagine the situation if this section should pass some watchful eye at Washington, some new bureau, some branch of the Department of Justice, sitting here upon the watchtower at Washington, casting a suspicious eye throughout this broad land, to see, not whether crimes are being committed against the Federal Government, not whether Federal laws are being complied with, not whether taxes are being paid, but whether the sovereign States of the American Union are doing their simple duty as written in their own constitutions as well as in the Constitution of the United States!

I will read now section 3, subdivision (a):

> Any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof who is charged with the duty or who possesses the power or authority as such officer or employee to protect the life or person of any individual injured or put to death by any mob or riotous assemblage or any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof having any such individual in his custody, who fails, neglects, or refuses to make all diligent efforts to protect such individual from being so injured or being put to death or any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof charged with the duty of apprehending, keeping in custody, or prosecuting any person participating in such mob or riotous assemblage who fails, neglects, or refuses to make all diligent efforts to perform his duty in apprehending, keeping in custody, or prosecuting to final judgment under the laws of such State all persons so participating, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

That section takes in every policeman in America. It takes in the mayor of every city of America. It takes in every sheriff and every deputy sheriff in America. It takes in the governor of every State in America. It takes in every prosecuting officer in America. It probably takes in every judge on every local bench in America. It ties to the responsibility of the Federal Government these officers of the law who derive no authority from the Federal Government, who are elected by the people of their counties and their cities and their States, who are paid by the people of their counties and their cities and their States, who are responsible at the polls to the people of their counties and their cities and their States. It makes felons of them if, in the judgment of the Federal authorities, they fall short of their duty. Worse than that, it provides as to these immense classes of our population—the local officers of the law from the governor all the way down to the coroner—that if they fail in any case to arrest the processes of a mob, if they go out and face the mob and do all that men can do, and the mob overcomes them, nevertheless, under the proposed law, failure—the mere human impossibility of coping with a dreadful situation—is made a felony, and a man is subject to a fine of $5,000, or imprisonment for 5 years.

Mr. President, I hope Senators get the significance of that. We propose in this measure, or this measure proposes—I do not assume for one moment that Senators propose it, other than the two who introduced it—to set over the governors, the judges, the solicitors, the sheriffs, the mayors, the policemen, the deputy sheriffs, and the coroners throughout the country the force and effect of a criminal law which would deprive them not only of their property but also of their liberty.

When did we ever before hear anything like that in the United States of America? Grant that mob law is bad; grant that lynching is horrible; I do not know but that a law which proposes to subject every officer of the law in the American Union, notwithstanding there is no official privity between him and the Union itself, notwithstanding he is a local officer, notwithstanding he may do his duty, to the disgrace of felony and the ruin of a fine is comparable, at any rate, in its dreadfulness to the mob law itself. It proposes, in the form of law, to oppress, to constrain, to control, to condemn, and destroy every officer in every local government in the land.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator is commenting on a general declaration in the proposed legislation. I submit to him that he has overlooked the controlling language with respect to the officers, to be found in section 3 (a) on pages 2 and 3 of the bill——

Mr. BAILEY. That is what I am reading. I have not overlooked it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Which states, on line 22, following the reference to officers and employees having individuals in their custody, that if they fail, neglect, or refuse to make all diligent efforts to protect an individual—I am paraphrasing, rather than reading the exact language—from being injured or put to death, certain consequences shall follow. I desire to say in this connection that the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Democratic leader, has proposed one or two amendments under which that precise language would be incorporated in other parts of the proposed legislation.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well, Mr. President; I am glad the senior Senator from Arkansas has proposed some amendments. I have not seen them. I am discussing the bill as it is written. I shall discuss the amendments when they are brought forward.

I notice the attitude of my friend the senior Senator from Colorado. He is, all the way through, throwing tubs to the whales. No one here, perhaps, understands the weaknesses of this proposed legislation any better than he does. On day before yesterday the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] called the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that under the proposed act the workingmen of America in the midst of a strike could, with one motion of the Federal Government, be brought under its jurisdiction, charged with carrying on an unlawful assemblage, brought into the grasp of the Federal power.

What was the answer? The Senator from Colorado said he had never thought of that before, that he would be perfectly willing to accept an amendment that would except that type of men.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The able Senator from North Carolina, who never, I am sure, purposely misrepresents, will look in vain in the RECORD for a statement that the point now being pressed by the Senator from North Carolina was not heretofore "thought of" by me. As a matter of fact, that subject has been freely and frequently discussed by those who have been most actively concerned in the drafting of the proposed legislation.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I distinctly recall that colloquy, but I shall read what was said from the RECORD. This is the language as it appears on page 6358 of yesterday's RECORD:

> Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not know exactly what statement was made today, but the question I asked was based upon my belief that the bill as it is written would give the greatest weapon to the opponents of labor organizations that has ever been extended to them since the beginning of the history of this Government.
> I base my statement on this fact: I do not believe there is any lawyer who can read this bill and not be convinced that every time three or more members of a labor organization meet, when they are on a strike, and it can be charged that they have the intention of injuring somebody——
>
> Mr. CONNALLY. Suppose they do injure somebody?
>
> Mr. BLACK. And they also do injure somebody; they can then be tried in a Federal court.
>
> This is the point I have in mind: For years and years and years the labor organizations have been seeking to deprive the Federal courts of that very jurisdiction.

Now let us see what the Senator from Colorado said. I read from the same page:

Mr. COSTIGAN. With full appreciation of the generous words of both the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] I desire to say that the Senator from New York and I do not share the apprehensions expressed. I desire also to thank the Senator from Alabama for making clear this morning, as I think he did not make clear last night, the extent of his concern and the grounds on which he bases that concern.

Without interrupting the Senator from Texas at this moment, and reserving, of course, the right to refer to the subject at a later time, I merely suggest to the two able Senators, whose admirer I am, that if they will join in the preparation of some constructive amendment which they really believe will protect the reasonable and lawful activities of organized labor, and on the adoption of such an amendment will support the pending bill, I shall, of course, be happy to endeavor to cooperate with them.

Mr. President, that is the record. I take it that it is somehow in the contemplation of one of the authors of the bill that he can have a measure enacted which will convict the officers of the law in my State of crime, under which my State can be deemed guilty of denying to American citizens equal protection of the laws and the right of due process of law, and at the same time find some means, somewhere in the United States, some sort of an amendment, whereby we can drive a horse and wagon through his own legislation in order to make an escape for one class of our citizens. That is denying equal protection of the laws also. That defeats the whole theory of the bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is not my purpose continuously to interrupt the able discourse of the Senator from North Carolina. I feel, however, that I ought once and for all to state what I stated on more than one occasion yesterday, and what was stated, in effect, in the very paragraph which was read by the able Senator from North Carolina, that neither the Senator from New York nor I joins in the conclusion expressed by the Senator from North Carolina, the Senator from Alabama, or the Senator from Texas. The purport of the remarks read from the RECORD was that, if the Senator from Alabama or any other Senator here entertains apprehensions, which we think are unwarranted, we shall, of course, cooperate, so far as it is within our power, to aid them in the consideration and adoption of an amendment which will more securely guard the rights which we think are already protected in the proposed measure.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well; I shall propose an amendment. This is one of the definitions in the Senator's bill:

That the phrase "mob or riotous assemblage", when used in this act, shall mean an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert, without authority of law, for the purpose of killing or injuring any person in the custody of any peace officer—

And so forth. Just insert there a provision that that language shall not relate to the constituents of the Senator from Colorado, and it will be all right.

There cannot be a law for one class in the United States and another law for another class. The Commonwealth of North Carolina cannot be deemed guilty by the enactment of a law and everybody else in the United States not deemed guilty by the same means; and no one can crawl out of that situation, however he tries to do it. The proposition here was for constructive legislation which would exonerate one class of citizens from the force and effect of the proposed law. I would exonerate all classes. So much for that.

Let us take the other feature of this section. All the officers in all the States, in all the counties, and in all the cities are brought under the provisions of the bill. They would be subjected to criminal penalties for the commission of felonies.

I desire to know when the Federal Government became powerful enough to do that. I want to know what are the implications of that proposal. What power has the Congress over a sheriff in North Carolina? Congress did not elect him. Congress does not pay him. He is not responsible to the Congress. He is responsible to the people of his community; and when that responsibility is destroyed, free government in this land is destroyed. That is the clear implication.

Imagine the picture of this Union, just imagine the picture of this American Republic, with a Federal Government having power of imprisonment over local officers in every State and city in the land.

Mr. President, I know there is a considerable movement in this land to extend the powers of the Federal Government. Inch by inch the encroachment has gone on. But the pending bill is notification to the United States that there are those who intend to destroy the States and destroy local self-government, and take jurisdiction over the rights of individuals, not by way of courts of justice which could ascertain their rights, but by casting them into the grip of a central power, not governing by courts of justice, but governing by arbitrary law.

I wish to know where the Federal Union gets the power to punish a sheriff. Where is the privity? If in his capacity as an individual he violates a criminal law of the United States, to be sure it has power; but if in his official capacity he fails or neglects or refuses to carry out some State law, there is but one judge for him, and that is the judge in the jurisdiction in which he is elected and in which he lives. There is but one power to control him, and that is the power of the government which pays him and which he serves. There is but one tribunal before which he answers, and that is the tribunal of the people who put him into office by their suffrage. When that is denied, we are at the end of local self-government in the United States of America.

Again, subsection (b) provides:

(b) Any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof, acting as such officer or employee under authority of State law, having in his custody or control a prisoner, who shall conspire, combine, or confederate with any person who is a member of a mob or riotous assemblage to injure or put such prisoner to death without authority of law, or who shall conspire, combine, or confederate with any person to suffer such prisoner to be taken or obtained from his custody or control to be injured or put to death by a mob or riotous assemblage, shall be guilty of a felony, and those who so conspire, combine, or confederate with such officer or employee shall likewise be guilty of a felony. On conviction the parties participating therein shall be punished by imprisonment of not less than 5 years nor more than 25 years.

Mr. President, we already have the law on that subject. The law against doing the things described in that paragraph is the law of murder, and I defy any man to say that my Commonwealth has failed to prosecute murderers when they have committed the crime of murder. I do not wish to make an invidious distinction; but if the standing and character of American States is to be tested by the number of murderers who escape, I point Senators to those cities from which come records day after day and week by week of the deaths of men at the hands of gangs with machine guns. No one ever hears of their arrest or indictment. They escape, and that is the last of it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. With reference to the part of the bill which the Senator has just read, I recall that several years ago in the State of West Virginia it was charged that a number of miners who were on strike went from one county to another county, and it was charged that they constituted a riotous assemblage and a mob. It was charged, as I recall, that the officers of the State, the sheriff and other county officers, either conspired or colluded with the strikers in the acts which were committed, and, as I recall, some people were killed. Can the Senator see any possible manner in which, if this proposed law had then been in effect, a defense could in any way have been pleaded to keep that case from being tried in the Federal court?

Mr. BAILEY. I cannot.

Mr. BLACK. In other words, we would have transferred the jurisdiction of the trial of those miners from the State courts to the Federal courts.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes. I am coming to that. I am dwelling now, though, on another feature of the bill. The suggestion here is that certain Commonwealths in America, concerning which certain statistics have been put in the RECORD with the index finger pointed directly at them, do not enforce the law of murder and of manslaughter against men who commit murder and manslaughter; and I resent the suggestion.

When North Carolina reaches the point where she must get down upon her knees and beg the Federal Government to enforce her criminal laws, for one, I shall be willing for that Commonwealth to go out of business as a free government, and not until then. I am perfectly willing to invite comparison between the Federal Government and the government of North Carolina, and I do not hesitate to say that I will prove by statistics that we are just as instant and just as efficient in enforcing our laws as is the Federal Union. Even if it were not, the time will never come while I am alive that I will stand here and ask that a guardian ad litem or a next friend be appointed for the Commonwealth of North Carolina.

Mr. President, so much for that section. Let me move over.

I come now to section 4, as follows:

> The district court of the United States judicial district wherein the person is injured or put to death by a mob or riotous assemblage—

That is, three people or more—> shall have jurisdiction to try and to punish, in accordance with the laws of the State where the injury is inflicted or the homicide is committed, any and all persons who participate therein: Provided, That it is first made to appear to such court (1) that the officers of the State charged with the duty of apprehending, prosecuting, and punishing such offenders under the laws of the State shall have failed—

The first time in my life, Mr. President, ever I understood that failure was crime—> neglected, or refused to apprehend, prosecute, or punish such offenders; or (2) that the jurors obtainable for service in the State court having jurisdiction of the offense are so strongly opposed to such punishment that there is probability that those guilty of the offense will not be punished in such State court. A failure for more than 30 days after the commission of such an offense to apprehend or to indict the persons guilty thereof, or a failure diligently to prosecute such persons shall be sufficient to constitute prima facie evidence of the failure, neglect, or refusal described in the above proviso.

Mr. President, that section in plain language ousts the jurisdiction of the State courts throughout the American Republic. That destroys the State rights of trial by jury. That strikes at the very foundation of the life of the State and the jurisprudence of America. Then we have the other purpose in this bill that upon somebody making it appear—that is, by an affidavit, I take it; and anybody could take the oath—that the officers of the State charged with the duty of apprehending have failed, immediately the District Courts of the United States, stepping in in the name of the Federal Union, shall oust the courts of the several States, take charge of their trials, shall oust the jurors in the panels of the State courts, and substitute jurors in the panels of the Federal courts.

I confess, Mr. President, that I never expected to live to see the time when anyone bearing the name of American citizen, brought up in the traditions—traditions now of nearly 150 years of local self-government, of the rights and the powers of the States, of the right of a citizen of the Commonwealth of North Carolina to be tried by the courts which his fathers wrought out and handed down to him—I never expected to live to see the time when he should have those rights taken away on the filing of an affidavit before a Federal judge.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. GORE. Does the bill provide for disqualifying of persons for jury service who do not take an oath in advance that they will return a verdict of guilty against the defendant?

Mr. BAILEY. Well, not exactly that, I will say to the Senator, but it suggests that. I think the suggestion is there.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, does the Senator object to my presenting another state of facts with which I am familiar in connection with that particular phase?

Mr. BAILEY. Not at all; I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I happen to know that several years ago there was a strike of certain railroad men throughout the country. I recall that a number of those men gathered together and that two men were killed. There were more than three of the railroad men who were on strike gathered together. After these two men were killed, the grand jury in Alabama met and declined to indict the men who were on strike. The charge was made that the grand jury was sympathetic with the strikers. The charge was also made that some of the other people were sympathetic with the strikers who were charged with the violation of the law. If this bill had been a law in effect at that time, is it or is it not true that 30 days after those deaths had occurred the railroad operators could have gone to the Federal court and again tried these striking railroad men in the Federal court for that offense?

Mr. BAILEY. I think so, but I look forward with a great deal of expectation to the amendment which is going to be offered to exempt railroad operations, although everybody else will be included.

Now, listen to this, Mr. President:

> A failure for more than 30 days after the commission of such an offense to apprehend or to indict the persons guilty thereof, or a failure diligently to prosecute such persons, shall be sufficient to constitute prima facie evidence of the failure, neglect, or refusal described in the above proviso.

When someone kills another in Colorado, if the murderer is not caught within 30 days, the State jurisdiction is gone, the Federal Government steps in, and the Federal court tries the case. That is the effect of the provision. When a man commits a murder ordinarily he can hide himself for 30 days, and most of them do. Under this provision just a little 30-day delay is interpreted as the denial of due process of law. That is a monstrous absurdity on its face, and I do not think I need to discuss it further.

Mr. President, in this section it is further provided that if it shall be made to appear to the district court of the United States—

> That the jurors obtainable for service in the State court having jurisdiction of the offense are so strongly opposed to such punishment that there is probability that those guilty of the offense will not be punished in such State court.

That may be made to appear on an affidavit filed with the Federal judge. Some fellow comes up there and swears that he does not think the jurors over in a court in the State of North Carolina would try the case fairly, and immediately the Federal judicial system steps in, and the Federal Government takes charge, and we in that jurisdiction have granted to us the humble privilege of having a trial according to the laws of our State. I think the authors of this bill, as a mere matter of logical consistency, ought to have stricken that provision out and have written a new set of laws for the trial of people under those circumstances. I would suggest to the eminent gentlemen that they go back down the path a thousand years and uproot the common law, which is the law of North Carolina and the law of most of the other States on the Atlantic seaboard, destroy all its precedents, destroy all its advantages, and while they are writing a new law of murder and of trial, and finding a new jurisdiction, that they be not content with destroying the character of the Union and the rights of the people, that they do not stop with a centralized arbitrary Federal power and the destruction of the States and the obliteration of local self-government, but that they devise some sort of a new system of law to fit the extraordinary character of their proposal.

Again—and here is the gem of all the wisdom of this great proposition; Solomon in all his glory and the Queen of Sheba, with all her charm, never beheld the like of this:

> SEC. 5. Any county in which a person is seriously injured or put to death by a mob or riotous assemblage shall be liable to the injured person or the legal representatives of such persons, or the estate of such deceased person for a sum of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 as liquidated damages——

Mr. GORE. There is no jail penalty provided for the county?

Mr. BAILEY. I will read on to see if there is a jail penalty. It is impossible for one to tell what he may find when he is pursuing this sort of a lead—which sum may be recovered in a civil action against such county in the United States District Court of the judicial district wherein such person is put to the injury or death. Such action shall be brought and prosecuted by the United States district attorney of the district in the United States District Court for such district.

We have the United States now suing our counties.

If such amount awarded be not paid upon recovery of a judgment therefor—

I hope the Senate will appreciate the implications of this provision—such court shall have jurisdiction to enforce payment thereof by levy of execution upon any property of the county—

The Federal court can take the county courthouse and walk off with it; and I think they might as well, for if this bill should pass what use would we have for courthouses? We might turn them over to the welfare department.

Mr. SMITH. To Colorado and to New York.

Mr. BAILEY. I read further from the same provision:

or may otherwise compel payment thereof by mandamus or other appropriate process.

An order will be sent down to Wake County, N. C., some of these days to pay somebody some money; the order will come from the Federal court, and if the mandamus is exhausted, then there is an "appropriate process." I understand what that means. The proponents of the bill do not dare use the word, but that means the machine gun in the hands of the United States soldier. That is the "appropriate process." What else could it mean? They will exhaust the powers of the judiciary; they will exhaust the means provided by mandamus; and if the county refuses, then there is to be invoked the "appropriate process." The "appropriate process", under the circumstances and the spirit of this bill, cannot be anything short of a regiment of soldiers. The Federal Government is going to compel payment.

But, Mr. President, that is not all. So far as I know, this is the first time the Federal Government has ever undertaken to impose a penalty upon innocent people. I did think that innocent men and women in America were immune from the interference of the law. I felt that if a man kept the laws and behaved himself the hand of the policeman would never be laid upon him; that the power of execution would never be invoked against him.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me an interruption?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. It is manifest that this is an implication, or more than an implication, that there are no innocent ones in the section from which the Senator and I come. We are all particeps criminis; we are all in such a nefarious business that it takes the undefiled mind and the philanthropic brain of Colorado and New York to find out about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. I thought, Mr. President, if I trained my little children to keep the law that the law would always throw the power of a great government round about them and protect them and make the way of life easier for them. God helping me, I do not want to die anyhow, but if I had no other inducement to live I would want to live to see the day when this sort of threat would not be possible in a free land.

I live in a county; I am against any kind of mob action; but if in that county three or four men overreach the power of the law—as sometimes they do everywhere under the sun, for there is not a land but that the law and its officers are not always sufficient—and injure or kill some man there, they may escape, they may flee to the wilderness, they may disappear, but I remain, and, if this bill should pass, I pay the penalty. I cannot find words to express my horror and disgust at legislation of this sort.

That, however, is not all of it—

The amount recovered shall be exempt from all claims by creditors of such injured or deceased person, or the legal representatives of such injured person or of the estate of such deceased person. The amount recovered upon such judgment shall be paid to the injured person, or where death resulted, distributed in accordance with the laws governing the distribution of an interstate decedent's assets then in effect in the State wherein such death occurred.

Now I come to section 6:

SEC. 6. In the event that any person so injured or put to death shall have been transported by such mob or riotous assemblage from one county to another county or counties during the time intervening between his seizure and injury or putting to death, the county in which he is seized and the county in which he is injured or put to death shall be jointly and severally liable to pay the forfeiture herein provided, and action shall be brought and prosecuted by the United States district attorney of any district wherein any such county is located. Any district judge of the United States district court of the judicial district wherein any suit or prosecution is instituted under the provisions of this act may by order direct that such suit or prosecution be tried in any place in such district as he may designate in such order.

They not only want to hold the innocent in the county where the man is seized, but if he is carried to another county they want the right to sue in both counties. Should this legislation pass, can Senators imagine what thoughts would be in the minds of innocent people throughout our country? Every one of them would know that the whole power of the Federal Government, in the event, through some dire break-down of the powers of our laws, one man should be injured or killed, would be utilized to require every man, woman, and child in the county of the occurrence to pay taxes at the demand of the Federal Government by mandamus or other appropriate process.

Mr. President, that is coercion. Coercion is the most dangerous thing in all the life of the country. The American people cannot be coerced. They may be led, they may be persuaded, and there are those who think they can be fooled. We can work with them, we can deliberate with them; but, by the eternal gods, neither the Federal Government nor the State government nor the powers in the heaven nor the powers in hell can coerce an American citizen. He will not yield.

Something grew up with us over here. We are the heirs of a thousand years of free existence. We are the children of the Magna Carta. We are the sons of the men who wrested from Great Britain the right of representation. We will not be coerced.

When the time comes that the Federal Government makes it known to the American people that it is seeking by an act like this to coerce them—and I do not for one moment intimate that it is—when that time comes, the Congress of the United States and the Federal Government will learn the lesson learned long since by those who have tried to coerce English-speaking freemen.

Mr. President, I have discussed all the provisions of the bill. I have omitted no section. I have laid down what the bill implies and what is clearly written on its face. I shall come now to the constitutional aspects of the bill. I stated on yesterday that I desire to take some time on that matter. I think it would probably pay me to take more time than I could have taken between yesterday afternoon and this morning. However, it is not a difficult constitutional question. The question here is settled, and historically settled. I had thought it never again would be revived. The Slaughter House cases and the Civil Rights cases, back in that period of reconstruction when men's minds were inflamed, settled this question, and settled it right.

Mr. President, I digress for a moment. We had thought the question was settled; we thought the character of the American Union had been determined, and determined under extraordinary circumstances. However, if it is unsettled—and the bill implies as much—it will not be amiss for some of us to struggle here until we are exhausted to see that the settlement which was made shall be maintained for ourselves and the generations to follow.

Mr. President, I shall read first from a constitutional history of the United States by Andrew C. McLaughlin, a very recent publication by the Appleton-Century Co. It is dated 1935. I have been in possession of it only a few weeks. I shall read from page 691.

There was evidence that the war was finished when Charles Sumner declared in the Senate, "* * * it is contrary to the usage of civilized nations to perpetuate the memory of civil war", and proposed that "the names of battles with fellow citizens" be no longer "continued in the Army Register or placed on the regimental colors of the United States." And perhaps there was even greater proof of the dying of old animosities when L. Q. C. Lamar, of Mississippi, eulogizing Sumner in Congress, said, "Charles Sumner was born with an instinctive love of freedom. * * * To a man thoroughly permeated and imbued with such a creed and animated and constantly actuated by such a spirit of devotion, to behold a human being or a race of human beings restrained of their natural rights to liberty, for no crime by him or them committed, was to feel all the belligerent instincts of his nature roused to combat. The fact was to him a wrong which no logic could justify."

That is the great scene, Mr. President, when Charles Sumner announced that the war should be forgotten and when Lucius Quintus Curtius Lamar, upon his death, paid tribute to his memory in words like these.

I read again:

Though the day of new force bills was gone by—

We thought so!—

Congress did not quite surrender the hope of compelling, by direct legislation, a recognition of the civil rights and, in large measure also, the social equality of the Negro. Sumner died in 1874, but as a memorial to him and his ambitions, Congress passed the Civil Rights Act the next year. It declared all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations and privileges of inns, public conveyances, theaters, and other places of public amusement, "subject only to the conditions and limitations established by law, and applicable alike to citizens of every race and color, regardless of any previous condition of servitude." It made the act of any person denying to any such citizen such full enjoyment and privilege a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment, and it allowed the offended party to sue for civil damages. It proved to be an instance of misdirected legislative zeal. Eight years after its passage the essential portions of the act were pronounced unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

That act was incomparably more moderate than the bill we are now asked to consider. Here is what the Court held. I shall quote from the Court's decision, though I am reading from McLaughlin's summary:

It was held by the Court to assume the existence of Federal power unwarranted by either the thirteenth or the fourteenth amendment. "It would be running the slavery argument into the ground", the Court declared, "to make it apply to every act of discrimination which a person may see fit to make as to the guests he will entertain, or as to the people he will take into his coach or cab or car." * * * And while positive rights and privileges are undoubtedly secured by the fourteenth amendment they are secured by prohibition against State laws and State proceedings affecting these rights and privileges. * * * It is proper to state that civil rights, such as are guaranteed by the Constitution against State aggression, cannot be impaired by the wrongful acts of individuals, unsupported by State authority in the shape of laws, customs, or judicial or executive proceedings.

I read again:

The principle laid down in the decision was not altogether novel, but it made perfectly clear that the fourteenth amendment was not to be enforced by congressional acts directed against the misconduct of individual citizens unsupported by the authority of the State. The case ranks in importance with the Slaughter House cases (1873), an account of which will be given in a succeeding chapter.

That states the case. The fourteenth amendment, under which this legislation is proposed, relates to the actions or the proceedings of a State, and under no circumstances to the actions or the proceedings of individuals or of mobs.

I read again from page 737, from Mr. McLaughlin's work, heretofore referred to:

For nearly 20 years after the adoption of the amendment there appeared no tendency to give the first section any very serious weight. In spite of strenuous opposition of the dissenting justices, the decisions appeared to be, almost literally, reading the amendment out of court. (1) Even before the Civil Rights cases (1883) the amendment had been interpreted quite inevitably to mean that State action, and State action only, was referred to in the first section—

This bill does not refer to State action; it refers to mob action—

(2) It was made fairly clear in the Slaughter House cases that primary legislation by Congress—

And this is primary legislation—for regulating the internal affairs of the State was not justified by this section.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I shall read now from the second volume of the work entitled "The Supreme Court in United States History", by the Honorable Charles Warren, and I shall read his commentary on the Slaughter House cases:

Two months after the second argument the opinion of the Court was rendered by Judge Miller, on April 14, 1873, Judges Clifford, Davis, Strong, and Hunt concurring. It stated that it was "impressed with the gravity of the questions raised" and recognized the "great responsibility" of the decision.

I read those words because the bill we are discussing presents the same gravity and the same responsibility.

That no questions so far-reaching and pervading in their consequences, so profoundly interesting to the people of this country, and so important in their bearing upon the relations of the United States and of the several States to each other and to the citizens of the States and of the United States, have been before this Court during the official life of any of its present members.

That is, since 1858.

After considering the history of the fourteenth amendment—

And that is the amendment under which this legislation is proposed—the evil which it was designed to remedy, and its "pervading spirit", the Court held that the Louisiana statute did not violate the amendment in any particular; that if the right claimed by the plaintiff to be freed of monopoly existed, it was not a privilege or immunity of a citizen of the United States as distinguished from a citizen of a State; that the amendment, in defining a citizen of the United States, did not add any additional privileges and immunities to those which inhered in such citizens before its adoption; that it was only rights which owed their existence to the Federal Government, its national character, its Constitution, or its laws, that were placed under the special care of the National Government.

Mr. President, that is a very important distinction. The effort is made here to maintain, in the name of the Federal Government, rights which, from the foundation of every State in the American Union, have been written either in their constitutions or their bills of right.

That it was not intended to bring within the power of Congress or the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court "the entire domain of civil rights heretofore belonging exclusively to the States."

This is worthy of comment. There are people in the United States, there are politicians in the United States, there are agitators in the United States, who do desire and who are moving to bring within the power of Congress the entire domain of "civil rights heretofore belonging exclusively to the States."

And that to hold otherwise would "constitute this Court a perpetual censor upon all legislation of the States on the civil rights of their own citizens." Such, very briefly stated, was this momentous opinion. That the decision, so far as it concerned the provisions of the amendment forbidding the States to abridge the privileges and immunities of a citizen, rendered that clause a practical nullity, was pointed out by dissenting judges (Justices Field, Swayne, Bradley, and Chief Justice Chase).

I shall read from Mr. Justice Bradley where he takes another view from his dissenting opinion in this case:

The construction given by the majority of the Court made of this clause, they said, "a vain and idle enactment which accomplished nothing, and most unnecessarily excited Congress and the people on its passage."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, when the decision of the Court in the slaughter House cases came down it was regarded universally in America as of the utmost importance and of perpetual significance. There was comment throughout the country by the newspapers, and Mr. Warren has preserved for us certain of these comments. I propose to read them mainly because the present generation seems to be less appreciative of the values in that great decision than was the generation which fought the Civil War, and that the modern generation, with nothing of that atmosphere about it, is less regardful of the rights of free men and the sovereignty of the States than was the generation which made the great decision on the fields of battle.

The New York Times said of the opinion that it was—Calculated to throw the immense moral force of the Court on the side of rational and careful interpretation of the rights of the States and those of the Union. It is calculated to maintain, and to add to the respect felt for, the Court, as being at once scrupulous in its regard for the Constitution and unambitious of extending its own jurisdiction. It is also a severe, and we might hope a fatal, blow to that school of constitutional lawyers who have been engaged, ever since the adoption of the fourteenth amendment, in inventing impossible consequences for that addition to the Constitution.

I should like to read that again. The New York Times thought it was—

A fatal blow to that school of constitutional lawyers who have been engaged, ever since the adoption of the fourteenth amendment, in inventing impossible consquences for that addition to the Constitution.

It was fatal, as I thought, until this bill lifted its ugly head, its monstrous form, in the Congress of the United States.

The New York Tribune termed it—

A most important decision.

It said that it—

Set up a barrier against new attempts to take to the National Government the adjustment of questions legitimately belonging to State tribunals and legislatures.

The Philadelphia Press said that it would—

Clear away a tolerably dense legal fog.

The Boston Advertiser said that a contrary decision—

Would constitute this Court a perpetual censor upon all State legislation concerning the rights of its citizens.

That is from Boston. One is from New York and the other is from Philadelphia.

Now we come to Chicago. The Chicago Tribune said that the decision plainly indicated two things:

That the Court will not construe the constitutional amendments as upsetting State governments; and that the people of every State must look to their own protection against monopolies when they frame their constitutions and elect their legislatures, and not come to the Court afterward and ask them to undo what the legislative authority had done.

Of the soundness of the decision, it said that there could be no doubt that—

The constitutional amendments, beyond their estoppel of the States from enslaving the Negro or depriving him of the privilege of the elective franchise and the other rights of white men, cannot interfere with State rights. Any other interpretation of these amendments would be glaringly in conflict with historical facts. * * * The Federal Government thus becomes absolute in its jurisdiction, and State governments only exist or exercise their powers by its sufferance. * * * The principal value of this decision grows out of the fact that it clearly and unmistakably defines the province of the constitutional amendments and will hereafter put a quietus upon the thousand and one follies seeking to be legalized by hanging onto the fourteenth amendment. * * * The decision has long been needed as a check upon the centralizing tendencies of the Government and upon the determination of the administration to enforce its policy and to maintain its power, even at the expense of the constitutional prerogatives of the States. The Supreme Court has not spoken a moment too soon or any too boldly on this subject.

I now read Mr. Warren's comment:

Sentiments like these, widely expressed in the North, the East, and the West, afford an interesting illustration of how far the pendulum had swung away from centralization and toward the most extreme State-rights views held by the Democratic Party before the war.

An opinion similar to that of the daily press was also held by the American Law Review, which said:

"In its results it is of untold importance to the future relations of the different members of our complex system with the whole. The line which separates the Federal Government from the States, and which of late years has trenched on what are called the reserved rights of the latter, was never so precisely defined as to make trite or tiresome new descriptions of its position; and the interpretation of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States, which was called for by attempts to apply their letter, if not their spirit, to new states of fact not contemplated by the Congress nor the legislatures that made them, is the latest and one of the most important acts of Government growing out of the war."

I read again, and this is from Mr. Warren:

Had the case been decided otherwise, the States would have largely lost their autonomy and become, as political entities, only of historical interest.

That is Mr. Warren's commentary by way of interpreting the Slaughter House cases based upon the fourteenth amendment, from which the extraordinary powers of the pending bill are sought to be derived. I will read it again:

Had the case been decided otherwise, the States would have largely lost their autonomy and become, as political entities, only of historical interest.

If Mr. Warren is right, and this bill should be enacted and go to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court should reverse its position taken in the Slaughter House cases and the Civil Rights cases, then we could invoke precisely this language, and notify the world that the States have lost their autonomy and become, as political entities, only of historical interest. Mr. Warren said:

If every civil right possessed by a citizen or a State was to receive the protection of the national judiciary, and if every case involving such a right was to be subject to its review, the States would be placed in a hopelessly subordinate position; and the ultimate authority over the citizens of the State would rest with the National Government.

That is a precise description by the Honorable Charles Warren, one of the great lawyers of the country, and one of the great historical authorities on all matters touching the judiciary and the development of our law.

The ultimate authority over the citizens—

I could almost read his language into my remarks here—

The ultimate authority over the citizens if this legislation shall be passed will, so far as this Congress is concerned, rest with the National Government. The boundary lines between the States and the National Government would be practically abolished, and the rights of the citizens of each State would be irrevocably fixed as of the date of the fourteenth amendment, without power in the State to modify them, and with power in the Supreme Court of the Nation to review any State statute asserted to be in violation of such rights, even if such statute affected solely a matter of State policy. Inasmuch as about 800 cases have been before the Court since 1873, involving State statutes under the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment, it is impossible to conceive of the amount of litigation on which that Court would have been called to pass, if State legislation involving every possible civil right of a State citizen could also have been brought before it under the privilege and immunity clause.

Mr. President, I turn from historical works and the constitutional history of the United States and the Supreme Court of the United States in the history of the United States to a volume of the Supreme Court reports. I turn to the Civil Rights case, reported in One Hundred and Ninth United States Reports, October term, 1883, at page 11. For the benefit of those who may be interested, I will state that these cases are known as the Civil Rights cases. They were five in number, but were consolidated for the purposes of the opinion of the Court. I read first the Court's quotation from the fourteenth amendment:

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

It is State action of a particular character that is prohibited—

Says the Court—

Individual invasion of individual rights is not the subject matter of the amendment.

That is the decision of the Supreme Court in 1883, a few years after the surrender at Appomattox and almost in the midst of reconstruction.

It has a deeper and a broader scope. It nullifies and makes void all State legislation and State action of every kind which impairs the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States or which injures them in life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or which denies to any of them the equal protection of the laws. It not only does this, but, in order that the national will, thus declared, may not be a mere brutum fulmen, the last section of the amendment invests Congress with power to enforce it by appropriate legislation. To enforce what? To enforce the prohibition. To adopt appropriate legislation for correcting the effects of such prohibited State laws and State acts and thus to render them effectually null, void, and innocuous.

Where is there a State law, where is there a State act that denies to anybody in America due process of law or the equal protection of the law? And yet that is the excuse, that is the pretext upon which this bill is brought here. That could be its only justification, and that is why in the second section of the bill States are deemed, in the event a man is destroyed or injured by a mob, to have denied those rights. The authors of the bill undertake to write into the law what the Supreme Court of the United States declares cannot be written into it.

This is the legislative power conferred upon Congress, and this is the whole of it.

If it is the whole of it, all this bill is out of court.

It does not invest Congress with power to legislate upon subjects which are within the domain of State legislation—

Congress cannot legislate upon murder; it cannot legislate upon lynching; they are in the domain of State legislation—but to provide modes of relief against State legislation, or State action, of the kind referred to. It does not authorize Congress to create a code of municipal law for the regulation of private rights, but to provide modes of redress against the operation of the State laws, and the action of State officers, executive or judicial, when these are subversive of the fundamental rights specified in the amendment. Positive rights and privileges are undoubtedly secured by the fourteenth amendment; but they are secured by way of prohibition against State laws and State proceedings affecting those rights and privileges, and by power given to Congress to legislate for the purpose of carrying such prohibition into effect; and such legislation must necessarily be predicated upon such supposed State laws or State proceedings, and be directed to the correction of their operation and effect. A quite full discussion of this aspect of the amendment may be found in United States v. Cruikshank (92 U. S. 542); Virginia v. Rives (100 U. S. 313; and Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339).

Mr. President, I should like to read a great deal more from this opinion. I desire to see if I can look through it and abbreviate the reading.

An apt illustration of this distinction may be found in some of the provisions of the original Constitution. Take the subject of contracts, for example. The Constitution prohibited the States from passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts. This did not give the Congress the power to provide laws for the general enforcement of contracts; nor power to invest the courts of the United States with jurisdiction over contracts, so as to enable parties to sue upon them in those courts.

And again:

And so in the present case, until some State law has been passed, or some State action through its officers or agents has been taken, adverse to the rights of citizens sought to be protected by the fourteenth amendment, no legislation of the United States under said amendment nor any proceeding under such legislation can be called into activity, for the prohibitions of the amendment are against State laws and acts done under State authority.

Mr. President, when a mob gathers and lynches a man that is not under any State law and that is not under any State authority.

Again:

An inspection of the law shows that it makes no reference whatever to any supposed or apprehended violation of the fourteenth amendment on the part of the States.

The present bill undertakes to constitute a violation of the fourteenth amendment by act of law, an arbitrary declaration of an irrebuttable presumption.

It proceeds ex directo to declare that certain acts committed by individuals shall be deemed offenses and shall be prosecuted and punished by proceedings in the courts of the United States. It does not profess to be corrective of any constitutional wrong committed by the States; it does not make its operation to depend upon any such wrong committed. It applies equally to cases arising in the States which have the justest laws respecting the personal rights of citizens, and whose authorities are ever ready to enforce such laws, as to those which arise in States that may have violated the prohibition of the amendment. In other words, it steps into the domain of local jurisprudence and lays down rules for the conduct of individuals in society toward each other, and imposes sanctions for the enforcement of those rules, without referring in any manner to any supposed action of the State or its authorities.

And again:

These sections in the objectionable features before referred to are different always from the law ordinarily called the "civil-rights bill", originally passed April 9, 1866 (14 Stat. 27, ch. 31), and reenacted with some modifications in sections 16, 17, and 18 of the Enforcement Act passed May 31, 1870 (16 Stat. 140, ch. 114). That law, as reenacted, after declaring that all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every State and Territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of persons and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes, licenses, and exactions of every kind, and none other, any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding, proceeds to enact that any person who, under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, shall subject, or cause to be subjected, any inhabitant of any State or Territory to the deprivation of any rights secured or protected by the preceding section (above quoted), or to different punishment, pains, or penalties, on account of such person being an alien, or by reason of his color or race, than is described for the punishment of citizens, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject to fine and imprisonment as specified in the act. This law is clearly corrective in its character, intended to counteract and furnish redress against State laws and proceedings, and customs having the force of law, which sanction the wrongful acts specified.

In the Revised Statutes, it is true, a very important clause, to wit, the words "any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding", which gave the declaratory section its point and effect are omitted; but the penal part, by which the declaration is enforced, and which is really the effective part of the law, retains the reference to State laws, by making the penalty apply only to those who would subject parties to a deprivation of their rights under color of any statute, ordinance, custom, etc., of any State or Territory, thus preserving the corrective character of the legislation.

The distinction is perfectly clear. The fourteenth amendment relates to the States and their formal action. The State acts only by authority of law and by its ministerial officers executing the law.

The distinction is perfectly clear. The fourteenth amendment relates to the States in their formal action. The State acts only by the authority of law and by its ministerial officers executing the law.

But here it is proposed that upon a mob breaking loose in a State we may tear down the Constitution, overrule these decisions, and bring into the jurisdiction of a sovereign State the power of the Federal Government.

In this connection it is proper to state that civil rights, such as are guaranteed by the Constitution against State aggression, cannot be impaired by the wrongful acts of individuals, unsupported by State authority in the shape of laws, customs, or judicial or executive proceeding. The wrongful act of an individual, unsupported by any such authority, is simply a private wrong, or a crime of that individual—

Yet the bill proposes to put a penalty upon all the people in a county because three individuals interfere with the rights of another individual—an invasion of the rights of the injured party, it is true, whether they affect his person, his property, or his reputation; but if not sanctioned in some way by the State, or not done under State authority, his rights remain in full force, and may presumably be vindicated by resort to the laws of the State for redress. An individual cannot deprive a man of his right to vote, to hold property, to buy and sell, to sue in the courts, or to be a witness or a juror; he may, by force or fraud, interfere with the enjoyment of the right in a particular case; he may commit an assault against the person, or commit murder, or use ruffian violence at the polls, or slander the good name of a fellow citizen; but, unless protected in these wrongful acts by some shield of State law or State authority, he cannot destroy or injure the right.

Nothing could be clearer than the distinction between the doctrine of the courts with regard to the acts of the States, and the doctrine regarding the acts of a mob as written in the language of the proposed legislation:

Hence, in all those cases where the Constitution seeks to protect the rights of the citizen against discriminative and unjust laws of the State by prohibiting such laws, it is not individual offenses, but abrogation and denial of rights, which it denounces, and for which it clothes the Congress with power to provide a remedy. This abrogation and denial of rights, for which the States alone were or could be responsible, was the great seminal and fundamental wrong which was intended to be remedied. And the remedy to be provided must necessarily be predicated upon that wrong. It must assume that in the cases provided for, the evil or wrong actually committed rests upon some State law or State authority for its execution and perpetration.

I shall take no further time reading this historical opinion of our great court. I shall content myself by saying that the Slaughter House cases and the Civil Rights cases, which involved the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments, up until now have been regarded as having determined once and for all the relation of the States to the Federal Union under these amendments.

The war settled the question of slavery. There were those on the Federal side who said that those on the Confederate side were fighting to perpetuate the institution of slavery. Those on the Confederate side, I will say with my latest breath, justly said they were fighting to preserve the rights of the States of the American Union. The question of slavery was merely the match which set off the explosion of war. The war determined the question of slavery probably a little sooner than it otherwise would have been determined. But after the war was over there still remained to be settled the question of State rights.

I have read today the testimony from the highest Court in the land, the ultimate authority, that although the question of State rights seemed to go down with the surrender at Appomattox, it still lives in the hearts of the American people, North and South. It was drawing its life and its sustenance from the Federal Constitution, which our fathers wrought 145 years ago, and at length, as the clouds of civil conflict were rolling from this land, never again to return, I hope and pray, the Supreme Court of the Federal Union determined that State rights had not in any degree been impaired. The South lost the war, but the American spirit preserved State rights.

We lost the war. Our fathers preserved our rights. It remains for us here today to preserve the heritage which they handed down to us.

Mr. President, I have finished for the time. I am going to yield to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] in a moment, but before doing so I wish to say just a word or two further. I was reading the address of my honored friend the junior Senator from the State of New York [Mr. WAGNER] on this subject——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. If we are going to carry on the debate, we ought to have more of an attendance or else take a recess. Therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to finish just the one thought before that is done?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well; I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. BAILEY. I said I was reading the address of my honored friend the distinguished and able junior Senator from the State of New York [Mr. WAGNER], and I came upon these words:

Far from depriving the States of their obligations and power to preserve order, it (the bill) gives them added incentive to do their duty.

We need no incentive to do our duty! Holding in trust for my State all that a United States Senator can hold in the National Council, what can a Senator say when a fellow Senator introduces a bill and tells me that the bill is an incentive to my Commonwealth to do its duty? Mr. President, it is best that I should say nothing! Is it possible that we have reached the hour in America when it is proposed to ride us with whip and spur? Is that to be the incentive to a State to do its duty? If so, I want to be there when they saddle the nag!

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CAPPER. It seems to me the pending measure, Senate bill 24, must appeal to and command the support of every Member of the Senate who believes in law and order.

I am not going to take the time of the Senate to recite the great volume of statistics which tells the story of the prevalance of lynching in this country. That information already has been laid before the Senate. Everyone knows that this blot on our civilization, lynch law, is far too prevalent in the North as well as in the South, and neither its victims nor its executioners are confined to any one race.

Neither am I going into a gruesome relation of stories of mob murders. Suffice it to say that the details of cruelty and barbarity, of savagery and bloodthirst, as related from time to time in newspapers and magazines and by word of mouth, stagger the imagination. That such scenes are enacted in enlightened America is a sinister blot on our boasted civilization.

I do desire, however, to call attention to the fact that persistent propaganda calculated to make it appear that rape is practically the sole cause or excuse for lynching and that Negroes are lynched only for crimes against white women is not true. Men are tortured, maimed, killed for minor crimes; all too frequently for imaginary offenses.

Every such mob crime weakens the moral fiber of the people who participate and many of those not actually participants and tends to the substitution of mob law for statute law.

Surely no one needs to argue the injustice, the danger, the shame of lynching. That much is conceded. Lynching works a gross injustice, because the accused is denied the fundamental and constitutional trial by due process of law. This injustice operates most generally against our colored citizens. Will anyone deny that, as a race, these are good and loyal citizens? Has this race ever been lacking in loyalty to our country and our flag? Will not its record, in peace and in war, compare very favorably with any other class of our population? Does not the splendid force of 400,000 Negroes in the Military Establishment of the United States during the World War speak with sufficient emphasis of their valor, of their devotion to their country?

By what process of reasoning can anyone justify the people of this race being denied the constitutional right to trial by jury when accused of crime? There can be only one answer to that question.

Lynching is not only a monstrous injustice to those persons lynched and to the group against which it is chiefly practiced; it also is a danger and a menace to orderly government in the United States.

Moreover, it is a shame and a humiliation and a disgrace to the name of America among the nations of the world; it holds up to scorn, it sets at naught our protestations about democracy, justice, equality before the law. It cannot be tolerated for long if our Republic is to endure.

I do not know that this measure, enacted into law, will bring an end to this barbaric hangover from the Dark Ages. I do believe it will go far toward curbing lynchings and bringing about orderly government by law; and we should do everything in our power to bring this about.

One of the chief talking points urged against this measure is the question of its constitutionality. I am not disturbed by that question. To my mind, it has been very ably disposed of by previous speakers supporting the proposed legislation. To those worrying about the alleged unconstitutionality of the bill I suggest that it is the duty of the courts to pass on the constitutionality of legislation enacted by Congress. If this measure is unconstitutional, its opponents need not worry about its ever becoming the permanent law of the land; the courts will take care of that by promptly setting the act aside.

Mr. President, I can see no reason for a prolonged argument in support of this measure. Its purposes are so laudable, its motives so much in the interest of humanity, its need so manifest, that I cannot understand why anyone should oppose its passage. I intend to vote for the measure if given the opportunity. It is a matter of regret to me that apparently we are not to be allowed a vote on the proposed legislation today.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an able and forceful editorial from the Washington Daily News of today.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News of Apr. 26, 1935]

NOT DIXIE'S VOICE

A small group of southern Senators threaten to filibuster the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill just as a similar group killed the Dyer bill 12 years ago.

They may succeed. But if they do the country should know that their specious pleas in behalf of State rights or chivalry do not echo the sentiments of the whole South.

Organizations representing some 42,000,000 Americans urge passage of this bill. How much of this support comes from south of the Mason-Dixon line may be judged from its approval by many of Dixie's leading papers.

"Its (the Costigan-Wagner bill's) invasion of State rights should cause no southern heartburning", says the Norfolk (Va.) Virginian-Pilot. "There is no such thing, morally speaking, as a reserved right to deal in our own way with a form of collective murder which our own way has uniformly failed to punish."

"It may be", says the Newport News (Va.) Press, "that the antilynching bill will not be adopted by the Congress now in session. But if it is not, and lynchings do not stop, it will be adopted by some other Congress; in fact, must be adopted if the machinery of justice is to function."

"Apparently", says the Macon (Ga.) Telegraph, "the mere threat of the Federal antilynching bill has a wholesome effect, and the time has come when even the South would vote for such a bill."

Southern women, too, have been quick to resent Senator SMITH'S quaint argument that "lynchings are necessary for womanhood's protection." Scores of letters, telegrams, and resolutions from southern women's religious, welfare, and club organizations have repudiated the preposterous claim that the South's law is helpless to protect the South's women.

Proponents of this measure claim 59 Senate votes from all over the country and a big majority in the House. Only 20 Senators are called irreconcilables. It is neither just nor gallant of them to filibuster against this popular national movement.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. No; I stated before concluding for the time that I would yield to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] at his request. I had also agreed to yield to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER]. I rather think it is my duty now to yield to him; so I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. STEIWER. I thank the Senator. Does the Senator from Colorado wish me to yield to him?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in order that I may place in the RECORD some telegrams and newspaper articles?

Mr. STEIWER. I am glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD a number of telegrams received by me today, strongly urging the passage of the present legislation and expressing the hope that no filibuster will be allowed to succeed; also an editorial attributed to the New Orleans (La.) Item of April 3, 1935; also an article in this morning's Washington Post, under caption of the Associated Press, stating that the Interracial Commission meeting in Atlanta, Ga., composed of 50 members from 11 States, at its seventeenth annual gathering, came out for the first time yesterday in favor of a Federal law against lynching.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., April 26, 1935.

Senator EDWARD P. COSTIGAN:

I desire to record with you at this time my deep appreciation of your efforts in behalf of antilynching legislation in the Congress. Although myself not a member of the minority group most victimized by this form of oppression, it seems to me it ought to be clear to all who are not yet ready to abandon our democratic form of government that this Nation's duty to stamp out the lynching custom is, of all its important duties, one of the most pressing and imperative. While the struggle to enact an antilynching statute is fought with great emotional excitement, I submit that you and the other friends of this worthy cause can afford to stand your ground without flinching, convinced of the ultimate success of any cause that is noble, just, and fundamentally sound, even if temporarily unpopular.

HENRY CATER PATTERSON.

[From the New Orleans (La.) Item of Apr. 3, 1935]

LYNCHING AND PUBLIC?

The New Orleans Ministerial Union endorses the Costigan-Wagner lynching bill. Clergy elsewhere in the South have endorsed it, and other southern organizations have called for the bill's passage in sufficient numbers to make a respectable showing for the orderly and humane elements of the South's population.

A conviction persists in other parts that a majority of the countryfolk of the South approves of lynching and will make short work of any Congressman who dares to interfere with it as an "institution." A good deal of evidence exists that much of this rural barbarism is mythical. The news for several years has abounded in stories of village constables and private citizens who have defied and outwitted mobs and foiled lynching bees.

If lynching were held as sacred in the country districts as some timorous Congressmen believe it is, some or all of these constables, clergymen, and private citizens would have been run out of their communities. Perhaps an occasional reprisal of this kind can be cited, but if it were the common practice practically nobody would dare defy lynch mobs.

[From the Washington Post of Apr. 26, 1935]

ATLANTA, April 25.—A call for a Federal antilynch law came from the Interracial Commission here today.

Composed of 50 members from 11 States, the commission in its seventeenth annual meeting came out for a Federal law against lynching for the first time. The organization expressed itself as "disappointed" by the record of State and local officials in lynching cases.

The commission also gave its endorsement to the Bankhead farm-tenant bill now pending in Congress.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I also desire to insert in the RECORD a telegram received this afternoon from Mr. W. W. Alexander, recently, I am advised, elected president of Dillard University, of New Orleans, La., in which references are made to the membership of the Interracial Committee, and the resolution adopted yesterday is detailed. The telegram is not long, and I ask unanimous consent to have it read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ATLANTA, GA., April 26, 1935.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
United States Senator:

Membership of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation comprises 130 representative citizens, educators, ministers, editors, business men, leaders of women's organizations of 13 Southern States. Affiliated are State and local interracial committees with aggregate membership running into thousands. Following is the statement unanimously adopted yesterday by the commission in annual session at Atlanta: "Hitherto the commission has taken no position relative to Federal antilynching legislation. We were agreed that the primary responsibility for the prevention and punishment of lynching rested upon State officials and courts, and that in the last analysis public opinion was largely the determining factor. Consequently, the commission from its inception has worked continuously along these lines, seeking special antilynching legislation in a number of States; urging vigorous preventive measures when lynchings were threatened; asking effective court action against the members of mobs; and, at the same time, seeking through all possible avenues of publicity and education to build up a public opinion that would no longer tolerate crimes of this character. Lynching records of the last 15 years indicate progress along the line of prevention. Officers generally are more vigilant than formerly in the protection of prisoners, thereby reducing the lynching toll. Meantime intelligent public opinion is practically unanimous in condemnation of mob violence. On the contrary, with rare exceptions, attempts at prosecution in lynching cases continue to be futile. In nearly every case the community hysteria which gives rise to a lynching makes impossible any effective court action against the perpetrators of the crime. Consequently, in not 1 case in 10 is an effective effort made by the authorities to identify and prosecute the members of lynching mobs. Even in the rare cases in which such efforts have been made, indictments have seldom been obtained, and convictions have usually proved impossible. Disappointed by this record of impotence on the part of State and local officials, the commission has reluctantly been forced to the conclusion that little is to be expected from this source, at least in the immediate future, and that an appeal to the Federal courts in such cases is justified and demanded by the conditions. The commission favors, therefore, the enactment of Federal legislation to this end, in the hope that Federal agents and courts would be in better position to act fearlessly and effectively in the prosecution of participants in the crime of lynching."

WILL W. ALEXANDER.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I wish to request the Senator from Colorado to try to obtain information as to the names, residences, and occupations of the "patriots" who sent this telegram. I should be obliged to him if he would do that.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from South Carolina I will say that during the day I have made an effort to obtain precisely what he requests, and I have received information giving names of a number of prominent people who are reported connected with the association to which he refers.

Mr. SMITH. I do not ask the Senator to read them, but to have them put into the RECORD.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I shall take pleasure in doing so. The public will likewise be interested in the names.

Mr. SMITH. I shall be glad if the Senator will put them in the RECORD.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I ask unanimous consent to have the names printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NAMES OF A NUMBER OF CITIZENS REPORTED ACTIVELY INTERESTED IN THE WORK OF THE COMMISSION ON INTERRACIAL COOPERATION

E. McNeill Poteat, Jr., president (said to be a young southern minister of distinguished family connections; was elected, it is reported, in 1934).

Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune (colored), first vice president, president Bethune-Cookman Institute.

Mrs. W. A. Newell, second vice president.

John H. King, third vice president.

Emily H. Clay, secretary.

J. Sherrard Kennedy, treasurer.

Will W. Alexander, executive director (elected president Dillard University, New Orleans, La.).

R. B. Eleazar, educational director.

Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, director of woman's work.

RECIPROCAL-TARIFF AGREEMENTS

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, on June 12, 1934, Congress enacted an amendment to the Tariff Act of 1930. The amended act is commonly called the Trade Agreements Act. Pursuant to its provisions the Executive, acting largely through the Department of State, has attempted to negotiate a number of treaties, and has in fact negotiated four so-called "trade agreements". These four agreements are with Cuba, Brazil, Belgium, and Haiti.

These agreements are not important in the sense that they affect to a substantial degree the whole schedule of duties, nor in the sense that they affect on a large scale the total volume of commerce of the country. They are important chiefly in that they reveal the processes by which this program is to be carried out and the Trade Agreements Act is to be administered.

I shall attempt presently to describe as best I am able to describe these processes, and to exhibit to the Senate the system which is resorted to by the executive branch of our Government in bringing into being the trade agreements.

First, I wish to call attention to a series of letters, which I will later ask to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The letters to which I refer consist of the following:

A letter written by me to the President under date of March 18.

A subsequent letter upon the same subject written to the Secretary of State.

The President's answer to my letter of March 18, under date of April 8.

My letter to the Secretary of State, of date April 8, and the Secretary's answer, which is dated April 16.

I shall send these letters to the desk after I shall have proceeded further with my statement.

These letters on my part seek to raise the question of the propriety of the system which is resorted to in the negotiation of these treaties. The letter of the President, evidently written in the office of the Secretary of State but signed by the President under date of April 8, 1935, is in the nature of a defense of the present procedure.

Senators who have had some contact with the State Department and with the other agencies of Government in connection with the tariff-treaty negotiations know that the system, in substance, is something like this:

A "public notice" is given. This notice is a mere press release. It comes from the Department of State. It is to the effect, in brief, that a treaty is to be negotiated with an identified nation. It fixes a date for interested persons to be heard, and directs the nature of the hearing or the showing which may be made.

The showing is not made, however, before the Department of State. One of the significant phases to be considered in studying the sufficiency of this system is the fact that the showing made by American producers is not made before those who are conducting the negotiations. It is made before a committee called the "Committee for Reciprocity Information." This committee has no authority, it claims no authority, and it exercises no duties at all with respect to the negotiation of the treaty. The committee sits in formal session, and permits those who are interested, upon application, to appear before the committee, to file briefs, and to make verbal statements in which and through which they may either support the treaty or may object to the making of the treaty, or they may speak in defense of their own industry and resist reductions in the duties in which they are interested.

The committee, I am told, announces at each of these hearings that it has no part in the negotiation of the treaty. It advises those who are interested that the briefs filed and the oral statements made will be transmitted to the agencies which in fact conduct the negotiations.

The committee on reciprocity information, in some cases, at least, if not in all cases, makes an outline or summary of the evidence. That summary is also transmitted to the agency which is negotiating the treaty.

The group which has to do with the making of the treaty is a group which we may call, for convenience, the "trade agreements committee." Concerning this group I am not able to inform the Senate accurately, and the reason I am not able to inform the Senate accurately is that the committee is a variable committee. There is some difficulty in ascertaining the membership of the committee. It is said frankly at the State Department that the committee changes from time to time. It varies as between different treaty negotiations, and I believe it is accurate to say that it even varies in respect to the study of different commodities which are under consideration in the making of one treaty.

One of the letters which I should like to have printed contains an interesting statement over the signature of the President. The statement is to this effect, and I read from the President's letter of April 8, as follows:

> In addition to the trade agreements committee, a number of special or technical interdepartmental committees have been set up to facilitate the full consideration of important trade-agreement matters.

My office was advised that as a matter of fact there is no standing trade agreements committee. Some of those who have been interested in presenting the viewpoint of American producers to the Department of State, and to others who are charged with administration of the act, had asserted to me that there was in fact no committee, and that if such a committee existed, its personnel was confidential; that there was no way to identify the people who made up the committee.

I accordingly wrote a letter to the Secretary of State in which I asked him for his advice concerning the personnel of the committee or group directly in charge of the negotiation of the reciprocal trade agreements. From the Secretary I have an answer under date of April 16, and from that answer I read:

> The actual negotiations with representatives of foreign governments are conducted by officers of this Department, with the assistance of representatives of other departments, and on the basis of information and advice supplied by the interdepartmental organization and by nongovernmental interests through the Committee for Reciprocity Information.
> The personnel of the group participating in the actual negotiations varies for each agreement. However, Mr. Henry F. Grady, Chief of our Trade Agreement Section; Assistant Secretary of State Sayre; and, in the case of Latin American countries, Assistant Secretary of State Welles, as well as Under Secretary of State Phillips and myself, participate in or keep closely in touch with all negotiations.

Taking this statement at its full face, as, of course, we would all desire to do, it would seem that those who have said that this committee is variable are entitled to make that statement. The Secretary, it will be noted, does not assert that Dr. Grady or Mr. Sayre or the others whose names I mentioned are in fact members of the committee. He does assert that these gentlemen whom he names, as well as the Secretary himself, "participate in or keep closely in touch with all negotiations."

The result of my inquiry, made formally to the Secretary, and informally to members of his staff, and the information I have gathered through others who have attempted to arrive at a conclusion concerning the identity of this organization, is that this committee for trade agreements, if there be such a committee, is a variable committee, the membership of which is not publicly known. It advises with or is advised by the people on the staff or in the office of the Secretary of State. In the Department there are a number of economists who make studies of trade questions.

There has been no announcement by the State Department concerning the names of advisers to the State Department or to the trade agreements committee in reaching conclusions concerning proposed reductions of tariffs or other concessions to be made as a part of these international trade agreements. I am not prepared to state the reason why so much secrecy surrounds the make-up of this committee; nor am I prepared to advise the Senate either the reason or the necessity for the secrecy of the negotiations which are carried on by the committee on behalf of our Government in dealing with the representatives of the other governments which may be involved. I merely state the fact.

It is obvious to those who give even a moment's reflection to a system of this kind that very serious defects may creep into it. It is obvious, I think, that every care should be taken, and I imagine that the President believes that every care is taken in order to safeguard American interests when they are placed in jeopardy by secret and confidential negotiations of this kind.

I want to note three defects in the system which I think ought to be corrected. The first is that the committee on reciprocity information stands rather as a barrier to all American interests and to all Americans. In my letter to the President I characterized it as a "buffer" committee. That may not be a fair characterization, but as a matter of practical administration American interests are apt to regard it as a buffer committee because it is to that committee and to that committee alone that American interests are permitted to address their case.

After their case has been submitted to this committee on reciprocity information, American interests are obliged, in a practical sense, to withdraw from further participation in the matter. They know that their briefs and oral arguments reduced to writing will be transmitted to some other person or group of persons, and that this other group, in part known and in part unknown, may or may not give the consideration to the arguments made to which the American interests may think their arguments are entitled.

It is a little like trying a lawsuit in a court which appoints a referee or a master in chancery, and where the court might say to a party litigant, "Both interests may appear before this referee, or before this master in chancery. One side may argue its case there and not be heard further, but the other litigant will be permitted to carry his case to the court that is to make the determination and argue it there."

It seems to me most unfortunate, Mr. President, that in this disparity between interests which are involved the American interest should be afforded the least advantage and that the foreign interest should be afforded the greatest advantage, as is the case, because the foreign interests, through their representatives, go straight to our State Department and deal, it is believed, with the committee which has the full responsibility and which negotiates the treaty. I say it is unfortunate that the American interests should not be on a basis of parity with foreign interests which are seeking our market, a market which they recognize as the greatest and most profitable market on earth.

There is a disparity between the American interests and the foreign interests on the question of knowledge. It is most certain that those who are negotiating with the agents of our State Department will learn, as they proceed, something of the questions in the minds of the American representatives. They will learn of the economic theories entertained by them and the reasoning upon which the American agents are seeking to gain an advantage in the trade treaties. They therefore acquire a knowledge of the kind or type of argument which must be offered. It is a knowledge which they gain from their contact with our State Department, but it is a knowledge which is denied to the American interests, who are obliged to appear before the committee on reciprocity information without knowing the economic theories entertained in the State Department or the particular arguments which are there being presented to secure reduction of a duty upon a commodity which some foreign group desires to ship into our country.

The second of the objections we make to this system grows out of the fact that there is no obligation on the State Department to advise American interests concerning the identity of the articles or commodities which are to be considered in making treaties. The State Department does not advise the American interests, save in a very general way, and I believe the State Department feels itself under no obligation to give any advices at all. Those conducting the negotiations, of course, in the very nature of things learn before the negotiations proceed very far just exactly what is involved in the discussion, because they themselves suggest the identity of the commodities, and the identity of the tariffs and duties and the classifications which they would seek to change to their advantage in the trade agreements. In connection with all four of the treaties heretofore executed, no information has been furnished to American interests of the type which would enable them to stand upon a parity with the foreign interests in the matter of presenting their case against proposals to cut down duties and to facilitate bringing in foreign articles.

Mr. President, if the commodities to be considered in the treaty are not known, it follows that the industries which are affected by the treaty are not known. An entire industry might rely, for one reason or another, upon a belief that its commodity was not to be affected; and yet, if it should turn out that that commodity was affected in the making of the treaty, the entire industry would have been misled, possibly to its very great injury.

The third of the defects in or objections to this system, in my opinion, is the inadequacy of the "public notice."

These notices do not receive conspicuous attention of the press. I have no doubt that there are literally countless people who are interested in tariff rates who in fact do not see the notices, and who have no information at all concerning the purpose of the State Department, or of its unidentified committee, in conducting the tariff negotiations, and certainly no notice at all that the particular commodity in which they may be interested will be affected by those negotiations.

The fact that there is no identification of the products involved creates a situation whereby it is literally impossible for these groups to be aware of the nature of the proceedings.

The President's letter to me, to which I made reference earlier in these remarks, implies that the people interested know where their competition is coming from, and that their particular commodity may be drawn into the controversy; but I submit to the Senate that a general notice merely identifying the country with which the proceedings are to be had is not a sufficient prompting as to the need to be on the defensive. Import statistics are not available by countries of origin for a very considerable number of the commodities on which duties have been reduced in the agreements which have been completed. In the Belgian agreement the language of 11 paragraphs was rewritten to provide for concessions on a part of the imports covered by a broader classification. In a case like this it is utterly impossible for interested persons to anticipate the need of presenting their side of the controversy.

The law under which these agreements are to be negotiated—that is, the trade-agreement law—and the rules which are to be promulgated by the State Department do not give a single specific statement as to the type of evidence that is desired from the interested parties. Nor do these authorities give a single specific test as to what conditions of fact warrant a reduction of duty. This lack of information or guiding principle makes it absolutely impossible for a majority of those who testify, or who might testify if they were informed, to appear and present their affidavits and to address themselves properly to the significant questions which may be involved. Everyone knows innumerable arguments are offered on both sides of any tariff question. Some of these arguments are apparently completely unconvincing to one person, although they may be entirely convincing to another. Some of the arguments may be convincing to the persons who are conducting the negotiations; yet there is no way by which the American producers can tell which of these propositions are regarded as important and which are regarded as unimportant.

In this respect, again, the American is at a disadvantage with the foreigner, because the foreigner, by reason of his close relationship in conducting the negotiations, learns of the economic theory in the mind of the American agents and has in his possession facts which the American producer cannot acquire. Therefore, the foreigner deals advisedly, with the knowledge of the type of argument which is weighing heavily with our executive department, whereas the American deals blindly, in the dark, and without knowledge at all, as to the character or type of evidence which might be made effective if the American producer could but know in advance what that evidence is.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I take it there is no doubt that when the foreign representative comes to our State Department to make his representations he at least knows what he is asking for in behalf of his own country.

Mr. STEIWER. Of course, Mr. President, he knows that; and the discussion develops the kind of reception which is accorded to his suggestion, and if he is as able as we assume him to be he soon learns what type of argument is necessary to overcome the reluctance of our representatives.

Mr. WHITE. He knows not only what he is asking for, but presumably he gets some suggestion as to what our representatives are asking for in return.

Mr. STEIWER. Of very necessity he must know it.

Mr. WHITE. But the American citizen has no such information, and cannot get any such information. I recall that when, a short time ago, because of the interest of the people of the State of Maine in the prospective Canadian reciprocity treaty, I went to the State Department and undertook to find out, in behalf of citizens of Maine, what Canada was asking for and what was under consideration by the Department, I received no information whatsoever. Then, if I am not unduly interrupting the Senator, Maine citizens, in their anxiety and in their distress, began to send in their representations both to the President and to the State Department. In response they got no information, but there was a press release from the State Department, a part of which I should like to read, if the Senator will indulge me.

Mr. STEIWER. Does it support my theory?

Mr. WHITE. It does not conflict with it, so far as I understand it.

Mr. STEIWER. Very well; I am glad to have you read it.

Mr. WHITE. I will read only a portion of the press release. The State Department put out this press release, commenting on the fact that the school children and others in the State of Maine were making representations with respect to the threatened reduction in the duty on potatoes, and then there is this paragraph:

> The fact that the pleas voiced in the letters are based on the wholly false assumption that it has already been decided to reduce the duties on potatoes and certain other products, or remove them altogether, creates the distinct impression that those who have inspired the correspondence are propagandists of high protection who are not so much distressed over the condition of the producers as they are desirous of furthering their own selfish interests and of hampering the whole trade-agreement program by arousing fears that have no basis in reality. It would appear that these tariff lobbyists, or ex-officials, interested in maintaining their positions in Washington, or regaining their public offices, have generated these fears by circulating rumors and false statements designed to befuddle and mislead the farmers and others whose interests they profess to safeguard.

So in substance the people of Maine, instead of getting information, got a lecture and got abuse.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield so that I may ask a question of the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I have asked the accommodating Senator from Oregon to yield so as to allow me to ask the Senator from Maine a question. I now ask the able Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], having heard the statement he has just made, whether he personally, as a representative of the sovereign State of Maine and its authorized agent, went to the State Department for information necessary to his people, and could get no information whatever; and then does my able friend the Senator from Maine say that in the Department they were so discourteous as to refuse to comply with his request and refuse to accommodate him, and that no effort was made to give him information accessible to our Government?

Mr. WHITE. I did not receive discourtesy, but I obtained no information. I asked specifically for information as to what products of my State Canada had asked for tariff concessions, and the information was not disclosed. So I left the Department wholly as ignorant as when I went there.

Mr. LEWIS. I know that could hardly be possible. [Laughter.] That statement I feel goes a little further than was intended. I meant it could hardly be possible that they could be so ungenerous and lacking in common manners——

Mr. WHITE. I accept the Senator's apology.

Mr. LEWIS. That it could hardly be possible that they would decline to give information if the Senator addressed himself to the appropriate and proper department. May I ask the Senator to what department he addressed his inquiry?

Mr. WHITE. I addressed the inquiry to the Assistant Secretary of State and to another gentlemen who, I understand, is chairman of the reciprocity committee, or some committee of a similar name, in the State Department.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator if he knew whether those to whom he addressed the inquiry were the source through whom information should be communicated and who possessed it to a degree that they could give the Senator that which he desired?

Mr. WHITE. They were the gentlemen to whom I had been referred by the Secretary of State as the proper persons with whom to discuss the subject matter.

Mr. LEWIS. Nevertheless, the Senator leaves the intimation that they did not give him the information which was accessible then to the Department?

Mr. WHITE. It is not an intimation; it is a very broad and positive statement that they refused to give me the information.

Mr. LEWIS. I am very anxious that the facts so stated be brought to the attention of the State Department, and it is for that reason that I put the query so directly, as I am going to make free to communicate to the Department, in the humble position I may occupy here, that such discourtesy was extended to a fellow Senator of this body. I thank the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I am sure that no one regards it as a matter of discourtesy. The treatment accorded to the Senator from Maine is the same treatment which has been accorded to others; and my good friend, the Senator from Illinois, may well be a little disturbed by it. I think the entire Congress will be disturbed when they learn the exact nature of this system. It is not discourtesy that is to be cried out against; rather it is the vice of the system itself. It is the wickedness of putting foreigners in a preferential situation and giving them an advantage over Americans in dealing with their own State Department. I hope that the distinguished Senator from Illinois will, as he has implied, take some active and effective interest in this matter, in order that there may be a better system.

I wish to say in that regard, Mr. President, that I am not criticizing any one for negotiating treaties under the law. I have not detained the Senate today in order to make argument against the law itself, although I disapproved that measure and made arguments against it at the time it was before this body. The Secretary of State and the other executive agencies of our Government are entirely within their rights in the negotiations of such treaties, because Congress enacted the law giving them the authority to negotiate them but, even when they are clothed with that authority and that right, I submit that they owe it to the country which they serve to put American producers on a parity with foreigners and stop the wicked system by which others have better opportunities, better advices, more information, and closer contact than we have, and in every way are in strong position to defend themselves, while our own citizens are helpless in their ignorance. In conclusion, Mr. President, I wish to add a further observation. The method of making and adjusting tariffs and scaling duties down in order to negotiate trade agreements has had the result of substituting secret and confidential processes for the former legislative processes in tariff making. I know that much may be said against the system by which our National Legislature made the tariffs in the past; much will be said, no doubt, in the future; much may be said that ought to be said; I am not defending the system in its entirety. But there is this much to be said in its behalf: That tariffs made by the Congress were made in the open and in the light of day.

Everybody knew who was responsible. Hearings were held before committees of both the Senate and the House. Those hearings were reduced to writing and printed. They became permanent records of the legislative branch of our Government. The votes here upon the floor were held in the presence of the entire country and every vote cast, where there was a roll call, is recorded in the permanent records of this body. Under the old legislative system we at least had what President Woodrow Wilson called "pitiless publicity." If I may borrow further from his language, we had in our legislative efforts "open covenants openly arrived at."

We have lost the entire advantage that comes to the country from proceedings that are aboveboard and in the daylight. We have substituted for light the darkness of subterranean passages; and I think that I was justified in suggesting to the President, in my letter to him, that this system ought to be improved, and in saying to him that unless it shall be improved it will result in improvident action. I am going to say now that improvident action has already been had. I may illustrate that in two or three ways.

Let me call attention first to the reduction of the duty on manganese brought about by the treaty with Brazil. Senators will remember that manganese was placed upon the dutiable list in the act of 1922, and that it has been upon the dutiable list since that time. Senators will remember also that the steel interests of the country have sought to remove manganese from the dutiable list, or at least to cut down the protection from 1 cent a pound to a rate of one-half of 1 cent a pound. The War Department, regarding manganese as important to the national defense, has earnestly endeavored to develop a manganese industry in this country, and has urged upon the Congress that an adequate duty be maintained upon that commodity. In the making of the 1930 tariff there was a controversy before the Finance Committee and upon this floor. In that controversy the steel interests sought to decrease the manganese duty from 1 cent a pound to one-half of 1 cent a pound; but this body, in its wisdom, whether right or wrong, after mature deliberation, restored the duty of 1 cent a pound and declined to yield to the steel interests of America with respect to this duty. But, lo and behold, when the secret processes are resorted to by this variable committee and finally the agreement is made with Brazil, we find that the duty on manganese has been cut down from 1 cent a pound to one-half of 1 cent a pound, and the objective which the steel industry of America was trying to attain, and which it failed to attain by the open processes of congressional legislation, was attained through this trade agreements committee.

Not only that, Mr. President, but the manganese interests were quite awake to the situation. They had made an effort to hold the duty on manganese in connection with the negotiation of the treaty with Brazil. Someone—I cannot state who it was—circulated here a letter addressed to the President of the United States. I have in my hand a copy of that letter, which bears date of June 28, 1934, and which is signed by 41 Senators and by 145 Members of the House of Representatives. In that letter, or petition, to the President the signers appealed to him for action that would insure the maintenance and further development of the manganese industry of this country. The State Department knew of this petition; they knew that 41 Senators and 145 Members of the House had taken their stand against this tariff reduction; but, nevertheless, the administration permitted this matter to be handled through secret processes by which the judgment of a great number of the legislators of the United States was utterly disregarded and the wishes of the steel industry were acceded to.

There is another illustration, Mr. President, which, to my mind, is still more important. I refer to the fact that in the Belgian treaty we find that concessions have been made as to a number of articles of which there were no importations at all in the year 1934. I think with respect to some of them there had been importations in previous years; but so far as the year 1934 is concerned, there were seven or eight articles of which there had been no importations at all. There were other articles which Belgium supplied to our country only to a very limited extent but concerning which it may not be said that there were no importations at all in the year 1934.

In the published statement containing a detailed analysis of the concessions which we made to Belgium in this treaty we find that there were some articles included of which the Belgians supply a great part of our importations. Take the case of aluminum sulphate. We find that they supplied in the year 1934, 94 percent of the total. There is some reason in making a concession on an item of that kind; certainly I do not criticize it now; but we find also other articles in connection with which the Belgian contribution to the total importations of that year was on a very nominal basis. Here is chalk or whiting, which, I think, is called "paris white", the importations of which from Belgium in 1934 were 13 percent of the total. Here is the case of lead pigment, which is one of the articles of which there were no importations from Belgium in that year. We find the case of manufactured laminated glass, of which there were no importations in 1934. We find in the case of hoop or band iron or steel, cut, that the Belgian importations constituted 21 percent of our importations in 1934.

I shall not detain the Senate to read further from the list, because it is a rather laborious and tiresome enterprise.

Mr. KING and Mr. LEWIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I am not sure that I understand the point which the able Senator is attempting to make and probably is making. Is he contending that the State Department in its negotiations with Belgium has reduced the tariff rates even to where they were almost insignificant and importations were unimportant in order to secure some reciprocal or alleged reciprocal benefits?

Mr. STEIWER. I am happy to answer the question, but the Senator makes it difficult by asking if a certain thing has been attempted in order to do something else. I cannot answer the Senator from Utah by saying what it was the State Department was seeking to do by the concessions made to Belgium. It is assumed that they are seeking to advance or extend American trade. It is assumed they were granting concessions to Belgium for concessions which Belgium made to us in our trade. I am not sure that I know with respect to any one of the items what the particular inducement was. It would be revealing if the country could know what the inducements were. Throughout the remarks I have been making today I have been complaining that we do not have that knowledge and cannot get it.

To answer the Senator's question a little more categorically, it is true that upon certain items of which the Belgians made no importations in 1934 or of which they made a relatively small or negligible importation in 1934, we find concessions; that is to say, we have reduced the tariff on those particular items. Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. KING. I think it does; but may I say that if, by a sort of gesture upon our part in the way of reducing the tariff upon commodities which we import, if at all, in insignificant quantities, we thereby extend our market for American products, certainly the able Senator ought not to complain, because even if we make a gesture, and, as a result of that gesture, we open up a market for one more bushel of potatoes or one more ton of steel or one more automobile, pro tanto that benefit comes to the United States.

Mr. STEIWER. If the concession made to Belgium were a mere gesture, I should not criticize it; but the vice of that kind of gesture is that under the favored-nation clause contained in existing trade agreements, when we concede to Belgium by reducing a duty upon an article which Belgium does not furnish us in any substantial amount, we are obliged to cut the duty on that same article to other countries which do furnish the article in large amount, countries which are not parties to the treaty.

The net result of the whole thing is that we have to make a concession to a country which has nothing to trade, nothing with which to pay us back. We let the benefit inure to producers of other nations, and then when we seek to negotiate a trade agreement with the other nations we find that we have already made the concession, and if we are to obtain any concession from such countries, it will be necessary for us to give something in addition.

It is all quite improvident, it seems to me, thus to barter away our advantage by conceding to a country upon an item with which they are, after all, not very much concerned. A "gesture" of that kind may be very injurious to our trade without any compensating benefit.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator that in the tariff hearings in 1922 and in the tariff hearings in 1930 there were scores of individuals, representing industries, who appeared before the Finance Committee and before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, insisting upon prohibitive tariffs, notwithstanding the fact that in hundreds and hundreds of items the importations were less than 1 percent of domestic consumption.

I am not complaining and not desiring to be critical, but the Republicans yielded to those demands, made in some instances by trusts and monopolies, or by industries which had not been developed and which could not be developed, in order to satisfy domestic demands—yielded to the importunities and granted high tariffs—indeed prohibitive tariffs, so that on the insignificant quantities which were imported, less than 1 percent of domestic consumption, and in many instances less than one-thousandth of 1 percent, the tariff rates were increased and the domestic demands were adhered to.

That is the way, unfortunately, in which tariff duties have been imposed and tariff laws have been written. One of the great Senators who sat upon the other side of the aisle for many years, a distinguished senior Senator at that time from Minnesota, rose in his place and said that the lobbyists came down here representing various industries, industries which had not been developed and could not be developed; that they came here and made their demands and got what they wanted because they knew what they wanted. He condemned his own party for yielding to the demands to the disadvantage of our country.

While the Senator has yielded to me, let me say that he mentioned, as I came into the Chamber a few moments ago, the question of manganese. In 1922 the manganese producers of the United States came before the Committee on Finance begging for a tariff. The evidence showed they were producing but inconsequential amounts, wholly inadequate to meet the demands of the steel interests of the United States. Of course, as the Senator knows, manganese and chrome and those elements, the production of which is limited in this and other countries, are indispensable in the production of steel. However, they insisted on getting a tariff and it was granted. They said, "If you will give us this tariff we will not ask any additional tariff, and we will assure the country and the steel industry that we will soon develop a great manganese industry."

In 1930 the same representatives came here, scores of them, not all of whom testified, and demanded a higher tariff upon manganese. When they were confronted with their former testimony and promises and asseverations, they said, "Give us an additional tariff and we will develop the manganese industry." They did not develop it; they have not developed it; and they could not develop it. It seems to me that the testimony which was given then by the protagonists of the demand as well as the opponents of it was accurate, for I have found nothing to indicate that the testimony was inaccurate.

Coming from a mining section, may I say that if there had been evidence showing there would be a production of manganese adequate to meet the demands of our country at reasonable rates, I should have been inclined to grant a tariff perhaps even higher than that which was asked by those who were demanding a tariff.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, there are two suggestions I want to make to the Senator from Utah in answer to what he has said.

It is true the American producers of manganese have been disappointed in the development of their own industry in this country. Yet very much may be said for the duty. It did provide some protection. It did permit several thousand people in the United States to earn their livelihood in the manganese industry. It did give to our national defense a little semblance of local support.

But above that it did another thing which is very significant, with which I think the Senator from Utah would not want to quarrel. It paid a revenue to our Government. It paid a revenue since 1922 in excess of $50,000,000, and now, at a time when we need revenue as we never needed it before, either in peace or in war, the State Department has cut that duty in half, from 1 cent per pound down to one-half cent per pound, and our Treasury is losing that revenue.

I address that argument to the Senator from Utah merely because of his orthodox views as a Democrat.

The other suggestion I wish to make to the Senator relates to the subject I was discussing at the time I yielded to him a few minutes ago. He said, and he said truly, that in the previous history of tariff making we sometimes had accorded duties to commodities which we did not produce except in a negligible way. That is true, and it is not to the credit of our legislation that it is true; but I wish to call to the Senator's attention the fact that as between the two kinds of mistakes, if we are obliged to resort to mistakes in fixing tariff duties, it is better to put a duty upon the importation of an article which we do not extensively produce, for the benefit and advantage of our own people, than it is to concede a reduced tariff rate to a country which does not have any importation in a substantial way of the article affected by the tariff, because then we may injure the American industry and we benefit nobody, not even the country with which we are negotiating our trade agreement. We may possibly benefit somebody else, but we destroy our trade-promotion possibilities in dealing with other nations of the world, and put ourselves at a disadvantage in every quarter.

This complaint is not novel with me. It was urged in committee against the very thing which has happened here. Mr. Sayre, one of those appearing before the committee in support of the trade-agreements legislation, gave to the committee and to the Congress an assurance to which I now call attention. He said:

> The whole purpose of the program of trade bargaining is this—to restrict the commodities covered in the agreement with any specific country to commodities of which that country furnishes the chief source of supply of importation into the United States.

Mr. President, I have not risen for the purpose of criticizing Mr. Sayre. Indeed, I have no desire to criticize anybody. I wish my remarks to be just as impersonal as I can make them. I direct them against the defects of a system, and not against any person who may be involved in the administration of this law; but I think I am justified in saying that the assurance upon which Congress enacted this legislation has not been lived up to, and that we have a right to demand of the executive branch that these assurances be strictly kept, and that importations shall not be permitted from other countries under the guise of making a trade agreement with Belgium.

American interests cannot be served in that way, when we thus generously perform what the Senator from Utah has characterized as a gesture. The opportunity is lost to us, and the American people will be injured by a system which operates under the guise of trade extension. We will suffer trade losses as well as losses at home with relation to our domestic business.

Mr. VANDENBERG and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield first to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Senator has been emphasizing the fact that the American producer is at a relative disadvantage as compared with the foreign producer when one of these tariff-bargain contracts is negotiated. I wish to call his attention to the fact that this disadvantage carries on subsequently into the relationship after the trade agreement is created, because we continue thereafter to be at the mercy of monetary manipulations in these other countries; and I give the Senator this example in connection with the Brazilian trade treaty to which he has referred:

The Brazilian treaty was signed by President Roosevelt on February 2. On February 11, just 9 days later, the Brazilian exchange control authorities issued a decree changing the nature of exchange in which these transactions should be paid, with the direct result, as reported officially by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the United States, that practically all the advantage which we thought we had gained on February 2 by our reciprocity treaty was wiped out on February 11 by a monetary decree against us. So there is this continuing disadvantage and hazard and jeopardy always following American interests, in addition to those to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. STEIWER. I thank the Senator for that contribution. It is revealing for more than one reason. Not only may Brazil wipe out the advantages which we thought we had obtained in making this treaty but varying exchange rates constitute only one of the procedures to which she may resort in order to wipe out every advantage. I submit to the Senator from Michigan and for the consideration of the Senate that it is not possible, in a treaty of this kind, to write enough clauses to bind the hands of the other country to the extent that they cannot wipe out the advantages which they appear to grant in the trade agreement. It is not possible because the imagination of man would not suggest all the variety of advantages that might be taken by the other country at a subsequent time, not only with respect to exchange and monetary matters but in a hundred other ways the nations which are parties to these agreements will be able to undo that which we may hope we have accomplished. I believe it emphasizes the point I made earlier in these remarks, namely, that in making agreements of this kind we are entitled to a better system. We are entitled to a method under which we may know, so far as knowledge of that kind is obtainable, that American interests are not to be sacrificed and frittered away by improvident traders who possibly are not so well versed in the problems in which they are dealing as some of those with whom we deal. We are entitled, I say, to the most perfect system that can be devised, in order that there may be some guarantee against improvident action, against mistakes, and against injurious results to American commerce and business.

Mr. President, in conclusion I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD at the end of my remarks the various letters to which I referred earlier in the debate.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARCH 18, 1935.

The Honorable FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States, The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In presenting certain arguments this morning before the committee for reciprocity information in connection with the proposed negotiation of a foreign-trade agreement with Canada my attention was drawn again to the system under which part III of title III of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is administered.

The representatives of the domestic industries interested in this proposed negotiation presented their views before the committee for reciprocity information. This committee advised the representatives appearing at the hearing that the information would be transmitted to the appropriate agencies, which, I assume, include the committee on foreign-trade agreements. The net result of this system is that the Canadian Government, seeking to acquire a share of the American domestic market on behalf of the Canadian producers, will deal directly with the American agencies which conduct and control the negotiations, whereas the American producers do not enjoy access to those agencies but present their cause through an information committee which at the most can act only as an intermediary. Under this system Canadian competitors may have their views presented more effectually than can the Americans.

I make no criticism here and now of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act, nor of the effort to negotiate any treaty. Such effort is authorized by an act of Congress, but I most respectfully suggest that the President consider an improved system which will permit interested Americans immediate access to the agencies which negotiate the foreign-trade treaties in order that they may be on a parity with foreign competitors.

It was believed by some Members of the Congress that the purpose of section 4 of part III was to provide the American producers a direct means of presenting their views to the President or "to such agency as the President may designate", meaning the agency designated to negotiate the treaty, and not a buffer agency set up for the sole purpose of collecting information and then transmitting it to a committee on foreign-trade agreements. The present division of authority between two committees, one on reciprocity information and the other on foreign-trade agreements, in my judgment will never be accepted as satisfactory by the American producers.

Permit me to suggest also that the organized American groups be fully informed concerning the commodities which may be affected, and that they be advised the theories of economic reasoning entertained in the committee on foreign-trade agreements so that the American producers may have opportunity to show that the theories entertained do not justify a reduction in duties. The representatives of American producers, where they can be identified through established associations, should be given a reasonable opportunity to comment upon the evidence in the hands of the committee on foreign-trade agreements on the score of its sufficiency to justify a reduction in duty.

I suggest also that the commodities upon which duties are reduced shall be only those included in the lists submitted to the American producers. I am advised that this was not done in negotiating the trade agreement with Belgium.

It is my opinion that unless the procedure is modified improvident action will be inevitable.

With assurances of esteem, I am,

Respectfully yours,

FREDERICK STEIWER.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
April 4, 1935.

Hon. CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State,
Department of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: May I request that you read the enclosed copy of letter, the original of which I sent to the President under date of March 18. I have received no acknowledgment of this letter and have no means of knowing whether it came to the personal attention of the President or of anyone else charged with the responsibility for the administration of part 3 of title 3 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended. I, therefore, feel justified in submitting the matter to you.

It ought not to be necessary in correspondence with any official of the United States Government either to prove or defend the proposition that American producers should be on a basis of not less than parity with their foreign competitors. To my mind, it is equally clear that the effect of proposals for tariff adjustment ought not to be determined in private conference by Government officials without receiving first hand the views of those whose business will be directly affected by the proposed tariff adjustments. The economic theories maintained by the advisors in the Government agencies may well be theoretically valid and at the same time be wholly unsound. I hope I will not be charged with intent to disparage anyone when I say no man is wise enough to know all the important practical considerations affecting all lines of production. Unless those engaged in the various industries are permitted to discuss the economic theories upon which the tariff-adjustment proposals are to be predicated, tragic mistakes inevitably will result.

Even though the objectives sought under the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act were in every way defensible, I cannot escape the conclusion that the results will be more satisfactory to all American interests if every facility for the development of the American viewpoint be afforded and every American argument be accorded the fullest possible consideration.

With assurances of esteem, I am, respectfully yours,

FREDERICK STEIWER.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 8, 1935.

The Honorable FREDERICK STEIWER,
United States Senator.

MY DEAR SENATOR STEIWER: I have given careful consideration to the views expressed in your letter of March 18, 1935, with reference to the procedure which is being followed in carrying out the purposes of the Trade Agreements Act of June 12, 1934.

This procedure has been worked out after most careful consideration of all aspects of the matter. Its effect, I am sure, is not to give Canadian or other foreign interests, through their own Governments, better access to the agencies responsible for formulating recommendations concerning proposed trade agreements than is afforded to our own domestic interests. On the contrary, the procedure being followed is designed to provide domestic producers and other American interests an orderly and certain means of bringing their information and views to the attention of these agencies.

A reasonable period of time is given after public notice of intention to negotiate a trade agreement for interested persons to submit written statements to the Committee for Reciprocity Information. Oral statements are received by that committee a week or so later from persons whose applications to present supplementary views orally have been approved. The Committee for Reciprocity Information distributes these written and oral statements to the agencies concerned in carrying out the trade agreements program, namely, the Departments of State, Commerce, and Agriculture, the Treasury Department, the Tariff Commission, the Office of the Special Adviser to the President on Foreign Trade, and the National Recovery Administration. Competent experts and high officers of these agencies study all proposals and views transmitted to them by the Committee for Reciprocity Information and cooperate in formulating specific recommendations on the basis of such information and that available from other sources. In addition to the Trade Agreements Committee, a number of special or technical interdepartmental committees have been set up to facilitate the full consideration of important trade-agreement matters.

The Committee for Reciprocity Information is in no sense a "buffer agency." It is a convenient channel through which interested persons may bring their views to the attention of the several governmental agencies actively concerned in formulating recommendations in regard to proposed trade agreements. With reference to your statement concerning the "present division of authority" between the Committee for Reciprocity Information and the Trade Agreements Committee, I may say that no such division of authority exists or can exist, since the committee is only an agency of the trade agreements organization for obtaining the information and views of interested persons. In addition to the above-mentioned channel—that is, the Committee for Reciprocity Information—domestic interests have access to each of the governmental agencies concerned in the trade-agreements works.

In regard to your suggestion that organized groups be fully informed concerning the commodities which may be affected, you may be assured that full consideration has been given to the possibility of announcing the products or subjects to be considered in connection with any proposed trade agreement. The conclusion was early reached that such a procedure would be impracticable. At the time public notice is given of intention to negotiate a trade agreement, the administration itself may not know what products or subjects may come up for consideration. If an all-inclusive list should be announced at the time notice is given, and later on it seemed desirable to consider other products, it would be necessary to announce a supplementary list and provide interested persons an opportunity to present their views to the Committee for Reciprocity Information. Such a procedure, if adopted, probably would so complicate and delay the negotiation of trade agreements as to hinder seriously the carrying out of the purposes of the act.

Because of this and other considerations, I believe that the present procedure of announcing only the name of the foreign country concerned and making readily available statistical and other information concerning the trade between the United States and that country is quite satisfactory. It seems reasonable to assume that domestic producers, importers, and other American individuals or organized groups should know whether their interests are in fact involved.

With reference to your suggestion that the commodities upon which duties are reduced "shall be only those included in the lists submitted to the American producers" and to your statement that you have been advised that this was not done in negotiating the trade agreement with Belgium, I should like to point out that no such lists are given out. Whoever advised you that such was the case may have been referring to the statistical information concerning the principal items entering into the trade between the United States and the foreign country concerned, which is issued in the form of a press release at the time public notice is given, for the convenience of interested persons and is in no sense a definitive list of the products which may be considered. At the head of every such tabulation of trade statistics is the following statement:

"The following table indicating in a general way the nature of the trade between the United States and Belgium has been compiled by the Division of Foreign Trade Statistics of the Department of Commerce. The table shows the principal commodities entering into this trade. More detailed statements of the trade with Belgium will be available shortly at the Division of Foreign Trade Statistics and the district offices of the Department of Commerce."

The statement quoted above is taken from a Department of State press release of September 4, 1934, a copy of which I enclose, which was issued in connection with the public notice given on that date of intention to negotiate a trade agreement with Belgium.

The purpose of the Trade Agreements Act is to facilitate the restoration of our foreign trade by means of agreements with foreign countries providing for reciprocal reductions of excessive trade barriers. In carrying out this purpose the trade agreements organization is actuated by a sincere desire to conclude trade agreements which will promote the national interest. By making possible an increased flow of trade, these trade agreements should contribute materially to the relief of unemployment and to the improvement of the general economic situation in this country.

If you would like to study further the trade-agreements organization and the procedure which has been adopted in connection with its work, I suggest that you talk with Assistant Secretary of State Sayre or with Dr. Henry F. Grady, Chief of the Trade Agreements Section of the Department of State. They would, I am sure, be glad to have an opportunity to discuss these matters with you.

Sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
April 8, 1935.

Hon. CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State, Department of State.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have had an inquiry concerning the personnel of the committee or group directly in charge of the negotiations for reciprocal trade agreements. I will be most appreciative if you will advise me the names of this committee or group at your earliest convenience.

Respectfully yours, ——— ———.

APRIL 16, 1935.

The Honorable FREDERICK STEIWER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR STEIWER: I have received your letter of April 8, 1935, in which you state that you have had an inquiry concerning "the personnel of the committee or group directly in charge of the negotiations for reciprocal trade agreements." I understand that your office telephoned on April 10 concerning this same matter.

The actual negotiations with representatives of foreign governments are conducted by officers of this Department, with the assistance of representatives of other departments, and on the basis of information and advice supplied by the interdepartmental organization and by nongovernmental interests through the Committee for Reciprocity Information.

The personnel of the group participating in the actual negotiations varies for each agreement. However, Mr. Henry F. Grady, Chief of our Trade Agreements Section; Assistant Secretary of State Sayre; and, in the case of Latin American countries, Assistant Secretary of State Welles, as well as Under Secretary of State Phillips, and myself participate in or keep closely in touch with all negotiations.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield the floor.

Mr. KING. I desire to state that I think the Senator from Oregon attributed to me a characterization which certainly I did not intend to make. I did not characterize the transaction with Belgium as being a mere gesture. I predicated the statement I made upon the assumption made by the Senator that Belgium, with respect to the commodities to which he referred, was sending no imports into the United States, but we entered into an agreement under the terms of which we might find an exportable market for some of our commodities; and I suggested that if that were true, and Belgium had not sent into the United States any articles which were the basis of this commercial relation, it might be a mere gesture upon our part. I then asked the Senator, however, whether he was justified in making complaint if by that gesture we found a market for some of our surplus products.

I did not characterize the transaction as a gesture. I do not know what are the facts. I am not assuming, as the Senator did—doubtless he has superior knowledge, because he has made inquiry, and I have not—that there were no imports coming from Belgium, and that there was not a quid pro quo for the mutual agreement which was entered into between the two countries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2035) to amend an act approved June 25, 1934, authorizing loans from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

WHEN THE KING CONTROLS THE PURSE STRINGS

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, if the wisdom of article I of the Constitution, placing control of the Federal purse strings in the hands of Congress, were ever in question, any doubt would now be removed by arbitrary Executive actions, even in the first week after the enactment of House Joint Resolution 117, with its delegation of power to the Executive in the allocation of $5,000,000,000.

Mr. Hopkins, of the F. E. R. A., announces that Georgia will be cut off the relief rolls on June 1, following the published statements of Governor Talmadge of Georgia opposing Rooseveltian and "brain-trust" policies.

Mr. Ickes, of the P. W. A., declares that Louisiana shall have no public-relief funds, because the distribution would aid the political machine of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], who, likewise, opposes Roosevelt.

Scarcely a week has passed since the signing of the measure turning over to the President and his alphabetical bureaus this vast fund, which exceeds the total annual revenues of the Government, yet already the Executive allocations are showing their teeth and exposing the fangs of political favoritism.

Does anyone believe that if Governor Talmadge were shouting for Roosevelt and the N. R. A. and the A. A. A., for the processing taxes and the corn-hog checks, for the substitution of the "Blue Eagle" for the Stars and Stripes, and for the substitution of the new deal for the Constitution the State of Georgia would be thus cut off from Federal relief, like a daughter disowned by an irate parent because she would not marry the man assigned to her?

Does anyone believe that if the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] were now singing the praises of Roosevelt and Ickes the State of Louisiana would be consigned to the River Styx?

The administration hereby serves notice on the States that if they expect to share in the benefits of public funds they must, as the first essential, proclaim their fealty to the king who controls the purse strings. They must shout his praises. They must join in the Te Deum and sing:

"Long live the king—our one and only Roosevelt and his prime ministers, Ickes and Hopkins."

When the $4,800,000,000 allocation was voted, subject to the will of the Executive to carry him through the 1936 campaign, all the small boys who govern their respective States should have shouted "Selah!"

They should have read to their congregations the scriptural injunction that "the new Lord God of Israel is a jealous God, and we should have no other god before us." Had the Governor of Georgia and the Senator of Louisiana [Mr. LONG] done that and disclosed no signs of independence, the States of Georgia and Louisiana might today be sitting serene, with halos over their heads like unto the glory of Arkansas and Texas, or the most-favored State of all, New York, whence comes the President himself, his "brain trust", and half his Cabinet and bureau chiefs.

It was because of such conditions of executive favoritism and exploitation, court favors, and star-chamber persecutions that the farmer barons of the thirteenth century took control of the public purse strings from King John and made him sign the great charter, which placed control over appropriations and taxes in the hands of the commons. Parliamentary bodies were created in the first place for the exclusive function of taking out of the hands of the ruling monarch the power to tax, which is the power to destroy, and the power to allocate public funds, which is the power to corrupt the body politic and all its instruments.

Says the historian, Green, in speaking of the methods of King John at the time of the great charter:

> John starved Rochester into submission * * * while his mercenaries spread like locusts over the whole face of the land.

And again:

> Robert Fitz-Walter was taken prisoner.

Thus the royal measures of 300 years ago are repeated in 1935. The new deal is a revival of the days when John's power over the public purse strings paralyzed England. The Governor of Georgia and the Senator from Louisiana are in the same boat as Rochester and Fitz-Walter 3 centuries ago. The two English leaders named would not crook the hinges of their knees to the royal freebooter in London. Today Georgia and Louisiana will not sing Te Deums to the royal irresponsibles of the raw deal in Washington. So they are to be either starved out or taken prisoner, according to the measures devised by John's "brain trust", and revived here today as a new deal—the same old wolf in sheep's clothing.

For the control of a King whom no man could trust—

Says the historian—

a council of 24 barons were chosen from the general body of their order to enforce on John the observance of the charter.

John's reaction to this control over his allocation of public funds was not unlike the reaction of the White House today against any attempt of Congress to resist White House domination.

"They have given me four and twenty over-kings," cried John in his fury, flinging himself upon the floor and gnawing sticks.

Now, as I recall, the Senate Committee on Appropriations likewise has 24 members, who in a measure acted as "overkings" in regard to the provisions of House Joint Resolution 117 providing for the appropriation of billions by the present Congress.

What was the White House reaction to the attempts of these "overkings", headed by the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], for control of the executive allocations of the relief billions? The first act of the White House was to snatch the bill from the Senate for a period of 2 weeks, and the second act of the White House was to go fishing for 2 weeks with Admiral Astor on the flagship Nourmahal.

On a like occasion, in 64 A. D., Nero played his fiddle while Rome burned, and Nero's mercenaries persecuted the Christians who refused to recognize his gods.

Coming down to 1215 A. D., John gnaws sticks and then starves or imprisons his political opponents.

Coming down again to 1935, our new potentate goes fishing 2 weeks and directs his mercenaries against Georgia and Louisiana.

Fiddling, gnawing sticks, and going fishing have their respective merits with which we here are not greatly concerned. But we are concerned when the "mercenaries spread like locusts over the whole face of the land", and today on a scale never before known in world history. We are concerned when public debt, doles, and deficits are piled up to such a height that taxes may destroy public credit and industry and the hopes of permanent recovery and liberty as completely as the fires destroyed Rome. And we are concerned when the unbridled powers of a Federal imperialism are used to "crack down" sovereign States and deny them the constitutional guaranties of equal rights and a republican form of government, and when liberty and equality are jeopardized by Executive mandates which take the place of due process of law.

The ways of Nero, John, and the autocrats of today, may differ in minor particulars. They may fiddle, gnaw sticks, or go fishing. They may wear blue eagles, black shirts, or brown shirts. They may call themselves Fascists, Nazis, Soviets, or bear sundry alphabetical titles. All of them in their time called themselves "new dealers", but they all belonged to the same old school of executive autocracy—the wolves which harass and fatten upon the sheep which support them. If their official tenure is temporary, they are known as "dictators" or "bureaucracies." If their official tenure is made permanent by the extension of their so-called "emergency" under grants in perpetuity, they are known variously as "kings", emperors", or "lord protectors" of those they plunder.

The particular mannerisms and titles and halos of publicity are of minor consequence, just a matter of taste and style. But the fundamental issues—the questions of liberty and equality of the Nation's future and constitutional existence—no Congress holding the responsibility of legislation by and for the people of 48 sovereign States can in conscience either ignore, surrender, or betray.

If this vast sum of $5,000,000,000, together with other billions far in excess of the annual revenues of the Government, is to be used as an instrument of political favoritism, or as a political bludgeon to enforce allegiance from the States to a potentate who not only violates all the pledges of the platform on which he was elected by the people, but encroaches upon and threatens the integrity of the Constitution upon which the Republic stands, the Senate of the United States cannot escape its due share of the responsibility.

We are here assembled, two Senators from each of the 48 sovereign States, sworn to uphold the Constitution, and sworn to uphold the sovereign rights of those States as the constituent parts of the Republic. Equality of rights as between the States, and equality of rights as between the citizens thereof, are the cornerstones of our national freedom. To secure that equality as between States, each State has the same representation in the Senate. Georgia and Louisiana, under the law of the land, have the same rights to Federal cooperation as belong to New York and Texas, to Alabama and Arkansas.

Have Ickes and Hopkins, the bureaucratic heads of P. W. A. and F. E. R. A., a voice greater than that of Congress in the allocation of public funds to the respective States? Is that allocation of public funds subject to the provisions of article I, and the constitutional guaranty of equality, or is it subject to the will of two bureaucrats and to their political interest in the reelection of their appointing chief? Is fidelity to the Constitution or fealty to a candidate for office the guiding rule in the distribution of $5,000,000,000?

I have no ax to grind, certainly no political concern, with regard to the status of Georgia or Louisiana. But what happens to Georgia and Louisiana may happen, on the same political grounds, to any State in the Union. States which now seem to be in the high light of royal favor may yet stand in the desperate strait of that British archbishop, who, faced by the beheading block, declared:

> Had I but served my God with half the zeal
> I served my king, He would not in mine age
> Have left me naked to mine enemies.

The past 30 days have certainly furnished an object lesson to the people of the United States on this point, namely, that the makers of the Constitution in the Convention over which Washington presided, in 1787, had powers of vision worthy of our respect and veneration, when in article I they took all control of the purse strings from the Executive, and created the legislative body called Congress to levy the taxes and control the disbursements.

This administration and this and the preceding session of Congress furnish the only examples of violations of that constitutional provision in American history.

Under Executive control of the tax power, which includes duties on imports, the country is now being flooded by foreign imports which have taken from the farmers their home markets for $500,000,000 of food products last year, and are destroying the textile industries of both New England and the South.

Under Executive allocation of $5,000,000,000 of Federal relief, at the end of the first fortnight two States are read out of the Union so far as concerns distribution of Federal relief.

Under Executive domination of debts and doles, there is a threat to a free and fair national election in every State in the Union. The national debts and deficits are piled to heights which threaten not only national credit, but the development of private enterprise, and the expansion of the productive resources which both maintain the Government and furnish employment to the wage-earners.

We are having our object lesson. It is our responsibility to derive wisdom from the lesson so painfully imparted. Shall we uphold the tradition of the United States Senate as the world's leading parliamentary body?

P. W. A. LOANS FOR MUNICIPAL CONSTRUCTION IN THE DISTRICT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. KING submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2035) to amend an act approved June 25, 1934, authorizing loans from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agreed to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and in lieu thereof, on page 1 of the Senate bill, line 9, delete the first comma and after the word "Act" insert the following: "(which, for the purposes of this act, shall be construed to include any agency created or designated by the President for similar purposes under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935)"; and the House agree to the same.

WILLIAM H. KING,
CARTER GLASS,
ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

MARY T. NORTON,
HENRY ELLENBOGEN,
EVERETT M. DIRKSEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Lewis	Radcliffe
Austin	Copeland	Logan	Robinson
Bachman	Costigan	Lonergan	Russell
Bailey	Couzens	McCarran	Schall
Bankhead	Dieterich	McGill	Schwellenbach
Barbour	Donahey	McKellar	Sheppard
Bilbo	Duffy	McNary	Shipstead
Black	Fletcher	Metcalf	Smith
Brown	Frazier	Minton	Steiwer
Bulkley	Gerry	Moore	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Gibson	Murphy	Trammell
Burke	Gore	Murray	Vandenberg
Byrd	Guffey	Neely	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hale	Norris	Walsh
Capper	Harrison	Nye	White
Caraway	Hatch	O'Mahoney
Carey	King	Overton
Clark	La Follette	Pittman

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rise at this moment to make an announcement in order that the RECORD may show the absence of Senators, and the reasons therefor, as announced by me on previous roll calls.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If a motion to adjourn shall be adopted, does the Presiding Officer rule that the result will be to displace the pending motion?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I submit that is not a parliamentary inquiry. That question can only rise when that motion is made on Monday, or on whatever day we adjourn to.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It has been made, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. I know, but that is not a parliamentary inquiry, and I challenge the good faith of it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I call for a ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It seems to the Chair that the inquiry is not in order on the motion which is now before the Senate.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Which is a motion to adjourn?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I make a point of order that the motion to adjourn is not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken, and will be sustained.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am not debating the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is trying to do so.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I make another parliamentary inquiry, which is: If the Democratic leader shall substitute for the motion to adjourn to recess, will the pending motion retain its place upon the calendar?

Mr. CONNALLY. I submit that is not a parliamentary inquiry and is not in order. There is no such matter pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised the motion will die with an adjournment, but will not on recess. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS];

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]; and

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN].

I also announce the necessary absence of the following Senators: The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON]; the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING]; the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]; the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]; the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK]; and the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

I am not advised how any of these Senators would vote if present.

I also wish to announce that if present and voting the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] would vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the following Senators are unavoidably detained from the Senate:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]; the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]; the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE]; the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]; the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE]; the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]; the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]; the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]; the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]; the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]; the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO]; the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE]; the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]; the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]; the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN]; the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]; the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]; and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is detained by illness.

I am authorized to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. Were the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] voting, he would vote "yea." Were the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] voting, he would vote "nay."

I announce further that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] has a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]. I am authorized to say that if the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] were present and voting he would vote "yea", and if the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] were present and voting he would vote "nay."

Mr. MCKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I have already voted, but I notice my pair, the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], is not present. Therefore, I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LOGAN. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. If he were present, I understand he would vote as I intend to vote, and I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—33

Adams	Connally	King	Russell
Bailey	Couzens	Lonergan	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dieterich	McKellar	Smith
Bilbo	Duffy	Murphy	Thomas, Utah
Black	Fletcher	Norris	Trammell
Brown	Gerry	Overton	Walsh
Bulow	Gore	Pittman
Byrnes	Harrison	Radcliffe
Caraway	Hatch	Robinson

NAYS—34

Austin	Costigan	McGill	Schall
Bachman	Donahey	McNary	Schwellenbach
Barbour	Frazier	Metcalf	Shipstead
Bulkley	Gibson	Minton	Steiwer
Burke	Hale	Moore	Vandenberg
Capper	La Follette	Murray	Van Nuys
Carey	Lewis	Neely	White
Clark	Logan	Nye
Copeland	McCarran	O'Mahoney

NOT VOTING—28

Ashurst	Davis	Johnson	Reynolds
Barkley	Dickinson	Keyes	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	George	Long	Townsend
Borah	Glass	McAdoo	Truman
Byrd	Guffey	Maloney	Tydings
Coolidge	Hastings	Norbeck	Wagner
Cutting	Hayden	Pope	Wheeler

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. GLASS (subsequently said): Mr. President, I was necessarily absent from the Chamber when a motion was made to take a recess. The RECORD does not show how I would have voted had I been here. I desire the RECORD to show that I would have voted to adjourn, and against the recess, had I been permitted to vote; but I was paired on the question with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING]. Therefore, nothing was lost by my absence.

Had I been present, I would, of course, have voted to adjourn, and therefore to dispose, for the time being, of this wretched bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I understood there was a motion pending to take a recess until Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A motion was made to adjourn until Monday, and the motion was rejected.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT (putting the question). The Chair is in doubt.

On a division, the motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Saturday, April 27, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, APRIL 26, 1935

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord and Father of the eternal past, we rejoice that there is one God, one law, one element, and one far-off event toward which the whole creation moves; with passionate hope help us to cling to this ideal. By the tranquil guidance of Thy Holy Spirit, O carry on the work of man's redemption. Bring unity into the divided and estranged members of the family universal. Lift the clouds of discord and reveal the divine purpose to the pressing hosts of earth. Be with us, our Heavenly Father, and arm us with jealous care; may we be chivalrous of heart toward the weak, always striving higher for the standards of personal honor. Bless and strengthen with the spirit of forgiveness of injuries and with the other excellences of unsullied manhood. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that amendments will be offered at the very beginning of the reading of the naval-appropriation bill, it is highly important, in my judgment, that we should at least have 100 Members present, a quorum of the Committee.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman from Georgia is going to make the point of no quorum, I want to say that you will not, by unanimous consent, meet at 11 o'clock hereafter.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. During the 21 years that I have been here I have never made a point of no quorum, but I think the House should know what the amendments are and have a large number of the Membership present.

Mr. SNELL. That is all right; we yielded to meet at 11 o'clock today at the request of the majority leader, but I am opposed to coming here at 11 o'clock and wasting an hour in the call for a quorum.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am not willing to take up these amendments without having at least a quorum of the Committee present.

Mr. SNELL. All right, go ahead; but we will not come in at 11 o'clock hereafter.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Georgia to withhold his point of no quorum. We will endeavor to have the whip get Members in as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the majority leader, for the time being I will withdraw the point of no quorum, but I do insist that there shall be at least a quorum of the Committee present.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The only reason that I asked to have the House meet at 11 o'clock was with hope that we might finish the bill today. A large number of Members have stated that they want to go out of town tomorrow to attend to other official matters, and the House has agreed to adjourn this afternoon until Monday, and we are quite anxious to finish the bill today.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. You can count on my full cooperation to expedite the consideration of the bill, but when we consider these amendments to the bill I think we should have a quorum present.

WASHINGTON-LINCOLN MEMORIAL-GETTYSBURG BOULEVARD

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk Senate Joint Resolution 43 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk reported the title, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 43 for the establishment of a commission for the construction of a Washington-Lincoln Memorial-Gettysburg Boulevard connecting the present Lincoln Memorial in the city of Washington with the battlefield at Gettysburg in the State of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not think a resolution of this importance ought to be taken up out of order and passed by unanimous consent. I do not know when all of this continued orgy of money-spending is going to stop. It has got to stop some day. If it does not, our Nation will be bankrupt. I am not willing to tax the posterity of the American people for all of this continued debt making when we have no reasonable assurance they will have means of paying, when the inevitable pay day comes.

Mr. HAINES. This resolution has passed the Senate.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, anything on God's earth can pass—somewhere else. They have recently passed a bill—and a House committee is now holding hearings on it—to spend $3,500,000 to ruin this Capitol Building, one of the best types of colonial buildings anywhere on earth. That passed the Senate without the majority of the Senators knowing anything about it.

Americans spend millions of dollars abroad every year looking at old buildings in Europe, but as soon as a building gets old in this country they want to ruin it or tear it down. I object, Mr. Speaker.

COTTON

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I shall not try to call up my cotton resolution this morning, but give notice that I shall do so on Monday next.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval-appropriation bill, with Mr. MCCORMACK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL RESEARCH LABORATORY

For laboratory and research work and other necessary work of the naval research laboratory for the benefit of the naval service, including operation and maintenance of a laboratory, additions to equipment necessary properly to carry on work in hand, maintenance of buildings and grounds, temporary employment of such scientific and technical civilian assistants as may become necessary, and subscriptions to technical periodicals, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, $310,000: Provided, That $50,000 of this appropriation shall be available for the temporary employment of civilian scientists and technicists required on special problems: Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $90,000, in addition to the amount authorized by the preceding proviso.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CARY: Page 5, line 15, strike out "$90,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$120,000."

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not add any money to the bill. The committee increased this appropriation $100,000. Of that amount we made $30,000 available for the appointment of civilian scientists and technicians, the remainder being for general appropriation uses. Admiral Robinson, the Chief of the Bureau of Engineering, has indicated to me that to get full value out of the additional amount, it more than likely would be necessary to expand the staff of nontechnical civilian employees, and has suggested that the limitation upon the total pay of such employees be expanded to the figure stated in the amendment. The amendment adds nothing to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Instruction: For postgraduate instruction of officers in other than civil government and literature, and for special instruction, education, and individual training of officers and enlisted men at home and abroad, including maintenance of students abroad, except aviation training and submarine training otherwise appropriated for, $178,000: Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be available for or on account of any expense incident to giving special educational courses or postgraduate instruction to officers with view to qualifying them or better qualifying them for the performance of duties required to be performed by or in pursuance of law by officers of the Supply Corps, Construction Corps, or Corps of Civil Engineers, except present students and except such officers who are commissioned in such corps or who have not been commissioned in the line of the Navy more than 2 years;

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Page 8, strike out lines 12 to 22, inclusive.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise to submit an amendment. Strike out lines 12 to 22, inclusive, page 8. This new language inserted in the appropriation bill which I move to strike out is personnel legislation under the guise of a limitation. I may add that this question, that is the detail of line officers for specialist duty has heretofore been fully considered by the Naval Affairs Committee of the House which Committee recommended legislation to the House embodied in H. R. 5599 which passed the House on March 27, 1935, and is now pending before the Senate. The provisions I refer to are in section 6 providing for transfer of line officers to the staff. This provision was inserted in order to improve the quality of specialists within the Navy, that is, it enables the Secretary of the Navy to transfer from the line to the Construction Corps, the Civil Engineer Corps, or the Supply Corps, a line officer at a later date than is now permitted under existing law. This delay will give the Department a greater period of demonstrated experience from which to select officers who may show a particular aptitude and a desire for the special duties of the staff corps. It is also the long-established practice with regard to the most numerous specialist branch in the Navy—the marine engineers. As this practice has operated for so long a time to the great satisfaction and efficiency of the marine engineers of the Navy, a highly specialized group, it is only reasonable to assume that the same practice will operate similarly for the other staff specialties mentioned. It conforms in general to civilian practice. A doctor must be a doctor prior to being a specialist in any branch of medicine or surgery. The legislation which has passed the House, H. R. 5599, will enable the staff corps concerned to more carefully select and to surely obtain officers of proven ability in their particular specialties instead of taking in young men of slight experience who may prove to be unsatisfactory.

The provision inserted by the Appropriations Committee of the House which I seek to strike out will be uneconomical, and will be contrary to the best efficiency of the Navy. The present practice is to assign young officers with from 2 to 7 years' commissioned service to special instruction for the Civil Engineer Corps, the Construction Corps, and the Supply Corps. It is believed that this period of time is necessary in order that the young officers concerned may have time to demonstrate their suitability for specialist work, and that the best available material may be selected for the important work of the specialist corps.

As I said before, the Naval Affairs Committee has carefully studied this question and is convinced that the language inserted by the Appropriations Committee should be stricken out, and that the plans embodied in H. R. 5599 should be given a fair trial. The Navy Department agrees with the Naval Affairs Committee, as indicated in its recommendation thereon, which is in accordance with the report of a reorganization board of March 6, 1934, approved by the President.

Any prevention by legislative enactment of a free selection of specialists in the Navy would be destructive of efficiency.

It appears that the inserted language is impossible of any reasonable execution. The course of postgraduate instruction for the Construction Corps and the Civil Engineer Corps is 3 years. Manifestly, an officer of the line, if he should be sent to the postgraduate school immediately upon graduation would, under the provision under discussion, have to be transferred to the corps concerned upon completion of only 2 years of his postgraduate instruction before having fully demonstrated his ability in order that he may pursue the course to completion.

Mr. PEARSON. Will the gentleman's amendment mean an increase in the appropriation?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No. It will mean a reduction.

If the provision recommended by the Appropriations Committee should become a law, it will result in considerably more officers being commissioned for limited corps duties than under the present and proposed plan of the Navy Department.

The authorized number of officers in the different staff corps in the Navy allowed by existing law is as follows:

Medical Corps, 1,207; Supply Corps, 660; Construction Corps, 275; Civil Engineer Corps, 110; Chaplain Corps, 149; Dental Corps, 186; Professors of Mathematics, 1.

The Department is now in process of reaching a radical reduction in the number of officers in the different staff corps and expects eventually to have the number reduced to the following numbers: Medical Corps, 745; Supply Corps, 440; Construction Corps, 140; Civil Engineer Corps, 80; Chaplain Corps, 76; Dental Corps, 211. A total reduction in all the staff corps of 329 officers will eventually result in a material saving in the annual expenditures for pay of the Navy on both the active and retired lists.

This plan in operation since March 1934 has already accomplished a reduction of 57 in the total number of staff officers.

It is my personal belief that the Navy now has a greater number of officers in some of the staff corps than is necessary to efficiency, and that the demands of economy in annual expenditures for pay of the Navy necessitate keeping the number down to that strength which is necessary. The Navy Department is at the present time endeavoring to accomplish this reduction by the slow process of normal attrition, which will give the staff corps concerned ample time to adjust their processes to meet the reduction, and which will not adversely affect the prospects of any individual now in the service.

As an illustration of the possibility of economy in expenditures for the personnel of naval staff corps, the following comparison of the number of staff officers in comparable navies is interesting:

Medical officers

American Navy	836
Japanese Navy	502
British Navy	346

We have more than twice as many medical officers as the British Navy.

Naval constructors

American Navy	224
British Navy	118
Japanese Navy	74

We have nearly twice as many naval constructors as the British Navy.

Civil engineers

American Navy	107
British Navy	59

We have nearly twice as many civil engineers as the British Navy.

It is natural that each staff corps should desire to increase its membership to such a number as can be justified by the desires and the vision of the persons interested, and without adequate consideration of the essential necessity for over-all economy in annual expenditures for the Navy.

The enactment of the provision which my amendment proposes to strike out will result in an immediate demand for an increase in the numerical strength of the staff corps concerned with a resulting extravagance of expenditures in future years.

It will also in the opinion of both the Naval Affairs Committee and the Navy Department accomplish a reduction in the quality of the officers selected for assignment to the highly technical specialist work of the corps, and in a definite decrease in the existing efficiency of the Navy.

I have a full appreciation of the present efficiency and superior performance of the staff corps of the Navy; and particularly with the purpose of maintaining, and if possible improving, the superior standards and accomplishments of the individuals who will in the future be intrusted with the specialist technical work of the Navy, I propose that this proposed unworkable limitation on freedom of selection by the Secretary of the Navy be eliminated from the current naval-appropriation bill.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in 18 minutes, and that one-half of the time may be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to move to close debate, but the Chair has the responsibility of recognizing Members.

The gentleman from Kentucky moves that all debate on this amendment close in 18 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, the question raised by the gentleman from Georgia of limiting officers in the several staff corps is not involved in this proposition at all; it has nothing whatever to do with it. I was very much surprised, indeed, to hear him stand up on the floor of this House and talk about economy in a naval-appropriation bill. What we are trying to do in this bill is to at least maintain the existing degree of efficiency in the Navy of the United States, and that naturally would result in economy.

The portion of this proviso to which objection is raised is comprised within the last two lines, which read:

> Or who has not been commissioned in the line of the Navy more than 2 years.

We are only undertaking to require conformance with what the law has provided should be done all these years, because rather recently high Navy officials have begun to disregard it and have been attempting to procure their staff officers in a way suitable to them without any regard for what the Congress has said about it in years past.

Mr. Chairman, on pages 8 and 9 of the report on this bill will be found the explanation for the inclusion of this limitation. I enlarged upon that explanation in my speech on the bill last Tuesday—page 6234 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. There is little more that I can add.

The Nation pointed with pride to the way the Navy functioned during the war. That was the acid test. That was the proof of the efficiency and effectiveness of its organization. It had a trained and efficient line and it had a trained and efficient staff. Each had prepared well and each functioned well-nigh perfectly. And why? Simply because each was composed and directed by men who were trained specialists in their allotted fields.

Let me recall to you some names of outstanding specialists: Chief Constructor Bowles; Chief Constructor Capps; Chief Constructor D. W. Taylor, internationally known and an international authority; the present chief constructor, Jerry Land, whom you all know; Naval Constructor Du Bose, who is a real genius.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. CARY. I do not like to be interrupted.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Captain Du Bose, whose name the gentleman just referred to, endorsed the Department's report.

Mr. CARY. Possibly the gentleman has a right to that inference. I know whereof I speak when I say that staff officers generally do not and have not endorsed it. The fact of the matter is they are afraid to come out and say anything; they are afraid they will get their heads chopped off if they do; and the gentleman from Georgia knows it as well as I do.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Oh, not at all.

Mr. CARY. Let me continue with the names of a few more renowned specialists. There were Sam McGowan, the war-time Paymaster General; Admiral Peoples, the most capable and popular present Paymaster General; Admiral Harris, the war-time Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks; and our very capable friend, Admiral Parsons, but recently head of that Bureau.

Mr. Chairman, none of these men had or has a peer in his particular field. There are many others I might name, and they attained or have attained their distinguished positions because they started in as specialists right out of Annapolis or college and continued as specialists throughout their naval service.

This provision is directed at a move to let men prepare for specialist duty even when they have reached midlife; to let them alternate between line and specialist duty; to educate them as specialists and leave to their election whether or not they shall permanently become specialists. In short, it is directed at a move that spells ruin for these splendid, efficient staff corps, which are so largely responsible for the standing the Navy has in the business world today.

I have been told by naval officers that it is their judgment that none of the outstanding officers trained as specialists under the scheme now afoot will elect permanent specialty duty after receiving this special training; that only those officers who will be fearful of a line selection board—in other words, the least promising material—will volunteer for permanent special duty. I concur in that view.

The Navy's specialists should be equal or superior to those of the industry. It is my judgment, by this system we are trying to curb, that the matériel efficiency of the Navy is left to chance. At present the Navy's matériel efficiency is excellent, so why change? For greater efficiency we should be working to expand it to include ordnance, aeronautics, and engineering. Such a course conforms to the judgment of both the recent Baker Board and the Howell Commission.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that this new arrangement does not have the approval of members of the staff corps affected, and that if a poll could be had of their views they would be found to be overwhelmingly against it. They have not been consulted. It is but the initial step to complete amalgamation with the line. When that time comes, if it ever shall, you will have a lot of line officers nominally in charge of activities now directed and performed by specially trained staff officers, with civilian technicists and warrant officers and petty officers actually doing the work. It borders on a crime, gentlemen, to do aught to tear down the splendid system that has prevailed down through the years.

Do you think, Mr. Chairman, it is a proper thing for us to do to wait until naval officers have performed 12 or 14 years of duty in the line and then decide to pick them out and train them along some special line? Or should we take the young graduates from the Naval Academy and begin to prepare them for this special work as soon as they come out of the academy? Under the plan the gentleman from Georgia is endorsing we will let men stay in the Navy as much as 12 or 14 years before we start preparing them as specialists, a time when they ought to be giving their best service as specialists to their country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, there is but one thing to this proposition and that is whether in the interest of efficiency we are going to require these staff officers to be started upon their careers within 2 years after they have graduated from the Naval Academy, or permit someone high up in authority among the line officers to say we shall educate men at the expense of the Government after they have reached middle life and then make it optional with them whether they perform specialized duties for the Government.

I think in the cause of efficiency we should require that when these men are selected as specialists they be selected within 2 years after they come out of the Academy in order that the Government may get the full benefit of whatever their services may be worth. I think it is a mistake to do it in any other way. I think it should be done as it has been done heretofore, and if we will do that we will continue to have efficiency in the Navy. The Congress should say how these staff officers shall be selected, and not some two or three high-ranking line officers in the Navy.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee will defeat this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. VINSON of Georgia)—ayes 23, noes 80.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY, SUBSISTENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION OF NAVAL PERSONNEL

Pay of naval personnel: For pay allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty, and officers on waiting orders (not to exceed 908 officers of the Medical Corps, 186 officers of the Dental Corps, 556 officers of the Supply Corps, 83 officers of the Chaplain Corps, 233 officers of the Construction Corps, 109 officers of the Civil Engineer Corps, and 1,461 warrant and commissioned warrant officers: Provided, That if the number of warrant and commissioned warrant officers and officers in any staff corps holding commission on July 1, 1935, is in excess of the number herein stipulated, such excess officers may be retained in the Navy until the number is reduced to the limitations imposed by this act), pay—$32,948,940, including not to exceed $1,628,858 for increased pay for making aerial flights, no part of which shall be available for increased pay for making aerial flights by more than three rear admirals nor by nonflying officers or observers at a rate in excess of $1,440 per annum, which shall be the legal maximum rate as to such nonflying officers or observers; rental allowance, $6,685,447; subsistence allowance, $4,257,791; in all, $43,892,178; officers on the retired list, $7,717,150; for hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them, and hire of quarters for officers and enlisted men on sea duty at such times as they may be deprived of their quarters on board ship due to repairs or other conditions which may render them uninhabitable, $3,000; pay of enlisted men on the retired list, $6,050,042; interest on deposits by men, $3,000; pay of petty officers (not to exceed an average of 7,040 chief petty officers, of which number those with a permanent appointment as chief petty officer shall not exceed an average of 6,150), seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineer's force and men detailed for duty with the Fish Commission, enlisted men, men in trade schools, pay of enlisted men of the Hospital Corps, extra pay for men for diving, and cash prizes (not to exceed $75,000) for men for excellence in gunnery, target practice, communication, and engineering competitions, $73,872,972; outfits for all enlisted men and apprentice seamen of the Navy on first enlistment, civilian clothing not to exceed $15 per man to men given discharges for bad conduct or undesirability or inaptitude, reimbursement in kind of clothing to persons in the Navy for losses in cases of marine or aircraft disasters or in the operation of water- or air-borne craft, and the authorized issue of clothing and equipment to the members of the Nurse Corps, $2,246,523; pay of enlisted men undergoing sentence of court martial, $64,400, and as many machinists as the President may from time to time deem necessary to appoint; pay and allowances of the Nurse Corps, including assistant superintendents, directors and assistant directors—pay, $498,320; rental allowance, $15,840; subsistence allowance, $15,152; pay retired list, $176,424; in all, $705,736; rent of quarters for members of the Nurse Corps; pay and allowances of transferred and assigned men of the Fleet Naval Reserve, $12,125,039; reimbursement for losses of property as provided in the act approved October 6, 1917 (U. S. C., title 34, secs. 981, 982), as amended by the act of March 3, 1927 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 34, sec. 983), $10,000; payment of 6 months' death gratuity, $100,000; in all, $146,790,040; and no part of such sum shall be available to pay active-duty pay and allowances to officers in excess of 6 on the retired list, except retired officers temporarily ordered to active duty as members of retiring and selection boards as authorized by law: Provided, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, no officer of the Navy shall be entitled to receive an addition to his pay in consequence of the provisions of the act approved May 13, 1908 (U. S. C., title 34, sec. 867): Provided further, That, except for the public quarters occupied by the Chief of Office of Naval Operations, the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, and the commandant of the Marine Corps and messes temporarily set up on shore for officers attached to seagoing vessels, to aviation units based on seagoing vessels, including officers' messes at the fleet air bases, and to landing forces and expeditions, no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the pay, allowances, or other expenses of any enlisted man or civil employee performing service in the residence or quarters of an officer or officers on shore as a cook, waiter, or other work of a character performed by a household servant, but nothing herein shall be construed as preventing the voluntary employment in any such capacity of a retired enlisted man or a transferred member of the Fleet Naval Reserve without additional expense to the Government, nor the sale of meals to officers by general messes on shore as regulated by detailed instructions from the Navy Department.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McGRATH: On page 25, line 14, after the word "of", strike out the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is acceptable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for pay, subsistence, and transportation of naval personnel, $168,283,083, of which sum $1,000,000 shall be immediately available, and the money herein specifically appropriated for "Pay, subsistence, and transportation of naval personnel", shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law and shall constitute one fund: Provided, That additional commissioned, warranted, appointed, enlisted, and civilian personnel of the Medical Department of the Navy, required for the care of patients of the United States Veterans' Administration in naval hospitals, may be employed in addition to the numbers appropriated for in this act: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the pay of any midshipmen whose admission subsequent to January 30, 1935, would result in exceeding at any time an allowance of 4 midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress; of 1 midshipman for Puerto Rico, a native of the island, appointed on nomination of the Governor, and of 4 midshipmen from Puerto Rico, appointed on nomination of the Resident Commissioner; and of 4 midshipmen from the District of Columbia: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or modify in any way existing laws relative to the appointment of midshipmen at large, from the enlisted personnel of the naval service, or from the Naval Reserve: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the pay of any midshipman appointed from enlisted men of the Navy for admission to the Naval Academy in the class entering in the calendar year 1936 who has not served aboard a vessel of the Navy in full commission for at least 9 months prior to such admission.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MAVERICK: Page 29, line 17, after the word "of", strike out "four" and insert "three"; in line 20, after the word "of", strike out "four" and insert "three"; in line 22, after the word "of", strike out "four" and insert "three."

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chalrman, the purpose of this amendment is to keep the appointments at Annapolis to just exactly what they are at this time and not to reduce the present number of Annapolis cadets. The present allotment is sufficient; no necessity exists for an increase.

I want to call attention to the fact that West Point has 1,220 cadets and there are now 1,622 midshipmen in the Naval Academy at Annapolis. There are 118,000 soldiers in the Army, which will be increased by approximately 47,000 men. There are 81,000 enlisted men in the Navy and they already have 400 more cadets than West Point; 345 midshipmen will graduate from Annapolis this year and all will be commissioned in the Navy. In various years Annapolis has graduated too many midshipmen who have been unable to obtain commissions as ensigns.

May I call attention to one other thing: I received a letter from the Navy Department, Bureau of Navigation, which calls attention to the fact that this law will be brought up. I believe it is poor taste on the part of the Navy Department or the War Department to tell a Congressman in advance what kind of a law he is going to pass and then offer him an appointment in the Navy. Is the Navy running Congress or Congress running the Navy? This looks to me as just a little bit of gratuitous advice from the Navy Department. It may be considered by other gentleman as a courtesy and it may be intended as such. Of course, I do not think there is anything particularly sinister in it, but I am sure it is intended to make us favor this legislation so we can have another appointment to pass out.

On the general subject of education may I say that we have heard on this floor the statement made that after a man leaves Annapolis he has to go to universities and technical colleges to obtain special training. But do you ever think of it? A man may go to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he may get education in marine engineering, shipbuilding, steam engineering, and get a good education along those and other lines. That man, however, cannot get an appointment in the Navy because of this old caste system which they have in the Navy, where everybody has to be a graduate of Annapolis, the United States Naval Academy. Now, what about the Army? The Army has always taken in civilians from the various colleges and these men have been trained to be very fine officers. They get into the Army and they receive a reasonable amount of military training.

The argument is going to be made that this seafaring stuff is a mysterious sort of thing, and that it is necessary to go to the Naval Academy in order to serve the Navy. That is not so at all. If a man has a sound college education, and if he can receive a little Navy experience and learn navigation, he will be as good as any officer in the Navy.

Mr. Chairman, here is what I object to. We ought to give the boys of this country a chance to get in the Navy, and I refer particularly to those boys who are not lucky enough to get a congressional appointment. These boys go to the universities in Nebraska, Texas, Washington, and other States and get a good education.

When a man goes to Annapolis or West Point, his teacher stands before him, not to teach him facts but to make him believe in a certain thing. As I said on the floor yesterday, they take these boys, put them in pots, pour hot metal in there, then send them out and use them as officers in the Army and Navy. Of course, they learn good manners at the Naval Academy and they get a good education. But you cannot tell me that a man who is a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology or any other good college, and he has a reasonable amount of training, cannot become as good a naval officer as a graduate of Annapolis. This is going to give the Congressman an additional appointment. As far as I am concerned, that is not an inducement and I do not think any Member particularly wants the appointment. But that is not the point. The point is we ought to have a Navy organization where they do not take a boy 17 years old, but one 21 years old, one who has a reasonable amount of maturity, as well as a good general education along economic lines and other lines, so that he may be broad-minded mentally to serve in the Navy.

So I believe we should not increase the number of midshipmen, but give other young people a chance.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. Let me make one more point and then I will yield to the gentleman.

We have already increased the Naval Reserve, especially for fliers, and one of the arguments that has been made in favor of increasing the number of cadets is that we needed more young men for the Air Service, but with this increased Naval Reserve that is not necessary.

I now yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DARDEN. Do I understand that the gentleman is not opposed to the increase in the number of midshipmen, but wants to distribute them in a fashion different from that which now obtains?

Mr. MAVERICK. I am opposed to increasing the number of midshipmen at Annapolis. I want to make it so that a man who is graduated from a college like the Massachusetts Institute of Technology can join the Navy, and probably in a year can learn navigation after he has had a course of study in marine engineering, steam engineering, and mechanical engineering, and then may become as efficient an officer as a man who has been at the Naval Academy.

Mr. DARDEN. But the gentleman is agreeable to the additional appointments?

Mr. MAVERICK. No; I am opposed to the additional appointments at Annapolis.

Mr. MAVERICK obtained unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks, and to insert therein a letter from the Navy Department.

The letter is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF NAVIGATION,
Washington, D. C., April 23, 1935.

Hon. MAURY MAVERICK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MAVERICK: The Navy Department and the Bureau of the Budget have recommended to Congress that the quota of midshipmen for each Senator, Representative and Delegate in Congress be increased from three to four. In contemplation of this increase being provided for in the current Naval Appropriation bill, and in view of the necessity for prompt action prior to the actual passage of the bill, in the way of making arrangements for the admission of midshipmen to the Naval Academy this summer, an entrance examination will be held on June 17, 1935 for candidates nominated for these vacancies.

In order to afford ample time in which to make arrangements to hold the examination, it will be necessary that your nominations reach the Bureau not later than May 29. While the law does not require these nominations to be made until March 4, 1936, the opportunity of making the nominations at this time is offered in case you do not wish to hold the vacancy over until next year. Nomination blanks are enclosed herewith.

There are three methods of qualifying mentally for admission to the Naval Academy:

(1) By passing the regular mental examination in all six subjects.

(2) By submission of an acceptable certificate of credits on graduation from an accredited secondary school, and passing a substantiating examination in English and mathematics.

(3) By submission of acceptable certificates from accredited secondary schools and colleges, without mental examination, in accordance with the entrance regulations.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM D. LEAHY,
Chief of Bureau.

(Enc.)

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, the Government has committed itself to a naval policy. We are committed to building a Navy up to treaty strength. This bill provides for such appropriations as are now necessary to carry out that established policy of the Government. If we are going to build additional ships, if we are going to increase the Navy as we have been doing for the past year or two and continue to do so until we build up to treaty strength, it is an untenable position to favor the building of a lot of ships and oppose the provision of the officers required to man those ships.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARY. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. Is it not a fact that the gentleman himself cut down certain appropriations with the idea that there may be some limitation of armament; and inasmuch as that is in the air, it seems to me we do not necessarily have to pass this provision at this time, because we do not know how large the Navy is going to be 4 years from now?

Mr. CARY. Irrespective of the committee's action with respect to appropriations for shipbuilding, it is my judgment that this additional appointment is justified at this time. The House, as recently as March 27 last, expressed itself upon the need for additional officers in passing H. R. 5599, which looks to increasing the line-officer strength of the Navy to 6,531 by 1945. We are told, and I think it is true, that it will not be practicable to reach that number with three appointments, considering past experience of attrition from normal causes in conjunction with increased forced attrition incident to the legislation passed at the last session.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARY. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It would be useless to authorize the construction of ships unless we provided for the officers to man the ships.

Mr. CARY. Manifestly, that is true.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARY. I yield.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Presuming that the naval conference which is in the air decided on a decrease in naval armament, will this provision that we have to appoint four cadets from each congressional district still hold?

Mr. CARY. We can control that each year. That can be controlled by limitation in this bill from year to year.

I hope the members of the Committee will defeat this amendment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] evidently goes on the theory that you can train a naval officer as readily as you can an infantry officer. A battleship is a highly technical proposition and you cannot send a young man into an officers' training camp for a few months and have him come out equipped, trained, and ready to take such command.

There is another angle to this proposal that the House should look into. Our aim should be to create one of the largest merchant marines in the world, and we should have the largest merchant marine of any country in the world.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. If the United States Government pursues the policy which the gentleman's party has sponsored for 70 years of a high protective tariff, what is this merchant marine going to haul?

Mr. KNUTSON. Some one always likes to drag a red herring across the trail.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. That is a pretty good one, though. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. I will admit that if you continue your processing tax on cotton we probably will not need any merchant marine or, at least, not much of a one, but I am assuming that the American people will return to sanity sooner or later and return the Republican Party to power, and when they do we are going to need a very considerable merchant marine.

Mr. SISSON, Mr. BIERMANN, and Mr. MAVERICK rose.

Mr. KNUTSON. No! I cannot be interrupted now, because I have only a few minutes.

Even though we do not commission these additional graduates they will nevertheless be available in time of crisis. They will be available in the building up of our merchant marine, and I consider that one of the best investments contained in this appropriation bill.

I am not in favor of a great big Navy, but I do believe that we should have trained personnel that will be available overnight, if a crisis should arise and it should become necessary for us to fight for our lives on the high seas.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. MAY. As I understand it, the cadets that come out of the Naval Academy are prepared largely for official duty and the gentleman will remember that the War Department reports show that our greatest difficulty when we entered the World War was lack of trained officers on land and sea.

Mr. KNUTSON. We took care of the situation very nicely on land, although it slowed up the prosecution of the war to establish training camps and run the students through them, but you cannot do that with respect to the Navy.

You talk about taking a boy out of the Boston School of Technology and giving him 6 months and then placing a battleship in his hands. Why, that is too absurd even to discuss seriously.

A battleship costs 45 or 50 million dollars. There are something like two or three thousand men whose lives are absolutely in the hands of the officers of that ship. Even after 4 years an Annapolis graduate has to be given practical and protracted instructions on the high seas before he is qualified to take command of a vessel. When they talk about availing ourselves of graduates of the Boston School of Technology, that is all poppycock. [Applause.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, I do not claim to know how many naval cadets we need. I am not sure that any Member of the House knows how many naval cadets we need. I do recall that 2 years ago a bill was introduced in this House to give a large percentage of these graduates from the Naval Academy at Annapolis a degree, because there was no place for them in the Navy. They could not receive a commission on graduation. I voted for that bill because I thought it a fair proposition that as long as they had spent 4 years of their lives in the Academy, and there was no place for them in the Navy, we should give them what little help we could to enable them to earn a living in industry.

After that we engaged in this bigger Navy building proposition. We had more men than ships then, and now they say we will have more ships than men.

I understood the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], in making his argument for this proposition for spending $457,000,000, to say something to the effect that this Government owed it to our citizens, to our nationals, to protect them and their property wherever they are.

I say that is not the policy of this administration, it is not the policy of the Government, it is not the policy of the Department of State, and, God willing, it will never be their policy. [Applause.]

It is that imperialistic policy which has brought on wars. I will never vote to send my boy or any other boy of anyone on the floor to fight the battles of the Rockefellers or the great oil interests. [Applause.]

We are trying to avoid foreign entanglements and keep ourselves out of foreign wars. The one thing I am praying for is that our business men, our oil interests, our commercial interests, will not be able to embroil us, but that we will keep our citizens off the seas in time of war.

In time of war the only thing to do is to win the war. They forget all rules of international law. England, whose colonies are all around the world, and upon whose territory the sun never sets, has spent 20 percent less in the last 13 years on her navy than we have spent on ours, and we are now building a Navy that is going to be, in the language of its advocates—even Assistant Secretary Roosevelt—even a greater brandisher of the big stick than in the days of his distinguished kinsman, the late Theodore—a Navy second to none. We are building a Navy to protect us against whom? Not one man comes here and points out why we need a larger Navy for defensive purposes. We are more advantageously situated than any other country in the world, and we are doing less to promote peace than the other great powers. We are not doing our part. I am in favor of cutting down the appropriations in this bill at least 25 percent. I understand from press reports—and I do not know how authentic they are—that there was considerable feeling in this subcommittee that this amount ought to be much further reduced. I am not a member of the committee, and I am not authorized to speak for them. I think they have brought in as good a bill as they could under the circumstances, and I think they brought in a fine report, and I want to go along with them. I am for a navy adequate for defense, but I would like to see the amount of this bill reduced.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDREWS of New York: Page 29, line 22, after the word "Commissioner", insert the following: "and of one midshipman from the Panama Canal Zone appointed on the nomination of the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone."

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I understand that we have a very representative citizenship among our residents in the Panama Canal Zone. The young men of that zone have very great difficulty in arranging to even be considered for the Military Academy at West Point or the Naval Academy at Annapolis. The amendment which I have offered speaks for itself. The Governor of the Canal Zone is well qualified to use proper discretion in selecting young men of the Canal Zone, for which we are responsible. I think it ought to have representation in the appointment of at least one midshipman at the Naval Academy.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. This provision is a limitation upon existing law and the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] any authorization of law for such an amendment?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

MAINTENANCE, BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS

For equipage, supplies, and services under the cognizance of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, including stationery for commanding, executive, communication, and navigating officers of ships, boards and courts on ships, and chaplains; commissions, interest, and exchange; ferriage and bridge tolls, including streetcar fares; rent of buildings and offices not in navy yards, except for use of naval attachés and recruiting officers; accident prevention; services of civilian employees under the cognizance of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts; freight, express, and parcel-post charges, including transportation of funds and cost of insurance on shipments of money when necessary, and ice for cooling drinking water on shore (except at naval hospitals and shops at industrial navy yards), pertaining to the Navy Department and Naval Establishment, $8,300,000: Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be available for or on account of the supply or replacement of table linen, dishes, glassware, silver, and/or kitchen utensils for use in the residences or quarters of officers on shore: Provided further, That no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for any expense for or incident to the transportation of privately owned automobiles except on account of the return to the United States of such privately owned automobiles as may have been transported to points outside of the continental limits of the United States at public expense prior to July 1, 1932: Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $4,400,000: Provided further, That, without deposit to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States and withdrawal on money requisitions, receipts of public moneys from sales or other sources by officers of the Navy and Marine Corps on disbursing duty and charged in their official accounts may be used by them as required for current expenditures, all necessary bookkeeping adjustments of appropriations, funds, and accounts to be made in the settlement of their disbursing accounts.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If it were in order at this time, I would offer an amendment that the bill include an appropriation of at least $6,000,000 for the construction of an all-metal lighter-than-air ship.

I want to discuss very briefly the question of continuing the development of lighter-than-air craft. While it is my purpose primarily to discuss metal-clad airship construction, I want to point out that I am of the opinion that the Government of the United States should continue to experiment with the Zeppelin type of rigid airship covered with fabric.

In the year 1921 a group of Detroit men associated principally in the automobile industry came to the conclusion that the successful rigid airship of the future would be built entirely of metal, even including the hull itself. Quiet though careful engineering investigation of the possibilities of metal-clad construction convinced this enterprising group that metal-clad construction was not only feasible but wholly practical.

In 1926 the technical problems had been mastered to a sufficient degree of certainty to justify the construction of the prototype, an all-metal craft of 200,000 cubic feet displacement, which is known as the "ZMC–2", and which is in active service of the Navy today.

I want to say to the Members of the House that the year of 1929 in the field of lighter-than-air ship construction was as revolutionary in development as the year 1834 when the first iron steamship was built at Savanah.

On August 19 of the memorable year of 1929 the skeptics the world over were convinced of the airworthiness and practicability of this unusual craft. The ZMC–2 had been successfully flown from its hangar at the Grosse Ile Airport, Detroit, after most rigid and thorough tests. The acceptance of the ship by the Navy Department was predicated upon the test flight of 600 miles nonstop from Detroit to Lakehurst, N. J. She was then placed in the hands of the naval experts to complete their own tests with the "tin blimp", and it is significant that the ZMC–2 met every requirement of the naval contract with a safe margin over requirements, and today, nearly 6 years after her first flight, I am informed by the Navy Department that this all-metal ship is in active service, in perfect unimpaired condition. She has worn out two sets of motors and her third set will have to be replaced shortly.

This revolutionary type, revolutionary in the sense, however, in that it is an original model, had made a total of 278 flights as of October 1, 1933. At that time she had had 1,016 hours in the air and a mileage estimated above 50,000 miles, or twice the distance around the world. She had been flown in all kinds of weather and had met every test of the Navy Department thus far. It is safe to assume that her mileage and number of hours in the air has been increased since that time by at least 50 percent. This craft is unusually stable and airworthy. The retention of helium gas surpasses the requirements of the experts of the Navy Department. The only diffusion of gas is through the gas valves when they are in need of reseating.

On April 12 of 1933 the Bureau of Standards made tests of six samples of the metal hull plating. The tests indicate no loss in strength nor presence of crystalline corrosion. This Alclad plating, which is now over 7 years old, still exceeds in strength the original contract specifications. I submit for the RECORD the figures of the Bureau of Standards:

	Ultimate tensile
Strength (pounds per inch²)	50,000	57,700
Yield point (pounds per inch²)	28,000	39,700
Elongation	12	16.5

It is now generally admitted in aeronautical circles that the metal-clad ZMC–2 can no longer be regarded as an experiment. Quite the contrary, it is admitted that in the very first attempt in all-metal construction the designers evolved and completed a proven success.

The Metalclad Airship Corporation, of Detroit, enlisted the scientific cooperation and aid of the different departments of the United States Government, a number of nationally known engineers and experts connected with educational and industrial enterprises of this country. Among these I list the following:

United States Navy, Bureau of Aeronautics.
United States Army Air Corps.
National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics.
Bureau of Standards.
Prof. Herbert C. Sadler and Ralph H. Upson, of the University of Michigan.
Dr. William Hovgaard, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.
Dr. R. A. Millikan, of the California Institute of Technology.
William B. Mayo, formerly chief engineer for the Ford Motor Co.
C. F. Kettering, president of General Motors Research Corporation.
Alex Dow, president of the Detroit Edison Co.
Dr. E. Blough, Aluminum Co. of America.

Extensive study of lighter-than-air ships necessarily leads to but one conclusion. That is, that in order to be successful, this type of ship must meet the demands of commerce with speed in excess of 100 miles per hour. The metal-clad type is eminently suited to fulfill this demand.

Perhaps the supreme advantage of the metal-clad is its ability to develop adequate strength and high speed without any serious loss of efficiency from a pay-load carrying standpoint.

I want to cite some of the numerous advantages which the metal-clad ship enjoys over other types of lighter-than-air craft:

Simplicity of design and construction.
No indeterminate hull stresses.
Fireproofness.
Durability of plating.
Superior gastightness.
Ease of maintenance and inspection of hull.
Rigidity of hull shape at high speeds.
Greater gas volume for the same air displacement.
No moisture absorption.
No loss of speed due to flapping fabric.
Superiority at high speed.
No deterioration under tropical sun.
Ability to increase strength by higher pressure, yet rigid enough to fly with atmospheric pressure.
Wider range of inside pressure variation.
Perfect electric bonding of all structural parts.
Economy in operation.
Weatherproof qualities.
Commercial safety.
Adaptability to outside mooring at terminals.

Of the advantages cited above it appears that the most important to commercial operations are, first, inherent safety and, second, ability to operate continuously at high speeds in the region of 100 miles or more per hour. These advantages are due to—

Improved principles of design.
Choice of materials.
Integrity of hull structure.
Method of operation.

Eminent men the world over have expressed themselves very favorably as regards all metal construction in airships. The performance of the ZMC–2 has furnished proof for the most critical observer. It is interesting to note the expression of Rear Admiral E. J. King. Under date of September 13, 1933, he states:

> The way that ship (ZMC–2) has been performing is rather surprising; little has been found wrong with her. If I had to choose between a sister ship to the Macon and a metal clad, I think I would take the metal clad. We have done all we can with the fabric-covered dirigible.

Admiral King's interview is based on his observation of the performance of the first and only ship of its kind which was completed before the Akron or the Macon was laid down. The ZMC–2 continues to fly long after the tragic loss of these two leviathans of the air, and according to all reports will continue for a long time to come.

Such outstanding world experts as Maj. G. Herbert Scott, of England, Sir Dennistoun Burney, Col. V. C. Richmond, William B. Mayo, and C. F. Kettering, who is director of the International Zeppelin Corporation, are unanimous in the expression that the metal sheeting used in the construction of the ZMC–2 is superior to the fabric-covered ship.

In the opinion of Ralph H. Upson, aeronautical engineer of the University of Michigan, a metal-clad ship of about 3,000,000 cubic feet, which is less than one-half of the 7,400,000 cubic feet of the Akron, would have a performance and general utility for naval purposes in many respects greater than that of the Akron or the Macon.

Dr. William Hovgaard, professor of naval design and construction at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and consulting engineer of the United States Navy, states that the more he studies the metal-clad airship the better he likes it. He states:

> The principal difference between the metal-clad airship and the Zeppelin consists in the fitting of a thin gas-tight metal skin, which is riveted to the structure and which takes the place of the outer cover, the wire and cord netting, the gas-tight fabric, and the diagonal wires in the Zeppelin. The metal plating may be regarded as the principal strength member of the hull, and serves at the same time as a gas container. It excels by its simplicity, its superior strength, and its gas-tightness.
> The metallic skin, in conjunction with the rigid main frames and a high gas pressure, insure a maintenance of form not obtainable in Zeppelins, where the diagonals permit very great shearing deflections. The fact that its high internal pressure can be safely maintained is one of the most important advantages of the metal-clad airship. Associated with a rigid structure, the metal skin places this type of airship in a class by itself, superior in strength and stiffness to all former rigid and nonrigid airships.

Dr. Herbert C. Sadler, dean of engineering, University of Michigan, has this to say:

> It is a matter of common knowledge that a circular-shaped structure with metal disposed on the circumference is the lightest form from the strength point of view, and metal containers for holding gases are by no means new; so the question can be carried a step further from the more theoretical aspect of "Should it be done?" to the form of "Can it be done?"
>
> Here begins the cooperation of the scientist, engineer, and metallurgist in carrying out the necessary designs, investigations, and experimental research work to cover each and all of the details that may be involved in the problem. Today, with the development of such processes, the chances of failure are reduced to a minimum as compared with the rule-of-thumb methods.
>
> The present status of the metal-clad airship is a good illustration of the foregoing. Years of patient research, theoretical investigations, numerous types of design and details were undertaken before the ZMC–2 was built.
> Although the very small size of this vessel introduced additional factors which made the problem more difficult of solution than that of a larger vessel, the result has proved that the fundamental conceptions are sound and that such ships are practicable. The ZMC–2 may therefore be regarded as proof that certain elements on which there might have been some doubts have been dispelled. The strength of the structure, its ability to hold gas, its practicable operation as an aircraft, and, so far as can be seen at present, its durability have been demonstrated.

The next step, namely, the proposal to build a large vessel of a really practical size for useful work in either the military or commercial field, will naturally involve carrying the designs, investigations, and research work to further stages.

While with the ZMC–2 a number of men were willing to spend their time and money on the development of ideas in which they had faith and which subsequent events proved to be correct, it would seem not only proper but almost the duty of the Government of the United States to foster further developments in this new form of transportation.

Dr. Walter Bleistein, consulting aeronautical engineer of Berlin, Germany, has the following to say about the metal-clad airship:

In 1897 David Schwarz built an aluminum-covered airship in Berlin. Its power plant failed on its first test flight and the airship was dismantled by souvenir hunters. Because of the non-availability at that time of suitable sheet metal of a thickness required for the hull plating, airship designers in Germany then turned to the principles of the free balloon, using fabric as a covering.

However, it is most welcome news that the United States Navy ZMC–2 has demonstrated such excellent possibilities for building and operating metal-clad airships. When American experience is available to our German airship works, then we shall once again turn to the building of metal-clad airships.

Expressions of absolute approval of the metal-clad ships have been made by experts and observers the world over, and are too numerous to mention in the short space of time allotted to me.

I have introduced a bill which will serve the Naval Committee as a basis for its consideration, and I hope that within a short time this group of very able and earnest Members will report favorably a bill based upon the advice of experts, so that the Government of the United States can proceed with the construction of a ship of suitable size to bring to America the laurels in the field of lighter-than-air aviation. It is my belief that the advice of C. F. Kettering should be taken into consideration by the committee. He is of the opinion that an all-metal dirigible of 100 tons, or about eight times the ZMC–2, is entirely practical at this time. He contends that the specialists in lighter-than-air research definitely worked out the problem of all-metal airships. He predicts rapid extension of this type of ship in the field of naval, military, and commercial service.

I read for your edification an interesting naval press release, under date of August 19, 1934:

Today marks the fifth anniversary of the launching of the Navy's metal clad ZMC–2 at the Grosse Ile Airport, Detroit, Mich.

During this period of time the ZMC–2 has been almost continuously in operation as a training and experimental ship assigned to the United States Naval Air Station, Lakehurst, N. J. She has flown approximately 50,000 miles during her 1,100 hours in the air.

Built by the Metalclad Airship Corporation of Detroit, Mich., the ZMC–2 is the first successful airship with the hull, including the hull covering itself, built entirely of metal.

In 1922 a group of Detroit men identified principally with the automotive industry turned their attention toward the possibility of constructing airships with all-metal hulls, a step that seemed obviously desirable. Considerable experimentation and research were carried on, and 4 years later Congress was asked for an appropriation, later granted, to defray the cost of building a small experimental unit. Many new problems arose during the actual construction of the ZMC–2, but they were successfully solved by the engineering staff of the builders with the support and encouragement of the Navy Department's own engineers.

At that time a great deal of skepticism prevailed as to the success of the venture. Gas tightness of seams and durability of the very thin metal required for the hull covering were moot questions.

"Alclad", a strong aluminum alloy, now in general use in all types of aircraft construction, was employed commercially for the first a time in the building of the ZMC–2.

The Federal Government at the present time is working diligently on a plan to expend $4,800,000,000 to break the back of the depression. Here, in my estimation, is an opportunity for the Federal Government to undertake the construction of one or more metal-clad airships. Experts for this type of construction could be gainfully employed for the period of the next 2 years, and in a sense this assembly of pioneer builders would be a valuable reserve of the armed forces of this country.

In conclusion let me state that the Metalclad Airship Corporation was so firmly convinced that the tin blimp would fly that they agreed to build the first ship for the Navy at a cost of $300,000. The actual cost of the completed ship, however, was more than $750,000. The total development and research work plus the cost of the ship was upward of a million and a quarter.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes.

Mrs. KAHN. How many ships of that type has the Navy in use now?

Mr. DINGELL. Only one, the ZMC–2, the original and only ship of its kind in the world.

Mrs. KAHN. I had an idea that there were at least two.

Mr. DINGELL. No; only one. We should build one at least 10 to 15 times as large, because the ZMC–2 is only of 200,000 cubic feet capacity. The ship should be of somewhere near 3,000,000 cubic feet capacity to be of proper experimental size. The Macon was, as you will remember, of 7,400,000 cubic feet capacity.

Mrs. KAHN. I remember at one time there was a bill before the Committee on Military Affairs for its consideration to authorize an appropriation to build one for the use of the Army. I do not remember just how far that proceeded, but I know the Navy had one, and I thought it had two.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] has expired.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested here during the debates on this bill making appropriations for a Navy Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, that there will not be a record vote of this House upon this bill. Anticipating that such may be the case, it is therefore necessary to take this means to register my views in regard to this bill.

There are some things in relation to the Government of this country that I understand, and there are some things in regard to the operation of the Government that I do not understand. I understand that according to article 1, section 1 of the Constitution of the United States all legislative powers therein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives, and therefore it is not only the duty of Congress to pass the necessary legislation in connection with the operation of this Government, but the responsibility for such legislation that is passed rests upon this same body. I further understand that according to section 8 of article 1 that Congress shall have power to provide and maintain a navy, and therefore, according to my understanding, it is the duty and obligation of Congress to provide and maintain an adequate Navy; and that, of course, would include the providing of sufficient appropriations for such purpose.

We are all familiar with the age-old proverb, as old as the human race, namely, "Consistency, thou art a jewel"; and it seems to me if this proverb was ever true it is more true today than ever before. Now, the things that I cannot understand are, in view of the recent statement of Mr. Morgenthau, the Secretary of the Treasury, and others, declaring that the credit of the United States would be periled by the payment of what is commonly known as the "soldiers' bonus", which would amount, if paid out in cash by the Treasury of the United States at this time, to a little better than $2,000,000,000; in view of the representations made to us when the old-age pension bill, known as the "social security bill", was considered by Congress last week, that to adopt any other plan, other than the plan presented appropriating $49,750,000 for old-age pensions, would become extremely burdensome in future years; and in view of the fact that the second bill passed by the Seventy-third Congress was what was known as the "economy bill", and in regard to which I might say I cast the only vote from Kansas in the House against such bill, and Senator McGILL the only vote from Kansas in the Senate against this bill, and all pay cuts provided therein having now been restored, and practically every other economy eliminated except the cuts made in reference to our veterans, now leaving all the economy in this bill resting upon them practically alone, and whereas there was introduced in the Senate last week a bill known as the "Harrison bill", which was introduced, as I understand it, as a compromise bonus bill, which, I understand, specifically provides that it would be in lieu of all future pensions due to the World War veterans, notwithstanding the fact when the adjusted-service certificate was given the veteran by the Government it was generally understood that it was in lieu of back pay, notwithstanding the fact that this country has always provided pensions for those who served their country, and in view of such fact such provision would be an insult and a slur at the veterans; and whereas this Government has spent over $13,000,000,000 on our armies and navies, all of which has been called "preparedness", from 1920 to and including 1935; and whereas in addition to all this thirteen billions heretofore provided for preparedness this session of Congress is appropriating over $1,000,000,000 for such purpose; therefore, to sum up, I cannot understand how this country could have spent over $13,000,000,000 from 1920 to and including 1935 on preparedness and are appropriating over a billion dollars in this bill without the credit of the United States being periled thereby, but to restore to the veterans what was taken away from them in the economy act to pay the soldiers' bonus, and which, by the way, if paid by the bill passed by the House, known as "H. R. 1", or the "Patman bill", would not cost the Government anything but will save it a considerable sum in addition to helping business in general——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARPENTER] has expired.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CARPENTER. How the appropriation of a larger amount for old-age pensions, which would give the old people a more generous pension in keeping with what they have been led to expect, would imperil the credit of this country and bankrupt it, as we have been told from time to time—

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order. The gentleman is not speaking to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Chairman, I understand I can speak on anything involved in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. CARPENTER. In other words if we can spend all these billions of dollars for warfare when we have no war, a great percentage of which is a total waste, then to be consistent it seems to me that we could pay the soldiers' bonus, if that was desired, in actual cash, whereas, as a matter of fact that is not necessary as is provided in the Patman bill and provide a greater and more generous old-age pension.

While I appreciate it is natural for Members of Congress to support projects that involve their districts, in connection with our military preparedness, I have done and would do the same thing, for I realize they are desirous of obtaining such projects because of the amount of work that will be provided by the same, and that is about all the consolation we can get out of such appropriations that they will provide some small measure of work and relief in our various districts.

What is the necessity for having such a large Navy anyway? We have no foreign possessions to protect that require such a large Navy, especially when we have given up the Philippines. We have no foreign trade left to protect. Public opinion in this country is unalterably opposed to our participating in any foreign war, and such sentiment has been recently included in a bill, the McSwain bill, which passed the House a few days ago, prohibiting this country from sending its armed forces upon foreign soil, except only as may be necessary to prevent or repel actual invasion of this country. Therefore, I can see no other reason or necessity for such a large Navy, except just to see it pass in review.

It has always generally been the result that whenever any country created large military forces and a large navy that it invariably ended up in a war. We cannot have these large military forces and wars without veterans of wars. Instead of looking to create veterans of future wars, we should be more interested in looking after the veterans of our past wars; and I say here again, as I said when the economy bill was discussed before this body, "May God forbid that the veteran is to become the 'forgotten man' and the real governmental economy that was promised be lost sight of."

In addition thereto, every cent of money that we spend upon preparedness that is not necessary makes it just that much more impossible to ever collect the war debt that the European countries already owe us, for the reason that every time we unnecessarily increase our military activities that causes them to do likewise and to spend money on armies and navies instead of paying their just debts to us.

Now, while I would be willing to vote for the necessary appropriations for our national defense, if it is so necessary that we have economy—and I believe it is—I could not vote for the appropriation provided in this and like bills, and therefore I wish as completely as I can to register my vote against this bill containing the amount of appropriations that it does. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, at this time when we are considering the largest Navy appropriation that has ever been presented in peace times to the Congress of the United States, it is well worth while to see how the other nations are looking at this gesture.

In this morning's Washington Post there appears a news item by the United Press, which reads as follows:

JAPANESE FLAY UNITED STATES MOCK WAR AS AGGRESSION—ARTICLE CITES "EVIDENCE" OF WIDE PROGRAM FOR DRIVE ON FAR EAST

TOKYO, April 26.—Pending maneuvers of the United States fleet are aimed at Japan's mandated islands in the Pacific and form part of a program for a campaign against the Far East, the newspaper Nichi Nichi charged today in a sensational article credited to the Japanese Navy's interpretation of Washington's naval attitude.

"The maneuvers constitute training for crossing the Pacific", the article said.

"In establishing submarine and air bases in the Aleutian Islands and practicing defense and attack, America aims at a campaign plan against the mandated islands in the South Seas, thus swinging the position of their objective 90 degrees from south to north.

"The United States is undertaking a trans-Pacific air route under the pretext of civil aviation. The airways bears a great strategic significance, exposing to the whole world their aggressive naval plans against the Far East.

"In recalling the flagship Augusta and including it in the circular formation, the United States Navy was dictated to by a real need for it."

The Augusta, heavy cruiser, which has been flagship of the Asiatic Fleet, has been ordered to participate in the maneuvers and will be replaced as flagship by the light cruiser Omaha in the fall.

The Nichi Nichi article continued:

"In appropriating $300,000 for Pearl Harbor repairs, America seeks to strengthen her post as an important base for an advance across the Pacific. America's planned construction of 555 naval planes and increasing of officers to 8,176 are all part of her preparations for a far-eastern campaign.

"Reduction of the naval construction budget in Congress does not necessarily constitute reduction of her naval program, but is a reflection of opinion at home for emphasis on disarmament and can well be counterbalanced by its revival next year or another appropriate measure to fulfill the original plan.

"The American Navy is maintaining world naval supremacy by carrying out trans-Pacific naval operations despite the fact that a disarmament conference looms."

Nichi Nichi credited the Foreign Office with the viewpoint that "a note of despair reportedly struck in American official circles over the disarmament conference is regarded at the Foreign Office as propaganda started by the American Navy, aimed at making their claim on the budget effective." The article concluded:

"Officials in the Foreign Office are entertaining a disagreeable feeling regarding America's aggressive naval maneuvers, but Japan is withholding expression of her attitude for the conference pending British initiative. Japan, however, absolutely opposes postponement on such a vague pretext as the European situation."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LUCKEY] has expired.

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 29 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. BELL. I offer an amendment which is at the desk, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BELL: Page 29, line 22, after the semicolon, insert "and one midshipman from each of the military schools to be chosen as follows to-wit: the Secretary of the Navy may approve a list known as honor schools in a number not exceeding 25."

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is legislative matter attempting to be placed in an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL] whether or not there is any authorization in law for such an appropriation?

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, on line 14, page 29, there starts a limitation to the general terms of the bill. It reads:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the pay of any midshipman whose admission subsequent to January 30, 1935, would result in exceeding at any time the allowance of four midshipmen by each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress—

And so on. In other words, that is a limitation. The amendment which I propose is a perfecting amendment to that limitation. It is not legislative in its character.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again ask the gentleman if he has any knowledge of any authorization in law which will permit of such appropriation, aside from what he has read, which, as the Chair understands, is covered by existing law?

Mr. BELL. This amendment does not seek an appropriation. It is simply placing an additional limitation among the limitations which start with line 14 and end at the bottom of the page.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCCORMACK). The Chair is prepared to rule. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL] is legislation on an appropriation bill. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLOTHING, NAVAL RESERVE

The clothing and small-stores fund shall be charged with the value of all issues of clothing and small stores made to aviation cadets and enlisted men of the Naval Reserve and the uniform gratuity paid to officers of the Naval Reserve.

Mr. BIERMANN. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, on several occasions the opponents of this bill have asked its advocates to tell us against whom we are preparing and for what this huge expenditure is intended. Up to this time they have not told us. I renew the request, but I have no idea they will tell us during the remainder of this debate.

Mr. CARY. Will the gentleman suffer an interruption?

Mr. BIERMANN. Certainly.

Mr. CARY. The gentleman has repeatedly asked the House to tell him against what nation we are preparing this Navy. When the Constitution of the United States provided that we have a Navy, will the gentleman tell the House against what country the framers of the Constitution expected that Navy to be used?

Mr. BIERMANN. If the time ever arrives when the Constitution of the United States is a subject for legislation before this body, I will give my opinion on that subject. At the present time we are considering the naval appropriation bill. A recent Associated Press report states that the House of Commons recently passed an appropriation of $300,000,000 for the Navy of Great Britain. Surely all the Members of this House will agree that Great Britain has more reason to have a large navy than the United States of America, yet we are asked to appropriate $457,000,000 for our Navy. This money is not coming out of the air. I hope it is not coming out of printing-press money. It is coming out of the taxpayers of the United States.

We have heard during this discussion some reference to other purposes to which this money could be devoted. In the United States there are 123 colleges and universities that have endowments in excess of $2,000,000. Some of those institutions are 100, 200, and one of them is nearly 300 years old. The total endowments of all those institutions is approximately $1,199,000,000.

If we subtract from that sum the endowment of Harvard University, we shall arrive at a figure that is less than twice what it will cost to maintain this Navy for 1 year. In other words, when our Navy reaches treaty strength, according to the testimony of Admiral Standley, it is going to cost us $555,000,000 a year to maintain it. Stated in another way, we are going to pay every 2 years to support this "treaty strength" Navy as much money as is represented by the endowments of all the colleges and universities in the United States, except Harvard, that have as much endowment as $2,000,000 each. In my district there are several small colleges—Luther College, Lenox College, and Upper Iowa University—all of which have done great work in educational fields. One of the graduates of Luther College just passed up this aisle, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE]. Any one of these colleges would be delighted with an endowment of $500,000.

To maintain this Navy at treaty strength for 1 year we are going to spend as much money as it would take to endow for all time 1,110 colleges such as Luther, Upper Iowa, and Lenox, in the Fourth District of Iowa.

We have been talking considerably about good roads in this country, and we have appropriated a lot of money for roads. In the State of Iowa we think we have good roads; they are 18 feet wide, as a rule, and of concrete, and cost about $20,000 a mile at the present time. I just made a calculation to the effect that this money we are going to spend for the maintenance of our Navy would build nine paved highways from Washington City to San Francisco, Calif.

I want the Members to take these figures into consideration before they vote for this bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I really rose at this time to ask the gentleman from Nebraska if he is going to take the expression of a jingo Japanese press as the real idea of what the Navy Department of the United States is doing or what our naval policy is. I wonder if the gentleman realized when he read the article stating that Japan was protesting against the establishment of a commercial aviation line by the United States, just exactly what Japan herself is doing along the line of establishing commercial aviation lines? I would like to quote from one of the newspapers published in Washington, the Times, on April 23 regarding the establishment of commercial aviation lines by the Japanese Government. There is no one who does not realize that in case of trouble, whether it be between Japan and the United States, England, France, or some other nation, our commercial aviation lines are going to be one of our chief lines of defense.

The article reads as follows:

Japan has not waited until the eleventh hour to project an intensive development of commercial aviation in the vast area of the Pacific.

Before the American Congress even considered authorizing the negotiation of an air-mail contract for a 4-day air mail service between San Francisco and Manila, beginning with an overnight mail service between the American mainland and its main outpost of defense in the Pacific—the Hawaiian Islands—Japan's aviation program in the Pacific had been formulated and approved by the Government and announced to the Japanese people.

In the Japanese program the first part consists of the following specific projects for the development of commercial aviation in the Pacific:

JAPAN'S PROGRAM

First. A regular air mail service between Japan and Formosa—just across from the Philippine Islands. Test flights have already been made over this stretch from Japan proper toward the Philippines. These tests are said to have been highly successful. It is expected that the service will soon be inaugurated with a flight each way every week.

Second. A new air mail service between Japan proper and Korea. The terminals of this new air line will be Tokyo or Osaka, in Japan, and Tanan, in northern Korea.

The great advantage of this line will lie in the fact that it will result in a great saving in time between Tokyo, the capital city of Japan, and Tsinking, the capital city of Manchukuo, Japan's new "ally," and completely docile "neighbor"—theoretically an independent state, actually, according to the world point of view, a Japanese dependency.

Third. An air mail service between Tokyo and Parao, the administrative center of the mandated islands in the Pacific. To the United States was ceded by Germany a one-fifth share in the sovereignty of these islands, but their administration has been mandated by the League to Japan. This is not necessarily a permanent mandate.

The approval of the United States to the continuance of this mandate by Japan is necessary. The route from Japan for the projected air line to the islands would run via the Bonin Islands, concerning the fortifications of which there has long been much speculation.

Fourth. An air mail service between Tokyo and Sapporo, with stops planned at Sendai and Aomori.

Fifth. An air mail service between Tokyo and Kochi or Shikoku.

Sixth. An air mail service between Osaka and Matsue, Shimane Prefecture, on the Japan Sea.

Seventh. An air mail service between Osaka and Nagano, by way of Toyama on the Japan Sea.

Eighth. An air mail service between Tokyo and Niigata on the Japan Sea by way of Nagano. This would presumably supplant the summer service already provided by the Asahi Air Service Association.

What the Japanese are doing to develop commercial aviation in the vast area of the Pacific is in line with what the other great powers are also doing to the same end.

The British have an air line operating between the British Isles and Australia. Soon they propose to provide a connecting link with Hong Kong.

The Dutch are operating an air line from Amsterdam to Java and are projecting a link with Canton, China.

OVERNIGHT SERVICE

The French intend to provide a connecting link with Canton for their air line in operation between France and Indo-China.

If the present Congress gives its support to American aviation in the Pacific, there will before long be an overnight air mail service between San Francisco and Honolulu and later a 4-day daylight air service between there and Manila.

This is why a $2,000,000 appropriation has been requested to enable the Federal Government to contract for air mail across the Pacific as soon as the Pan American trans-Pacific line begins to operate. The pioneer in this new conquest of the air, the Pan American Clipper, which has just completed its initial overnight flight between the American mainland and Hawaii, has blazed a new trail for all American commerce with the Far East.

With Japan surrounding the entire western Pacific area with air lines we certainly cannot take seriously the objection of Japan to the establishment of an all-American air line across the Pacific. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS

AVIATION, NAVY

For aviation, as follows: For navigational, photographic, aerological, radio, and miscellaneous equipment, including repairs thereto, for use with aircraft built or building on June 30, 1935, $498,200; for maintenance, repair, and operation of aircraft factory, air stations, fleet air bases, fleet and all other aviation activities, accident prevention, testing laboratories, for overhauling of planes, and for the purchase for aviation purposes only of special clothing, wearing apparel, and special equipment, $10,755,150, including $120,000 for the equipment of vessels with catapults and including not to exceed $10,000 for the procurement of helium, which sum of $10,000 shall be transferred to and made available to the Bureau of Mines on July 1, 1935, and the Bureau may lease, after competition, surplus metal cylinders acquired for use as helium containers; for continuing experiments and development work on all types of aircraft, including the payment of part-time or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia or elsewhere of such scientists and technicists as may be contracted for by the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, at a rate of pay not exceeding $20 per diem for any person so employed, $2,498,000; for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, spare parts and accessories, $26,770,000, of which amount not to exceed $8,500,000 shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred under the contract authorizations carried in the Navy Appropriation Acts for the fiscal years 1934 and 1935, and $17,475,000 shall remain available until June 30, 1937; in all, $40,521,350; and the money herein specifically appropriated for "aviation" shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law and shall constitute one fund: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $1,505,000: Provided further, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated, the Secretary of the Navy may, prior to July 1, 1937, enter into contracts for the production and purchase of new airplanes and their equipment, spare parts, and accessories, to an amount not in excess of $5,000,000: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, upon the request of the Secretary of the Navy, to transfer not to exceed in the aggregate $24,000 from this appropriation to the appropriations "Pay, subsistence, and transportation, Navy", and "Pay, Marine Corps" to cover authorized traveling expenses of officers and enlisted men in connection with flying new airplanes from contractor's works to assigned station or ship, including travel to contractor's works and return of personnel to stations of duty, and the amount so transferred shall be in addition to any limitations contained in the appropriations "Pay, subsistence, and transportation, Navy", and "Pay, Marine Corps": Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for maintenance of more than six heavier-than-air stations on the coast of the continental United States: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the construction of a factory for the manufacture of airplanes: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay out of this appropriation the amounts due on claims for damages which have occurred or may occur to private property growing out of the operations of naval aircraft where such claim does not exceed the sum of $500.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES: On page 40, line 7, before the word "and", insert the following: "in addition to which sum the Bureau of Mines may use for helium-plant operation in the fiscal year 1936 the unexpended balance of the funds transferred to it for such operation in the fiscal year 1935."

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I agree to the amendment; it ought to be in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay and allowances of the Marine Corps Reserve (a) excluding transferred and assigned men, $499,690; (b) transferred men, $376,612; in all, $876,302.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, line 6, strike out the sign and figures "$499,690" and insert in lieu thereof "$518,690"; and on page 44, line 7, strike out the sign and figures "$876,302", which is a total, and insert in lieu thereof "$895,302."

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, in the bill as reported provision is made for securing 25 Marine Corps Reserve aviators out of the flying school at Pensacola, at a total cost of $189,203. Since the bill has been reported it has been suggested to us that we provide instead for 25 aviation cadets, authorized by a bill approved the 15th of this month. At first blush I was opposed to the change, but the Marine Corps unquestionably is short of officer pilots and to meet that shortage would use Reserve officers on extended active-duty details. A Reserve officer costs more than an aviation cadet, so, looking ahead, I can see in the change a real saving. The difference approximates $660 per annum in favor of the aviation cadet.

Apart from expense, morale at the flying school should have consideration. The student officer pilot takes his training as an enlisted man and the aviation cadet would be looked upon as a junior officer. There would be a difference in pay, a difference in rank, and of necessity a difference in the standard of living.

Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASE IN THE NAVY

Construction and machinery: On account of hulls and outfits of vessels and machinery of vessels heretofore authorized, including (1) the expenses in connection with continuing the construction of 14 destroyers and 6 submarines which were commenced in the fiscal year 1935 under funds made available from the "Emergency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935" and (2) for the commencement of 2 cruisers or subcategory (b) authorized by the act approved February 13, 1929 (45 Stat. 1165), and 1 aircraft carrier, 15 destroyers, and 6 submarines authorized by the act approved March 27, 1934 (48 Stat., pp. 503–505), $88,310,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of the amount available for expenditure under the head of "Construction and machinery" for the fiscal year 1936 for employees in the field service assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $1,000,000: Provided, That of the appropriations contained in this act under the head of "Increase of the Navy", there shall be available such sums as the Secretary of the Navy may from time to time determine to be necessary for the engagement of technical services, and the employment of personnel in the Navy Department and in the field, the purchase of plans, drafting, and other supplies, and the expenses of printing and travel, in addition to those otherwise provided for, owing to the construction of vessels heretofore authorized and herein or heretofore appropriated for in part: Provided further, That the appropriation limitation on expenditures, including armor and armament, on vessels authorized on or prior to February 13, 1929, is hereby waived.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KOPPLEMANN: Page 48, line 21, after the word "expended", insert "and no part of any approriation contained in this act shall be available for the construction embraced by clause (2) prior to March 1, 1936."

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, my amendment will in no sense destroy or change the purposes of the bill. The amendment is in line with a policy of this country that we do not increase our Navy any more than do those governments with which we have consulted and made definite agreements as to increase or decrease in the navies of the country which are parties to the agreement.

There will be a conference of these nations which ought and which I hope will come to an agreement before March 1, 1936. So that the money of the people of this country will not be uselessly spent, my amendment provides that the appropriation in this bill shall be available for construction after March 1, 1936. Surely, if this bill is passed today, and the body at the other end of the Capitol should pass it within a reasonable time, and the President should sign it, the time that will be consumed in the planning of these ships will take up to March 1, 1936, and there can be no harm in making certain that unnecessary expenditures of the people's money is made.

Back in 1921, just prior to the conference of 1922, America spent a great many millions of dollars on ships, which were afterwards scrapped. The disarmament conference of 1922 proved the necessity of my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am further moved by the appeal which is carried in my amendment, because when the naval conference of 1935 convenes we ought to go into that conference with clean hands. We ought to go into that conference in the spirit of the good-neighbor policy. If we go before that conference with a big stick of a greatly increased Navy, should not we then create a spirit of antagonism amongst those with whom we are to confer? But if, on the other hand, we go into that conference as is indicated by my amendment, that we are holding up our program for an increased Navy, with the definite hope that the conference will prove a success and therefore we will not at this time definitely place ourselves in the position where we must increase our Navy, we not alone prove to the other nations of the world that we mean to be good neighbors but that we also prove to them that by our act we are good neighbors; that we mean that we are not having a great Navy, and that we hope for a reduction in the other navies of the world and not for more ships, and so prove ourselves honest in our endeavors for real and lasting peace. [Applause.]

As I understand it the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee had in effect in the bill they reported to the full committee, that which is carried in my amendment but for some reason the soundness of which I cannot comprehend, and which I believe was a great error, the full committee struck out the provision that the appropriation should not be made available for construction until March 1, 1936. On page 3, I read in the report on this bill a most significant and important paragraph which I am calling to the attention of this House.

Mr. Chairman, I am reading now from the report on this bill.

"To create, maintain, and operate a Navy second to none and in conformity with treaty provisions," the fact remains that the present and ultimate annual cost must be disturbing to us and must be equally disquieting to other "treaty navy" powers. It would seem that continued limitation and some contraction of tonnages now permitted must be the wish of all educated, unselfish people the world over. Another conference will be held during the present calendar year. The committee's proposal to halve the estimate for additional new construction is offered with the thought that the administration might wish to defer the commencement of such construction until that conference shall have been concluded.

Those are the words of my amendment.

Such a course should be interpreted as an expression of our faith and confidence that the principle of limitation will survive and that out of such conference a new and better accord will be born. Holding up construction on the eve of another conference would be tangible proof of our wish and hope and faith that limitation will be continued and in some respects curtailed. Possibly, and perhaps very probably, a new agreement would not dispel the need to proceed with most if not all of the new construction the commencement of which it is proposed to defer, but there would appear to be no hazard in the delay and the course our action contemplates should challenge in a most effective way the attention of the peoples of those nations parties to the present naval limitation agreements and to the consequences if limitation be abandoned or even continued as now provided.

Mr. Chairman, I have just read from the report of the committee, which indicates that the committee is favorable to my amendment. I cannot understand why anyone should oppose this amendment. It is not comprehensible to me that any member of the committee or the "big stick" Naval Committee should oppose a reasonable waiting attitude.

The purpose of my amendment is that our country may be able to go before the nations of the world with clean hands. We are about to enter into a naval disarmament conference. How can we present an honest and sincere argument for disarmament and reduction of the navies of the world when we by our definite action of this Congress on the eve of the naval parley authorize untold millions of dollars more than ever before in the history of our country during peace times for an increased Navy?

In the light of the statement made by President Roosevelt in his message to Congress on January 4, 1935, in which he declared that "the people of most nations seek relief from the threat and the burden attaching to the false theory that extravagant armament cannot be reduced and limited by international accord."

Without my amendment as part of this bill I am very much afraid that the other nations which will be at this conference will look at us in wonderment at our duplicity and falseness to the principles laid down by the President of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, we must not, we dare not, pass this bill without my amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KOPPLEMANN) there were—ayes 17, noes 78.

So the amendment was rejected.

(Mr. KOPPLEMANN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: Page 48, beginning in line 9, strike out the paragraph ending on page 49, line 17.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offered this motion to strike out the paragraph which provides additional funds for construction and machinery and which also provides specifically for the construction of additional ships, cruisers, submarines, and various other types of naval ships.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me in these troubled days it is inadvisable for the United States to engage in a program to increase naval armament. We have heard a good deal of talk within the last few months about the possibilities of war, but I, for one, do not feel that there is any danger of this country becoming involved in a war unless we submit a challenge to the rest of the world or continue our ill-advised policy of increasing our armaments, and thereby challenge the world by serving notice on other nations that we are preparing ourselves for armed conflict.

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MAAS. We tried disarmament by example. Does the gentleman think it was a success?

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not say that our Navy is inferior to the other navies of the world. There has been a tendency during the past several years and since the World War to reduce armaments. We have taken the lead in this respect. We have advocated that other nations reduce their armament. We have reduced ours. I do not think that we are in the position now of not being able to defend ourselves from any nation in the entire world. As a matter of fact, the Navy is not necessary in a defensive war.

We talk about our Navy being the first line of defense. I ask any Member of the House whether or not he can recall a single instance in modern history when this or any nation have landed troops on enemy soil. I know of none. I believe history will bear out the fact that troops are not landed on enemy soil by the navy. We should prepare to fight defensive wars only. If we do that, we will not have to worry about the superiority of anybody else's navy.

Mr. MAAS. May I ask the gentleman how the Japanese got over to China? Did they walk over?

Mr. BOILEAU. They did not land in Chinese territory.

Mr. MAAS. Yes they did.

Mr. BOILEAU. They did not land in China at all.

Mr. MAAS. In the case of our own country, they might land in Mexico and walk in.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am not afraid of enemy troops landing in Mexico, Canada, or any place else.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How about airplanes being carried over on battleships of other governments?

Mr. BOILEAU. By building up our Air Corps and our defensive armaments we can protect ourselves against any such possibilities.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How would the gentleman prevent those airplanes from landing in this country?

Mr. BOILEAU. If we are fearful of an attack from the air, then let us build up our air defense and not our naval defense.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How would the gentleman prevent airplane carriers carrying airplanes over here and then having the planes take the air about 100 miles out and landing?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I say to the gentleman from New York that if we are worried about airplanes landing over here, let us build up our air force and forget about the Navy, because the Navy cannot protect us from an air attack. What did the Navy do in the last war? Did we participate in any important or decisive naval battles during the last war?

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. For the gentleman's information, I may say that you can get from 500 to 1,000 airplanes for the cost of one battleship.

Mr. BOILEAU. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MAVERICK. Does not the gentleman think that would be a better investment than one battleship?

Mr. BOILEAU. A great deal better.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Is it not a fact that during the World War our Navy convoyed our troops to Europe in 1917 and 1918?

Mr. BOILEAU. I was just waiting for some gentleman to make that statement. I knew somebody would make that statement because it is the only justification for a Navy—to escort convoys—and when our Navy escorts convoys that means we are fighting a foreign war and not a defensive war. [Applause.] That is the only justification for a Navy. The only justification in the world for a large Navy is that it gives us an opportunity to fight a war of aggression rather than a defensive war. This is why I say we should rely on our air forces from the standpoint of defense and not build up a huge Navy for aggression. I shall not vote for this bill, which increases the appropriations for naval construction, because it is a threat to the peace of the entire world, because it has only one purpose, and that is to make it possible for us to fight a foreign war and to assist our armed forces in a foreign war rather than in a domestic war.

During the World War the Navy did not accomplish anything except, as the gentleman from New Jersey has suggested, it gave protection to our troops going across the ocean on transports, or, at least, I presume it did. I recall that when I went overseas we saw a battleship as we left New York Harbor and we saw a battleship again when we got over to England. In the meantime we did not see it.

I suppose it was somewhere around there, and I presume it gave us some protection. I am not denying this; but we did not see it and were not sure that there was a battleship around to give us protection in case we needed it. However, we were told it was there; and when you are in the service, of course, you accept everything they tell you as gospel truth. I assume they were at hand ready to give us protection if we needed it.

However, I want to emphasize the fact that in my humble opinion the Navy is absolutely useless except for foreign wars and wars of aggression—in such wars they are of value. Someone might say that we have to have this huge Navy to protect the Philippine Islands and Hawaii. So far as the Philippines are concerned, they have shown quite conclusively they do not want our protection. They have shown conclusively that they want their independence, and we have voted to give them their independence, and I cannot see any justification for voting these huge sums of money to build up a Navy to protect the Philippine Islands. They are not in need of our protection, and they do not seem to want our protection. So far as Hawaii is concerned, I know of no country that is going over there and try to take Hawaii. I do not think it would be possible for any nation to do so; but if we are going to protect Hawaii against the possibility of some other country grabbing it, we should build up our armaments over there, fortify the islands, and do some further work along the line of defense. Personally, I believe the Hawaiian Islands are amply protected right now, because the Eleventh Field Artillery is stationed in the Hawaiian Islands. My opinion of the fighting qualities of the Eleventh Field Artillery may be somewhat partial because I happened to belong to that regiment during the World War.

Mr. MAAS. How about the marines?

Mr. BOILEAU. I did not happen to belong to the marines during the war, so I claim the Eleventh Field Artillery won the war.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Is it not a fact that in time of warfare on the sea, the maintenance of means of communication between ships is almost impossible and that ships have been known to fire upon one another when they were on the same side?

Mr. BOILEAU. I think the gentleman is absolutely correct in that respect. I do not think they have developed the radio to the point where they can use it between ships with any degree of satisfaction. If they have developed it to the point where it can be used successfully in communicating with the various ships, I am quite sure that the other countries have not been asleep in this respect and that they have been able to develop a defense against such communications by creating a method to provide so much interference that such a means of communication would be useless especially while engaged in battle. The old wig-wag system is useless now because they have to make a smoke screen to protect the ships from air attacks. [Applause.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, although I cannot believe it will be seriously entertained.

We have a great many ships now under construction and if this money is not provided, it means doing the very thing that some Members on the floor of the House have been complaining about today, and that is, the scrapping of a lot of ships upon which construction already had been started.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARY. I yield.

Mr. McLEOD. Is it not a fact that the money provided in this bill under increase of the Navy, is not for additional ships, but for the replacement of ships?

Mr. CARY. Every bit of it is for replacement.

Mr. McLEOD. With no increase in the size of the Navy?

Mr. CARY. None at all.

Mr. McLEOD. But it means the replacing of obsolete ships.

Mr. CARY. That is it. We have much tonnage that is now overage and all of this program is intended partly to bring such tonnage underage.

Mr. McLEOD. Is it not also the fact that we are not building a war-strength navy, but we are building a peace-time strength, adequate navy?

Mr. CARY. That is what we are doing, we are building to a treaty-strength navy. We have started the program, and if you agree to this amendment it would interrupt the continuity of that program. We would not only interrupt it but close down the shipyards, both public and private, all over the country and add materially to the unemployment today and for months to come.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Will the gentleman yield? Would it not be better to take the money and use it for unemployment than to build ships of war? [Applause.]

Mr. CARY. It is being used for unemployment in building ships of war. I think we are committed to this program and we ought to stand up for it. The Government is committed to it, this Congress is committed to it, and if this amendment be agreed to it will about absolutely destroy the whole program.

Mr. BOILEAU. The purpose of this is to increase the strength of the Navy.

Mr. CARY. It is to build up to treaty strength.

Mr. BOILEAU. But it increases the strength of the Navy.

Mr. CARY. Certainly. The gentleman from Wisconsin is in favor of aircraft. If your amendment should be adopted, it would mean striking out money for building aircraft carriers that would be employed to protect the country.

Mr. BOILEAU. The aircraft carriers are part of the machinery of war on the high seas. What good is an aircraft carrier a hundred miles away for the purpose of protecting our country?

Mr. CARY. It would be of very great value in intercepting and attacking enemy aircraft.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KENNEY. My parliamentary inquiry is, Has all debate on this paragraph been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on the amendment has been exhausted. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were 20 ayes and 92 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriations made in this act for the purchase or manufacture of equipment or material or of a particular class of equipment or material shall be available for the purchase of letters patent, applications for letters patent, licenses under letters patent, and applications for letters patent that pertain to such equipment or material for which the appropriations are made.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, the organization for the expenditure of the $4,880,000,000 appropriation for the re-employment of those unemployed and on relief and for the alleviation of distress brought about by the depression has been announced and is being carried forward. Many thousands of people will be employed to administer the expenditure of this money. The newspapers this week have spoken of the embarrassment that may be created by lack of housing facilities for the many thousands of employees who are coming to Washington. In every State and locality in the Union there will be employed thousands and thousands of people in clerical and supervisory and other capacities to take care of the expenditure of this money. It is of interest to those who desire such employment and are qualified and fitted for it to know how the choice is to be made. In that connection, I have before me a letter written to an applicant for supervisory work in one of these alphabetical agencies, which indicates the general system to be employed in building up the organizations both here in Washington and throughout the land to do this work and to spend this money, to supervise and come in contact with those who are relieved. This letter is written by an official in the Emergency Civil Works to an applicant from New Jersey for supervisory work in the C. C. C. Division of the Emergency Civil Works. He says in the letter they do not consider anyone—

Unless his name is certified to us on the so-called "advisers' list" from Washington. This is a list of names submitted by Senator MOORE—

And this is a letter written to a Jersey man—

Submitted by Senator MOORE and the Democratic Representatives in Congress from New Jersey to the Federal administration for employment in this C. C. C. activity. The only way in which you can put yourself in a position to secure such employment—

And that goes for all emergency agencies—

therefore, is by making arrangements to have Senator MOORE or one of the Democratic Congressmen request that your name be put on this "advisers' list."

Mr. Chairman, the organization for the 1936 election, which is to be financed by the $4,880,000,000, is being set up. The key men are certified from the Democratic lists. They will have the spending of the money and the employment of those men on relief, and they will tell them, as they did in 1932, "Unless you vote the Democratic ticket, this money will cease."

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment, and ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I made an effort to get the floor for a few minutes, merely to propound a question to our friend the eloquent statesman from Ohio, Mr. TRUAX. He declined to yield. He had previously declined to yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]. Of course, having declined to yield to her, it was presumptuous for me to have any hope of getting consent from him to reply to my interrogatory. The singular circumstance happened to be that while he refused two Republican Members to be interrogated, he was talking on Republican time. At the close of the session, when I wanted 5 minutes I could not get it. So we have paradoxes and travesties of all kinds, even in a great body of men like this. I cannot understand my friend from Ohio, Mr. TRUAX. He should have been more friendly than that, particularly, I think, when I realize his mastery of the history of this country and of all countries, and that there came to his section of Ohio in the early days that noble Indian fighter, Mad Anthony Wayne, who went right down there to Fallen Timbers, in the Miami Valley, where, I understand, my friend lives, to save people from the red man. Our fighting friend, George Washington, sent him there. The gentleman had evidently forgotten about him. He wanted to talk, and you know what was said of a man who made an application to the British Parliament for a place, the man having nothing else to recommend him, his sponsor said, "Does he not have a voice?"

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio has more than a voice. Gentlemen would have been rid of me yesterday if it had not been for my friend TRUAX refusing to answer a little question which I wanted to put to him when he was talking about our friend Father Coughlin, and incorporating in the RECORD a speech by the Father. What was the need of putting that in, when all he said is in both the Democratic and Republican platforms of 2 years ago.

So there was no need to encumber the RECORD. These declarations of principles and promises are easy to make. They may be as easily made and as flippantly made by the Father, or by some Member over at the other end of the Capitol, but never kept. They are put there intended to be kept, but it is almost impossible for the crystalization of sentiment to find expression even in a body like this.

Now, the gentleman from the West is opposed to war. He approximates what we call in the East a pacifist. He said that the Navy was no good anyway. What good has the Navy ever been? Where is there a man who in his youth was awakened on that glorious Sunday morning when word came from Manila Bay that Dewey had sailed in and reduced the forts, and was going out to get breakfast and go back and finish the job? Was there not any glory in that for any American? When Admiral Schley went down on the curving shores of Cuba and made a shapeless mass of that Spanish fleet, was there no glory? People were scared to death up here thinking that he was about to come up to Philadelphia and bring General Weyler with him——

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. No; thank you. I intend to refer to some of the things that the gentleman said, but give me time. Now, I am through with the other point. I might say that the gentleman said they were no good. Then again, when Perry was up on Lake Erie, did anybody give vibrant response to the word that came to this country when he conquered the British on Lake Erie?

When Farragut sailed over the mines of Mobile Bay and someone said to him, "Don't you hear the click of the mines?" and Farrugut said, "To hell with the mines", and they went over and conquered Mobile Bay. That was Farragut. He was a southerner. And then of Paul Jones, Decatur, Barry, Sims, the last named of my own district, what of the glory reflected from their achievements? We are not complaining about where a man comes from in America, as long as he is an American. We are more apt to think of what was said by Henry Ward Beecher after he tried to explain to a mob in London about slavery. Someone cried out, "Well, why don't you let them go?" He then explained in his philosophic and statesmanlike way why he did not want them to go. Then they said, "Well, why don't you lick them?" "Lick them?" And he may have used a more emphatic word, but he said, "Lick them?" We might, but they are Americans, and they are not so easy to lick."

Now, I am for peace, double-extract peace; plenty of it; but I am for that flag first. I am for all it typifies and symbolizes. I am for the sacred memory of all the men and women who have fought and bled for it. Perhaps I would believe these people of Europe if I had not been here when we went into war, when we went through it and came out of it.

Mr. LUCKEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. I must be excused.

I would believe you gentlemen when you talk about reducing the Navy, but I believe it would be an impeachment of our Nation's integrity if we accepted the suggestion of the gentleman from Connecticut in the presence of the crooked diplomats of Europe.

Who is there who thinks so little of America as to impeach her integrity compared with the defaulters on their obligations? I think that is an insult to America, to come here and think for a minute that we would not keep our word and they would keep their word. That is one reason I am going to vote for this bill. If I thought these European diplomatic crooks would keep their word, I would not vote for it. You do not have a chance if you have nothing more than faith in them for America's defense. As someone said here, "It is a progressive age. All things are relative." He said more than he thought he did. All things are relative. True enough. He meant, then, that if we increased the Navy and the other fellow increased his, we would be on a parity just as we were; but there is more than that in the matter of things being on a parity or on an equality. The question with me is integrity. As I say, they cheated and lied to Woodrow Wilson. We saw him broken-hearted, disappointed, sicken, and die because of the perfidy of the diplomats of Europe when they deceived him in that treaty. Who now is going to trust anything but the strong arm of defense? That is what I am for—the defense of my country. I do not want anyone to ever question the integrity of the American people nor its power nor its glory that has reflected itself over this land and made the heart of every boy and every girl and every mother in this country glad and proud and safe and free.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. In view of the fact——

Mr. FOCHT. I do not yield.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. In view of the fact——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. In view of the fact that the gentleman called attention to me——

Mr. FOCHT. Oh, yes. I would like to call attention to the gentleman often.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. But the gentleman has done pretty well wrapping the flag about himself.

Mr. FOCHT. And proud of it, and it would be great glory to be wrapped in it when I die. But give us more of that Connecticut philosophy.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. It is pretty good philosophy. In view of the fact that we are about to enter——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes in order that I may answer the gentleman.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Let me conclude my question first.

Mr. FOCHT. I have your question all right.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. No; the gentleman has not.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he be allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. My question is, in view of the fact that we are about to enter into a naval conference with these foreign nations which the gentleman has so loudly traduced, does it seem fair or even honest on our part to go into that naval conference with an increased Navy, and then ask the other nations for a reduction?

Mr. FOCHT. Now, that is your question?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. I call the attention of the House to the answer given me this morning by a man whose intelligence shines out today as it has for the 20 years I have known him, the chairman of this committee, Mr. VINSON. When I asked him whether at the time we sank to the bottom of the sea 40 battleships, cruisers, war boats, or whatever they may be called, England had done likewise, he did not say yes; and that is the basis of my suspicion of them. I would not trust them out of sight or out of gunshot after what they did. I saw them sink to their knees and ask us in the name of God to help save them from the Kaiser. We went over.

Woodrow Wilson was to get democracy. What kind of democracy did he get?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I take it, then, the gentleman feels we should not have gone over?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes; we ought to have gone over after the insult which was hurled against us and after we had agreed to go over. We voted for war after we were in the war—the President had us in it; and, of course, I never desert the flag, and I hope the gentleman from Connecticut will not. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, under the consent previously granted me, I insert at this point a copy of a speech I delivered in this House on Tuesday, January 17, 1911, on the subject of aerial navies, in which will be found incorporated suggestions for the use of airplanes in the defense of our country and the response, or acquiescence, given by the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Hull:

SPEECH OF HON. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT

The House being in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 31237) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912—

Mr. FOCHT said:

Mr. Chairman, in this era of conservation, economy, and reform, I must agree with some Members of this House that an appropriation of $100,000,000 to maintain the American Army in time of peace is indeed staggering, if not almost bewildering, and we need not be surprised at the adverse comments we hear from the people of the country.

When Napoleon was under examination in a military school in France he was asked: "What would you do if you were in a fort surrounded by a hostile force and you needed supplies? What would you do for relief?" His reply was: "I would get them from the enemy."

But if we were in conflict with Germany, it is pretty far for us to go to Germany to get our supplies, although we might. If we were in conflict with Japan, it would be pretty far to go there, and yet we might. So I agree that if we are preparing for a conflict with either of these great powers we should be ready. I have heard war declared with Japan on this floor a number of times by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hobson] and by other gentlemen through newspaper interviews, and the contemplated article that was to have been published by General Huidekoper as to the possibility of an awful conflict with Germany. Every 2 years since I have been here there has been from some source a declaration of war about the time that this appropriation bill has been up for consideration.

I agree with the gentleman that the future conflicts will come suddenly and will be soon decided. There sat on the steps of this Capitol many years ago Mr. Samuel Morse, pleading for $30,000 to build his telegraph line, and an eminent Congressman, who was afterward elected governor of a State of this Union, said derisively and sarcastically: "If you build a line to Baltimore, why not build one to the moon?"

Now, at the risk of incurring the ridicule of the Members of this House, I would like to ask you today, in the light of the evolution of the flying machine and of the accomplishments of the daring aviators who have pierced the clouds and flown across the skies, what consideration have you given to the possibility and the hope of finally eliminating absolutely the horrors of war on account of the destructiveness of these aerial machines?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We have given it no consideration, because we have had no opportunity. I will say to the gentleman that I believe the airplane of the future is going to be a great benefit to the world and absolutely necessary to be used by the nations as scouts of the air in time of war, but nothing on the subject was submitted in the estimates, and it would be extra judicial if we should take it up. So, much as I believe in the possibilities of utilizing these machines, there was no opportunity for the committee to submit anything on the subject.

Mr. FOCHT. Instead of appropriating without consideration of the proposition, I submit that it would have been better to have looked into it, in view of the known possibilities and deadly effect of these machines. If there should be war between this and any other country, the use of them, with their deadly possibilities, would mean annihilation. If both countries are supplied with instruments so deadly as these machines will be, then there will be no war. It seems to me it would have been a step in the direction of progress and in answer to the call of the people of all the world for peace if some consideration had been given to these instruments of death, which in their power of annihilation will ultimately bring universal peace.

It was a Pittsburgh blacksmith who invented the range finder, and two mechanics, the Wright brothers, from Akron, Ohio, have furnished the most deadly instrument known to warfare; and it is but a just tribute to these men to say that the genius of their inventions will in all probability bring about ultimate peace through the instrumentality of their deadliness. I think it would have been wise—without any criticism of our Committee on Military Affairs, but having full confidence in that committee, their respect for the spirit and genius and courage of the American soldier—it would be wise to give our soldiers the best armament that there is in the world, because behind our guns are the greatest bravery and the most unselfish courage. Yet we must not forget that the criticism and the discussion going on throughout the country today is based upon the useless expenditures, if any, of this Government; and if 70 percent of all the revenues of the Government go for the Army and Navy in time of peace, it seems to me the committee should consider an appropriation of a part of this vast amount of money in at least experimenting with that instrument which may bring about peace and save at least one-half of this appropriation. If it will amount to anything, it will mean the utter elimination of war, followed by universal disarmament and consequent conservation of countless lives and treasure beyond estimate. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person or persons having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant; and no part of the moneys herein appropriated for the Naval Establishment or herein made available therefor shall be used or expended under contracts hereafter made for the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, of any naval vessel, machinery, article or articles that at the time of the proposed repair, purchase, or acquirement can be repaired, manufactured, or produced in each or any of the Government navy yards or arsenals of the United States, when time and facilities permit, and when, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, such repair, purchase, acquirement, or production would not involve an appreciable increase in cost to the Government: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as altering or repealing the proviso contained in section 1 of the act to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, approved February 13, 1929, which provides that the first and each succeeding alternate cruiser upon which work is undertaken, together with the main engines, armor, and armament shall be constructed or manufactured in the Government navy yards, naval gun factories, naval ordnance plants, or arsenals of the United States, except such material or parts as are not customarily manufactured in such Government plants.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FIESINGER: Page 52, line 5, after the colon, insert the following: "Provided further, That whenever bids have been requested from and submitted by private contractors for the repair, purchase, or acquirement of any naval vessel, machinery, article or articles, no such naval vessel, machinery, article or articles may be repaired, manufactured, or produced in any navy yard or arsenal of the United States unless prior to the opening of said bids the navy yard or arsenal in question shall have submitted also a sealed bid on the same specifications as did the private contractors who submitted bids, in which bid there shall be taken into consideration all the cost factors which are considered by such navy yard or arsenal in estimating its costs of production."

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill, except I feel that certain language which is part of the "boiler plate" of the bill should be corrected. It sounds innocent enough on its face but really it has fangs in it and allows the navy yards of this country in competition with private business to destroy private business.

The point of the amendment is this: The New York Navy Yard, for instance, has certain facilities for doing work that is performed by private industry in this country on battleships. Under the language of the law they get this advantage: After private manufacturers have been called upon to submit bids on work at the request of the Navy Department and after the bids are submitted to the Department the navy yards in New York and elsewhere will put in bids based upon fictitious prices and walk away with the business. I know that has been done in connection with certain business conducted in my city of Sandusky, Ohio. Under honest competitive conditions which take into consideration all the legitimate factors of cost, the people located in my city can beat the costs in the New York Navy Yard. This plant of which I speak manufactures large brass cylinders that are used to cover propeller shafts, that is, those shafts which go through the rear of the vessel to the propellers. The sleeves of those shafts are made of brass and are used to cover the steel. It is fine, precision work. If the Government is allowed to continue competing with private industry under the practices they have used heretofore of submitting fictitious prices in secret bids it means that five or six highly specialized businesses in the United States will be destroyed, businesses that we shall need in time of war, because during the last war these plants, performing highly specialized manufacture, were operating 24 hours a day.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIESINGER. I yield.

Mr. SISSON. Would the gentleman put the navy yards out of business? What more logical thing could there be than to put the manufacturer of armaments and munitions under the control of the Government, especially in view of the strong feeling throughout the country supporting the bill to take the profits out of war?

Mr. FIESINGER. I have no complaint to make if the Government plants want to go ahead and build these things; let them go ahead and build them. But when they ask for bids from private business, then let the navy yards compete on the same basis as the private manufacturers.

Mr. SISSON. Must not all competitive bidding necessarily be secret? Otherwise it would not be competitive.

Mr. FIESINGER. Quite true; but there is no reason why all who bid should not figure on the same basis.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it constitutes legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order should be withdrawn. This is justice as against the point of order. I talked to the Parliamentarian about it. Furthermore, I do not believe the committee really objects to the amendment.

I would like to have this incorporated in the bill, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order so that the Members may vote upon this proposition of justice to the private manufacturers of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The proposed amendment is clearly legislation, therefore the point of order is sustained.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. THOMPSON: Page 52, line 5, after the word "Government", strike out everything down to and including line 15, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as altering or repealing the provisos contained in the acts to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels approved February 13, 1929, and March 27, 1934, which provide that the first and succeeding alternate vessels in each category upon which work is undertaken, together with the main engines, armor, and armament, shall be constructed or manufactured in the Government navy yards, naval gun factories, naval ordnance plants, or arsenals in the United States, except such material or parts as are not customarily manufactured in such Government plants."

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, the Committee accepts that amendment. It is merely clarifying.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In expending appropriations or portions of appropriations contained in this act, for the payment for personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, with the exception of the Assistant Secretaries of the Navy, the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade in any bureau, office, or other appropriation unit shall not at any time exceed the average of the compensation rates specified for the grade by such act, as amended, and in grades in which only one position is allocated the salary of such position shall not exceed the average of the compensation rates for the grade, except that in unusually meritorious cases of one position in a grade advances may be made to rates higher than the average of the compensation rates of the grade but not more often than once in any fiscal year and then only to the next higher rate: Provided, That this restriction shall not apply (1) to grades 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the clerical-mechanical service, or (2) to require the reduction in salary of any person whose compensation was fixed as of July 1, 1924, in accordance with the rules of section 6 of such act, (3) to require the reduction in salary of any person who is transferred from one position to another position in the same or different grade in the same or a different bureau, office, or other appropriation unit, (4) to prevent the payment of a salary under any grade at a rate higher than the maximum rate of the grade when such higher rate is permitted by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and is specifically authorized by other law, or (5) to reduce the compensation of any person in a grade in which only one position is allocated.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN], which in substance provided that the amount of money carried for one item of this appropriation bill should not be used or made available for naval construction, was not adopted. I appreciate the position taken by members of the committee, both the Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee and the Committee on Naval Affairs, that this is not new construction. But there is a good deal of confusion here about what is an underaged vessel and an obsolete vessel, and what is or what is not new construction.

Mr. Chairman, we had an opportunity—and I am sorry that we passed it up without speaking very much about it or really considering it at all—to do something constructive for the cause of peace in the world. Frankly, I cannot speak in any other way than in plain English. I think we fumbled the ball. However, that is water over the dam.

As I said before, Mr. Chairman, I have no criticism of this very fine, able Subcommittee on Appropriations which reported this bill. I am not a member of the committee. I was not present at their deliberations, did not ask to be, and it was my fault I was not there. I just was not there. I want to state an understanding I have, but this is hearsay. It was not stated to me by a member of the committee, so I am not binding them or reflecting upon them in making this statement. I understand there was a good deal of sentiment in the Subcommittee on Appropriations for a provision in this bill substantially to the same effect as the Kopplemann amendment. Why not? Why should we go into the London Naval Conference next year presuming and assuming that nothing is going to result from that conference?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. When is that conference going to be called and who is going to call it?

Mr. SISSON. The conference is called for 1936, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is in error. No conference has been called. The conference broke up in London last December.

Mr. SISSON. There is a general understanding that there is to be another conference in 1936. Now, why quibble about the matter when we are confronted with realities?

Mr. Chairman, there has been a good deal of talk here that this is not new construction; that this is just building up under-aged vessels and replacing those which are obsolete. I wonder how many Members understand that the term "obsolete" does not mean that a vessel is antequated? So far as its modernization and efficiency is concerned, the term "obsolete" has nothing to do with it. It means that by the provisions of those treaties there is a presumption that after a vessel obtains a certain age the country possessing it may wish to improve it. Therefore, the country possessing that vessel may replace it under the terms of the treaty.

The statement was also made by gentlemen on the other side that we had committed ourselves to build up to this treaty. There is no such thing, however. That is absolute nonsense, and I am surprised that anybody would make the statement. That was the maximum limit beyond which we had no right to build.

I do not want to attack this bill. I appreciate that some money is necessary for keeping up the efficiency of our Navy, but we are appropriating nearly $200,000,000 more in this bill, according to the committee's own report, than was appropriated last year. I had hoped that we might do something that would make it appear to the other nations of the world that we were not preparing for war; that we were not preparing to align ourselves with any of the combinations of nations that go into this precarious, this delicate, machinery controlling the peace of the world known as the "balance of power." Therefore, I am sorry that the Kopplemann amendment was not agreed to.

Since it was not agreed to, as another gesture toward peace and also to lighten our tax burden, at the appropriate time I shall offer a motion to recommit this bill to the committee with instructions to reduce the amount of the appropriations by 20 percent, and I hope the motion will be agreed to. [Applause.]

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCORMACK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendations that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion by Mr. SISSON to recommit H. R. 7672 to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the bill back with such amendments as will reduce the total amount appropriated 20 percent.

Mr. SISSON. On this motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU)—ayes 24, noes 162.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order of no quorum and object to the vote on that ground.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and one Members present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 56, nays 289, answered "present" 1, not voting 85, as follows:

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. THOM, a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, was called from the floor on account of sickness in his family. If present, he would vote "no" on the motion to recommit.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. BOEHNE, is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "no" on the motion to recommit.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

A motion by Mr. CARY to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5914. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in connection with the California-Pacific International Exposition to be held in San Diego, Calif., in 1935 and 1936.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 94. Joint resolution establishing a commission for the participation of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Colony of Connecticut, authorizing an appropriation to be utilized in connection with such observance, and for other purposes.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN MUNICIPAL BUILDINGS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 2035) to amend an act approved June 25, 1934, authorizing loans for the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2035) to amend an act approved June 25, 1934, authorizing loans from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and in lieu thereof, on page 1 of the Senate bill, line 9, delete the first comma and after the word "Act" insert the following: "(which, for the purposes of this Act, shall be construed to include any agency created or designated by the President for similar purposes under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935)"; and the House agree to the same.

MARY T. NORTON,
HENRY ELLENBOGEN,
EVERETT M. DIRKSEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

WILLIAM H. KING,
CARTER GLASS,
ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2035) to amend an act approved June 25, 1934, authorizing loans from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendment no. 1: The Senate bill authorized the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to borrow, for the purposes of the act of June 25, 1934, from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works. The House amendment authorized the Commissioners, in addition, to borrow from another agency. The Senate recedes with a clarifying amendment.

On amendment no. 2: This amendment authorized an advance of $100,000, from the funds made available under the act, to the Children's Hospital for alterations and enlargement of buildings, equipment, and accessories. There was no corresponding provision in the Senate bill; and the Senate recedes.

MARY T. NORTON,
EVERETT M. DIRKSEN,
HENRY ELLENBOGEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY OF OWNERS AND OPERATORS OF MOTOR VEHICLES

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (S. 408) to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 408) to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment.

VINCENT L. PALMISANO.
WRIGHT PATMAN,
EVERETT M. DIRKSEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

WILLIAM H. KING,
ROYAL S. COPELAND,
ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 408) to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate bill contained a provision that the operation of a motor vehicle in the District of Columbia by a nonresident or his agent should be deemed equivalent to the appointment of the director of vehicles and traffic as the agent of such nonresident for the service of legal process in any action growing out of an accident of collision. The procedure to be followed in connection with any such service was also set forth in the same provision. The House amendment struck out this provision; and the House recedes.

VINCENT L. PALMISANO,
WRIGHT PATMAN,
EVERETT M. DIRKSEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

THE BANKING SYSTEM

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, presented the following resolution for printing under the rule, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 205

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 7617, a bill to provide for the sound, effective, and uninterrupted operation of the banking system, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 15 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, is it the intention of the gentleman to call this rule up the first thing Monday?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, after disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, and I understand there are two conference reports, the rule for the consideration of the banking bill will be called up.

SOCIAL JUSTICE REQUIRES JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR AMERICAN WORKERS

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a speech delivered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] at Detroit, April 24, 1935, at the meeting of the National League for Social Justice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I understood the majority leader to state the other day that if these were political speeches he did not know that they should go into the RECORD, but I shall not object.

There was no objection.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered by my colleague, Hon. WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Jr., at a meeting of the National Union for Social Justice, held in the city of Detroit, Mich., Wednesday, April 24, 1935.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, Father Coughlin, and members of the National Union for Social Justice, it is gratifying to know that after battling for 13 years for social-justice legislation in the Congress of the United States, one's efforts are highly honored in being permitted to address this great gathering of American citizens who are working so unselfishly under the able leadership of Father Coughlin to better the pitiable conditions which abound among our millions of industrial workers and farmers in our land of plenty.

When I received the kind invitation from your great leader, Father Coughlin, asking that I address your first meeting, I was indeed gratified and felt highly honored. May I say at this point that I subscribe whole-heartedly to the 16 points laid down by the National Union for Social Justice.

As Chairman of the Labor Committee of the House of Representatives, I naturally am in close touch with those who represent our millions of industrial workers. However, a study of our economic life and the conditions under which we live in the United States has taught me the need of giving sympathetic consideration and support to the needs and the wishes of the millions of our farmers and agriculture workers. It is pleasing on my part to be able to say to you that 2 years ago, for the first time since the creation of the House Labor Committee, representatives of all the farm organizations appeared before the Labor Committee and unanimously supported the Black-Connery 30-hour-week bill.

In passing I might add that in my early life I was taught by the Sulpician Fathers at Montreal and, later, by the Jesuits at Holy Cross of the interdependency of the farmer and the industrial workers.

As illustrative of the support the farmers receive from Congressmen from industrial sections, I not only voted for the Lemke bill but also signed the petition to force a vote thereon. The American farmers are dependent for their success on the ability of the millions of American industrial workers to purchase the products of the farmers at a price which will permit American farmers and their families to live decently. Likewise, our industrial workers are dependent, in great part, on the ability of the American farmers to buy the products of America's industrial workers.

Personally, I am interested solely in America and in Americans.

During the World War I spent 19 months on the battlefields of France, with the Twenty-sixth (Yankee) Division, in the war which we supposedly fought to "save democracy", but which, in reality, as we have since learned, we fought to protect the investments and the profits of our international bankers.

We have lived to learn that those we saved from domination have but little gratitude for the sacrifices which we made. At the present time, and for the next generation or longer, the farmers and the industrial workers of America will be saddled with a debt of some $15,000,000,000 which they must pay because of the repudiation of the debts owed to our people by the allied governments. In passing, may I suggest that no government would dare to repudiate its debts if it was not acting on the advice of the international bankers to whom they look to finance them in case of another war.

In the short time at my disposal today I am going to discuss with you one of the fundamental phases of social-justice legislation as it affects our workers, industrial and agricultural, and how, through the machinations and greed of our international bankers, millions of our people are today dependent upon relief, public and private.

The first and essential material need of our industrial workers is a steady job at wages which will permit of their providing for themselves and their families a decent living. The first and essential material need of our farmers is a market wherein they can sell their products at prices which will permit of their providing a decent living for themselves and their families.

I represent a congressional district which is almost wholly devoted to the production of industrial products which use or can use raw materials which are produced in our Western States.

Some of the finest woolen and worsted clothes in all the world are produced in Lawrence. Some of the finest boots and shoes are produced in my home city of Lynn, as well as in Lawrence. Some of the finest tanned and finished leathers in all the world are produced in Peabody and Salem. We have many other important industrial productions such as electrical machinery, paper, etc.

These goods are produced by highly skilled labor, and, in recent years, many of our highest skilled mechanics are denied employment through the mechanization of our industries, and the establishment in foreign countries of branch plants where the American machinery and low-wage labor is now available.

My people naturally constitute, when employed at decent wages, a wonderful market for the products of American farmers, as my people do not preach and do not practice any birth-control doctrine.

It has been the policy of our Government for the past 50 years to exclude Asiatic workers because of their low living standards. It has been the policy of our Government since 1921 to restrict the entry of immigrants from other countries to not more than 3 percent of those from the same country who were here in 1910.

With 25,000,000 of our people in need and dependent upon either public or private charity, there are none I have heard of who are asking that our Government make any drastic change in its policy on immigration legislation. It is true that there is a great demand that young children and the aged parents of those who reside here should be permitted entry, but these will not compete with America's farmers or industrial workers. There is a question of humane policy involved in this suggested change, and there is a substantial support for this reuniting of families.

Yet despite the fact that Asiatics are excluded and immigrants from other countries are limited to a certain small number each year, hundreds of thousands of our skilled industrial workers are unemployed, are denied a job, and are dependent upon charity solely because of the avariciousness and greed of our international bankers who, contrary to the spirit of our laws, distribute throughout our country the products of the very workers in foreign countries who we will not permit to enter into our country, the reason, as usual, being that our international bankers can secure larger profits.

The workers of the Asiatic countries are not excluded because of their particular race or their particular color. They are barred from entering into the United States solely because of their low living standards and because of their willingness to work for wages which American workers could not live decently upon.

Yet while we exclude Asiatics and permit the entry of only a certain number of workers from other countries each year, we permit the products of these very workers the freest access to our markets, displacing the products of our own workers.

Last Saturday night Alfred Sloan, president General Motors Co., and Gerard Swope, president General Electric Co., delivered a joint radio address over a Nation-wide network provided for them by the child of the Power Trust, the National Broadcasting Co. These gentlemen, apparently ignoring the fact that some 15,000,000 of our workers are now unemployed and that our laws exclude the entry of asiatics and restrict the entry of immigrants from other countries, advocated that we change our present governmental policy and permit the freer entry of the products of the very workers to whom we deny entry to and which compete in the American market with the products of our own workers.

Of course, such a policy would permit of additional profits to international bankers who deal in foreign exchange. Also such a policy would permit of larger importations of the products of the branch factories which these companies control in Asia, depriving additional thousands of American workers of job opportunities.

In passing I might direct your attention to the fact that these radio addresses were delivered under the auspices of the World Peace Foundation, America's leading advocate of the United States entry into the League of Nations and the World Court.

At the present time the products of Asiatic and European workers are delivered in the American market by international bankers at total landed tariff costs duty paid, costs which are less than the costs of production of similar articles the products of America's workers and farmers.

We in the eastern section of our country are now advised that if we will eliminate our demands for the consumption and use of American farm and industrial products that our State Department will reduce the present tariff duties on wheat, corn, canned meats, vegetables, and dairy products, which we in the industrial sections try to use in our everyday life. This will permit of these products being sold to us at a reduction of from 20 to 40 percent. We are told that with the low carrying charges imposed by the steamships the international bankers will be able to deliver the products of Argentina and Canada to the industrial workers of the Atlantic coast cities to our benefit, in the way of reduced costs to us.

Under the able leadership of the present Governor of my State, Massachusetts, Hon. James M. Curley, one of the keenest Americans now in public life, not one dollar of our State money is spent for any products other than the products of American industrial and agricultural workers, when the same are available.

You may have noted that at times I have referred to our international bankers. In many cases the products of foreign workers which are distributed in the American market are produced in factories or workshops which are owned in America, and those products are entered at less than American costs of production of similar goods.

Millions of the electric-light bulbs which are produced in Japan and sold in America, depriving America's workers of employment, are produced on machines the patents of which are owned in America, in a factory in which the General Electric Co. held or holds a five-eighths ownership of stock, thus controlling the company.

The many millions of rubber accessories which are yearly imported from Japan and sold in the American market are produced in a factory in Japan which is controlled by the Goodrich Tire & Rubber Co., of Akron, Ohio.

You may not know that each year millions of cases of canned meats are imported and sold in our eastern cities. These canned meats, it is true, come from Argentina, but they come from packing plants which are controlled by the American Meat Packing Trust, which controls these branch plants in Argentina.

Naturally, American workers cannot continue to secure decent wages and decent hours of work if the international bankers are able to secure entry of the products of those very workers our laws deny entry to. With millions of our workers continually unemployed, our farmers are deprived of their most profitable market.

Time does not permit my emphasizing, as strongly as I would like to, the imperative need of national legislation providing for a 30-hour work week and the economic freedom of our industrial workers through the enactment of the Wagner-Connery labor-disputes bill. Both of these measures are now pending before Congress.

In closing I might direct your attention to the need of perfecting some plan whereby those unemployed industrial workers, who have been deprived of opportunities of employment through the mechanization of industry, shall be provided for. I have been studying a plan whereby we would provide for these workers through a tax on the increased power utilized through the mechanization of our industries.

As one who has continually worked to secure legislation which would make possible social justice among the people of our land, I am happy to be with you and I wish to congratulate publicly the wonderfully effective work which has been accomplished by the creator of the National Union for Social Justice, the Reverend Charles E. Coughlin.

COSTIGAN-WAGNER ANTILYNCHING BILL

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, there is no fury in the world that exceeds mob fury. It is worse than the fury of the elements, the stampede of the herd, or any other action on the part of man or beast. It seems to arise almost out of thin air and disappears the same way without any reason or excuse, but while it is in existence it constitutes a state of violent anger, of ungovernable rage, and a fit of raving passion. It is a blot on any community in which it takes place and a curse to civilization and which has been the endeavor of society to stamp out for some considerable time.

Such a measure to accomplish this end is proposed in what is known as the "Costigan-Wagner bill", S. 24, now pending and being debated in the Senate of the United States. This is a just and righteous bill to prevent such mob assemblage in the future. The only question is as to whether the punishment is severe enough in this act. No one desires to justify the action of any criminal but according to the Constitution of this country, every person accused is entitled to the protection of the law and mob action results in general in the punishment of the innocent and constitutes the commission of the most heinous crime that can be imagined.

I hope this bill passes the Senate and that I have the opportunity to support and vote for it in the House. The citizens of my district are very much interested and favor the passage of this act, and I am receiving resolutions in support of this bill, which read as follows:

Be it resolved, That we, the undersigned, cognizant of the ever-increasing "lynch law", as resorted to in certain sections of the Southern States, are fearful of the laxity of the several States to institute and prosecute to the ends of justice such practices as have been perpetrated upon certain racial groups in violation of duly constituted law—the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution—and the dictates of our conscience impel us, with thousands of others, to protest in the name of fair play, justice, and civilization, and instruct you, our Representative, to vote for the Costigan-Wagner antilynch bill.

In one instance I received such resolution signed by the following persons residing in Clay Center, Kans.: Mrs. Rosa Buckner, Mr. George Holmes, Mr. John Massey, Rev. R. N. Ward, Mr. Bud Ferguson, Mrs. Bud Ferguson, Mrs. Cynthia Baker, Mr. Pompey Russell, Mrs. Lydia Russell, Mr. Ray Davy, Mrs. R. N. Ward, Mr. Mark Griffin, Mr. Fred Buckner, Mr. Frank Davy, Mrs. Estelle Davy, Mrs. Sylvesta Smith, Mr. Isaac Wofford, Mr. "Book" Lawton, Mrs. Anna Lawton, Mr. Henry Nichols, Mr. Harry Holmes, Mrs. Geneva Russell, Mr. Joseph Russell, Mrs. Jennie Wilhite, Mr. George Wiggins.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until Monday, April 29, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

7825. By Mr. KERR: Petition of the North Carolina State Council of Textile Workers; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7826. By Mr. MERRITT of New York: Petition of Layman Burgett and 50 additional residents of Fultonham, N. Y., and vicinity, opposing the Rayburn-Wheeler publicity bill, and urging upon Congress to defeat this measure; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7827. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of New York, regarding the charter of the North River Bridge Co.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7828. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of the New York Typographical Union, No. 6, New York City, concerning the Wagner labor relations bill; to the Committee on Labor.

7829. Also, petition of the New York Branch, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, concerning the Wagner-Costigan antilynching bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7830. By Mr. TRUAX: Petition of the Sixth Ward Democratic Club of Cleveland, Ohio, by their president, Fred Mueller, and secretary, Patrick Avon, urging support of their interests and the best interests of all the people of the United States by enactment of the Wheeler-Rayburn bill and/or other legislation to effectively regulate the public utilities and where and when feasible to abolish utility holding companies, whereas the Democratic Party in its platform stated, "We advocate protection of the investing public by requiring to be filed with the Government and carried in advertisements of all offerings of foreign and domestic stocks and bonds true information as to bonuses, commissions, principal invested, and interests of the sellers"; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7831. Also, petition of stenographers, typists, bookkeepers, and assistants, Local No. 19708, Toledo, Ohio, by their secretary, Elizabeth Connors, favoring the Wagner-Connery labor disputes bill, the Guffey bill on mining codes (S. 87), the Black bill, which provides for a 30-hour week in industry, and the continuation of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which expires June 15, since it is necessary to retain the code provisions for hours and wages because they represent a definite move in the right direction and believing that unless the gains already effected through National Recovery Administration codes can be made permanent through the continuation of the National Industrial Recovery Act that labor will receive a serious setback; to the Committee on Labor.

7832. Also, petition of stenographers, typists, bookkeepers, and assistants, Local No. 19708, Toledo, Ohio, by their secretary, Elizabeth Connors, favoring the passage of House bill 7172, known as the "Mead substitute bill", providing for sick leave and annual leave for postal substitutes, ratio of 1 substitute to 7 regulars, graduated pay from the present rate of 65 cents per hour to the rate of the third grade, and prohibition against furloughs or dismissals; also favoring House bill 6990, which provides for a 40-hour week for all postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

7833. Also, petition of Branch 505 of the American Flint Glass Workers Union of Newark, Ohio, by their secretary, Helen Yerian, requesting support of the graduated tax on cigarettes in House bills 5450, 6124, 6368, and 6672; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7834. Also, petition of India Local No. 18346, Mogadore, Ohio, James W. Hamlin, and numerous others, urging the continuation of the National Recovery Administration, as they feel this program is vitally essential to the welfare and peace of this country; to the Committee on Labor.

7835. Also, petition of students and faculty of Bonebrake Theological Seminary, of Dayton, Ohio, headed by Joseph B. Henry, urging that the scheduled maneuvers be transferred to waters where all semblance of a threat to Japan will be removed, that the proposed budgets for the Army and Navy be substantially reduced, and that legislation be enacted which will eliminate profit from war, as they believe that now is the time to prepare for peace if we are going to have peace, and with deep conviction that our country is under moral obligation to set the pace in guaranteeing world peace; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

7836. By Mr. SUTPHIN: Petition of Commander John Barry Division, Ancient Order of Hibernians, Perth Amboy, N. J.; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE

SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1935

(Legislative day of Monday, Apr. 15, 1935)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Friday, April 26, 1935, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

NOMINATION OF EARLE A. BROWN—RECONSIDERATION

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, on Wednesday last, April 24, the Senate in executive session confirmed the nomination of Earle A. Brown to be postmaster at Lunenburg, Mass. As in executive session, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. COOLIDGE] as well as for myself, I ask unanimous consent to enter in the record a motion to reconsider the nomination referred to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the motion will be entered.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LEWIS. I note the absence of a quorum, and ask for a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is absent because of illness, and that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are unavoidably detained from the Senate. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

STATE OF WISCONSIN

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to reduce the present tax on beer and other liquor

Whereas the bootlegger continues his operations to the detriment of the income of the Federal Government; and

Whereas it is proper that the legitimate dealer be protected and the public revenues increased: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to reduce the present Federal tax on beer to $2 per barrel and the present Federal tax on liquor to the former rate of $1.10 per gallon; be it further

Resolved, That a properly certified copy of this resolution be sent to each of the following officials: To the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Chief Clerks of both Houses of Congress, and to Hon. Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the petition of Mrs. Nettie T. Rich, of Leedstown, Va., praying for the enactment of old-age pension legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Mrs. Sophia F. Keller, of San Diego, Calif., praying for the adoption of the so-called "Townsend old-age revolving pension plan", which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the 11 Townsend clubs of Berkeley, Calif., favoring inclusion by the Senate in pending economic-security legislation of the so-called "Townsend old-age revolving pension plan", which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Macon, Miss., protesting against ratification of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway treaty, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Taxicab Drivers' Union of New York City, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of proposed alien and sedition legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by a mass meeting of citizens at Tulsa, Okla., favoring development of power sites on the Grand River, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by officers of the Fourth Cycle, Inc., of Los Angeles, Calif., favoring investigation by a Senate committee of statements made by Senator SCHALL relative to the business operations of Federal corporations chartered in the various States, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of several citizens of the United States, praying for an investigation of charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana relative to the qualifications of the Senators from Louisiana (Mr. LONG and Mr. OVERTON), which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at a town meeting of citizens of Milford, Mass., favoring the enactment of legislation requiring the use of granite in the construction of buildings erected under the Public Works program, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Commissioners of Carson County, Tex., protesting against the waste of natural gas taking place in the Panhandle field of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. NORRIS presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to exempt fuel alcohol from Federal tax

Whereas both science and the practical usages have demonstrated that alcohol distilled from grains, vegetables, kindred, or other vegetation is useful to mix with gasoline as motor-power fuels; and

Whereas the practical production of this alcohol, so it could be economically used as motor fuel, would be one of the greatest boons to the agricultural conditions in this United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska in fiftieth session assembled, That this House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska respectfully urges the Congress of the United States to make all alcohol used as a fuel, blended or otherwise, be exempt from all Federal taxes.

That all alcohol so exempted shall be distilled from products grown in the United States.

This is to certify that the within resolution was introduced and passed by the Nebraska House of Representatives on the 18th day of April 1935.

MAX ADAMS, Chief Clerk of the House.

REPORT OF MILITARY AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Mr. DUFFY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 60) to investigate the facts concerning the court martial of former Capt. Oberlin M. Carter, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 557) thereon.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 2696) to extend the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission to include that stretch of the Arkansas River between its confluence with the Mississippi River and the city of Little Rock, Ark.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 2697) for the relief of the United Pocahontas Coal Co., Crumpler, W. Va.; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2698) granting a pension to Clara L. Dolman;

A bill (S. 2699) granting a pension to Charles Rufus Koon;

A bill (S. 2700) granting a pension to Hattie Jane Koon; and

A bill (S. 2701) granting an increase of pension to Martha L. E. Bromberg; to the Committee on Pensions.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL

Mr. AUSTIN and Mr. GIBSON each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE—AMENDMENTS

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I send to the desk several amendments, which are a part of a series of amendments which I desire to have referred to the Commerce Committee in connection with the so-called "merchant-marine bill", being Senate bill 2582. I ask that the amendments may be read. I shall offer others at a later date, which I also shall ask to have referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire the amendments to be read at this time?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; Mr. President, I ask that the amendments be read at this time, for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments will be read, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and printed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

At the proper place in the bill, to insert the following: "Provided, That no officer, director, or employee of any contractor, under a contract in force under this act, shall receive a salary or allowance (including compensation in any form) from such contractor which will result in such person receiving a total compensation at a rate larger than $17,500 per annum: And provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Authority to exercise continuing supervision to assure that this provision is not violated."

At the proper place in the bill, to insert the following: "Provided, That no such subsidy payments by the Authority shall permit the contractor to earn more than 6 percent per annum in any one year on the contractor's net worth necessarily utilized in the operation of the subsidized service, route, line, vessel, or vessels. In calculating net worth, for the purpose of this act, intangible assets and appreciation of assets shall be excluded: Provided further, That the Authority shall prescribe the accounting formula for determining the net profit contemplated in this section."

At the proper place in the bill to insert the following:

"SEC. 511. (a) No contractor under a contract in force under this title, or no holding company of such contractor or no officer, director, or executive, or no member of the immediate family of any of such officers, directors, or executives of such contractor or such holding company shall (1) own any pecuniary interest in any person performing or supplying stevedoring, terminal, ship repair, ship chandler, towboat, wharfage, or kindred services in any domestic port or ports. (2) Own any pecuniary interest in any person servicing any vessels of the contractor in a foreign port or ports: Provided, That, with the express approval of the Authority, such contractor, or a wholly owned subsidiary of such contractor, may render services to vessels in a foreign port or ports if the profits, if any, incident thereto are included in the earnings contemplated in section 505 (c) of this act. (3) Own, operate, or charter any vessel or vessels engaged in the domestic intercoastal or coastwise service, or own any pecuniary interest in any person that owns, charters, or operates any vessel or vessels in the domestic intecoastal or coastwise service. (4) Own, charter, or operate any foreign flag vessel or vessels, or own any pecuniary interest in any person that owns, charters, or operates any foreign flag vessel or vessels. (5) Perform or supply at any domestic port or ports, stevedoring, towboat, ship repair, ship chandler, terminal, or wharfage services for any vessel: Provided, That such contractor may itself, with the express approval of the Authority, perform stevedoring services to and/or utilize its own terminal and/or wharfage facilities for its own vessels. (6) Own any pecuniary interest in any person employed as agent or broker for any contractor under a contract in force under this act.

"(b) No contractor under a contract in force under this part shall employ any person as the managing or operating agent of such contractor.

"(c) No contractor under a contract in force under this part, or no holding company of such contractor or no officer, director, or executive, or no member of the immediate family of such officers, directors, or executives of such contractor, or of such holding company shall own any pecuniary interest in, or shall be owned to any extent by, any person engaged in the building of ships, or any holding or subsidiary company of such person, or any officer, director, or other executive of such person or of such holding company.

"(d) Any violation of any provision of section 511 (a), (b), or (c) shall constitute a breach of contract in force under this title, and upon determining that such a violation has occurred, the Authority shall forthwith rescind such contract."

INJUNCTIONS AGAINST PUBLICLY OWNED POWER PLANTS

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent to submit a Senate resolution, and, when it shall have been read, I will ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read the resolution.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 123), as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Power Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate:

(1) A list of all the publicly owned electric generating or distributing plants, whether Federal, State, county, or municipal, in the United States in which the installation, organization, or operation of such plants has been interfered with by reason of restraining orders or injunctions issued (a) in Federal courts and (b) in State courts;

(2) The delay, if any, in each case that has occurred by reason of such restraining order or injunction; and

(3) The expense, both direct and indirect, in each case that has been incurred by the owner of such publicly owned electric generating or distributing plant by reason of such restraining order or injunction.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I inquire, Has the resolution been referred to a committee?

Mr. NORRIS. No. The resolution merely calls for information which I think the Federal Power Commission will be able to obtain by questionnaires directed to the various municipalities. The adoption of the resolution will result in giving to the Senate very important information. If the Senator wishes to have the resolution go over, I will not object to that.

Mr. McNARY. No; but I was engaged in another matter, and I should like to have the resolution again read.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will again be read.

The legislative clerk again read the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me if the resolution is to be considered there ought to be an amendment to the effect that the result of the suits, or whether they were merely interlocutory orders or direct proceedings which culminated in trial, ought to be noted.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator would not be able to get very much information along that line. There are hundreds of the suits still pending.

Mr. KING. Speaking for myself, I should like to know what were the results of the suits.

Mr. NORRIS. I should not have any objection to ascertaining such information.

Mr. KING. I think there ought to be a further amendment so as to have indicated in the report whether any of the suits were brought by the power companies themselves.

Mr. NORRIS. I should not have any objection to that. The companies to which the Senator refers are municipal plants.

Mr. KING. So I understand.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator desires to know whether they have brought suits?

Mr. KING. Yes; whether they have initiated proceedings.

Mr. NORRIS. I hardly suppose we would find one in the United States. If there are any, I should have no objection to knowing it. It would be foolish for a municipality to undertake to acquire an electric-light plant and then get an injunction to restrain itself from going on with it.

Mr. KING. They might have sought an injunction against other plants, which would constitute an interference with the execution of the plans of the municipal plant.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose we let the resolution go over so the Senator may prepare an amendment.

Mr. KING. That would be agreeable to me.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to that course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

PREVENTION OF LYNCHING

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is the motion of Mr. COSTIGAN that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 24) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing, and punishing the crime of lynching.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the motion, to strike out the bill described in the motion and to insert in lieu thereof H. R. 3896, the adjusted-compensation bill, providing for payment of what is popularly called the "soldiers' bonus."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator to make a motion to take up a different bill than that contemplated by the motion of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CONNALLY. That would be the effect of the motion. It is simply a motion to amend the pending motion by substituting, for the bill which is sought to be taken up, the bill reported by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], which includes and relates to all the other measures known as "soldier-bonus bills."

Mr. President, there is and has been for many years widespread interest in this particular legislation. It is probably more imminent and keener at the present moment than it has been for a number of years. This is a question which, like the famous ghost, "will not down" and which constantly arises before the Congress. A great many Senators feel that now is the time, in this unusual period, for the Congress to take up the measure and to settle this troublesome issue as the Congress in its wisdom may determine is the proper way to settle it.

I am sure many Senators who heretofore have not regarded the measure as one demanding instant attention are now of the opinion that the time has at last arrived when the question ought to be met fearlessly and wisely, and ought to be settled in order that the World War veterans may know just in what fashion the Congress expects to deal with their demands.

The Committee on Finance have had hearings on the particular measure, have amended the House bill by a proposed Senate committee amendment. The Senate will have an opportunity, when the bill is considered, to pass upon all the various so-called "bonus bills" and arrive at a final conclusion as to what its desire is. Under the liberal rules of the Senate no Senator need have any fear that he will not find opportunity for expression of his views, and he will have opportunity to vote upon that particular measure which he favors.

With that thought in mind, it seemed to me this is an opportune time to ask the Senate to take up the adjusted-compensation bill, discuss it, debate it, and act upon it at the earliest practicable date.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. Do I understand the Senator from Texas is now proposing to substitute the so-called "bonus bill" for the bill the consideration of which is sought by the pending motion?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the effect of my proposed amendment. My amendment is to strike out of the motion of the Senator from Colorado the bill proposed by him and to substitute therefor the particular bill I have in mind.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I make the point that the amendment to the motion is not in order.

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not yield for that purpose.

Mr. McNARY. I understood the Senator to state that he had made such a motion.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am proposing it in my remarks, and, of course, when I shall have concluded it will be before the Senate. I yield to the Senator from Oregon for any other purpose than taking the Senator from Texas off the floor. I always like to yield, but I do not regard a request for a Senator to yield which has for its purpose the removal of that Senator who has the floor as being a friendly interruption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas declines to yield for the purpose indicated by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield for a question only.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not rise for the purpose of making a point of order, but to make a brief statement, with the Senator's permission, with respect to his motion and concerning the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who is absent.

Mr. President, I neglected to state yesterday, and I feel impelled to do so this morning, that my able colleague the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] unexpectedly, though I have every reason to believe only temporarily, became ill yesterday and was compelled to absent himself from the floor of the Senate. He is still unavoidably detained from the floor of the Senate for that reason.

Speaking, however, for him and for myself, I intended to and now give assurances to the Senate that if the pending motion shall be adopted there will, of course, be no disposition on the part of either the Senator from New York or myself to stand in the way of any measure of the "must" program of the administration. There will also be no disposition to postpone consideration of the bonus issue which is now being brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator from Colorado to agree to my motion?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; not at all. It is my understanding, if the issue shall be determined in favor of the pending motion, that it will be entirely practicable, under the rules and custom of the Senate, to lay aside the order of business for the consideration of other already indicated matters which may be deemed at the time entitled to priority of consideration by the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator's statement is so indefinite that it seems to me to be difficult for the Senate to grasp just what he has in mind when he says that "it will be possible to lay aside the pending business to take up"—and then follows a general statement. Of course, we all know that to be the situation. It is the rule of the Senate which makes it possible; but the Senator gives no assurance that the soldiers' bonus bill shall be immediately taken up with his consent.

Mr. COSTIGAN. So far as the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and I are concerned, there will be no objection, if the Senate desires to do so, to taking up the bonus measure after the pending motion shall have been adopted.

Mr. CONNALLY. I congratulate the Senator from Colorado on his fine spirit of generosity. He says if the majority of the Senate shall do a certain thing, he and the Senator from New York will not object.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will go farther and say that we shall not object.

Mr. CONNALLY. After the Senate shall have done it there can be no possible objection. The Senator predicates his agreement upon the fact that if the Senate shall first by majority vote, over the objection of himself and the Senator from New York, take up a certain bill, they will graciously accede to the wishes of the Senate. I congratulate the Senator from Colorado. It is a magnanimous and generous attitude for the Senator to assume. I wish we had more Senators of the same type.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, if the able Senator will yield again——

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I repeat that we ourselves will join in an effort to have the subject of the bonus promptly, and, if the Senator desires me to say so, immediately considered after the adoption of the pending motion by laying aside what will then be the business before the Senate for the consideration of the bonus issue.

Mr. CONNALLY. Can the Senator give any assurance that his followers will follow his lead in that respect?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. That arrangement could be effected by a unanimous-consent agreement if the Senate is in mind to consent to it; so, with the permission of the Senator from Texas, in his time, I ask unanimous consent that the pending motion of the Senator from Colorado be agreed to, and that immediately thereafter the so-called "antilynching bill" be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the adjusted-compensation bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLACK. If that agreement should be made, would it still be possible for any one Senator, at any time he saw fit, to stop consideration of the bonus legislation and to call for consideration of the pending business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If any Senator should call for the regular order, it would bring the antilynching bill back before the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. So that if the unanimous-consent agreement were entered into, the result would be—I wish to be sure about it—that if any one Senator at any time should ask that the Senate cease the consideration of the bonus bill and return to the consideration of the so-called "antilynching bill", the Chair would order the bonus bill laid aside to take up the other bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the rule of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I can modify the request for unanimous consent so as to comprehend that feature, and I will do so.

I ask unanimous consent that the motion of the Senator from Colorado be agreed to; that immediately thereafter the so-called "antilynching bill" be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the adjusted-compensation bill to a conclusion of that bill, without interruption, save by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina objects.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to say that the Senator from Colorado in effect agrees that the soldiers' adjusted-compensation bill ought to be taken up. We shall have an excellent opportunity to test whether or not the Senator from Colorado, and those who are supporting him in his motion, are really agreeable to taking up the adjusted-service certificate payment bill at this time, because the motion which I shall make at the conclusion of my brief remarks will be that the Senate take up the bill reported from the committee of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]; and for the benefit of those Senators who have come into the Chamber since I first suggested that I should make such a motion I wish to say that the bill of the Senator from Mississippi will bring before the Senate all the various plans dealing with the adjusted-service compensation certificates, and every Senator will have an opportunity not only of expressing but of voting his sentiments with respect to all phases of this very troublesome and vexing question.

It seems to me this is a matter which ought to be speedily settled. We have an opportunity to settle it, and the country is expecting some decision of that particular question at a very early date. Even the business interests, which in large measure have heretofore opposed the legislation, desire to know what the Congress is going to do about it. The question of whether or not we shall have a tax bill at this session of Congress will in large measure depend upon whether or not legislation of this character shall be enacted. It seems to me the public interest will be more generally served by the consideration of that particular measure than by the consideration of the measure which the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] are sponsoring. While I very much regret the absence of the Senator from New York, I feel that he ought to be present, if possible, in the consideration of the motion urged by himself and the Senator from Colorado if it is further to occupy the time of the Senate.

While I realize that the Senator from Colorado is perfectly able to carry on the fight in favor of his motion, it seems to me the Senator from Colorado would be somewhat reluctant to assume that responsibility when he is aware of the great interest of the Senator from New York in this particular measure and with regard to the different matters which may transpire during the day; and it seems to me the Senator from Colorado would desire that the Senate postpone consideration of his motion until such a time as he might have at his side the counsel, the judgment, and the militant industry of the Senator from New York.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Texas referred to the various forms of proposal for the payment of the adjusted-service certificates and stated that all of them would be before the Senate. The Senator from Texas is a very able member of the Finance Committee, and is doubtless familiar with the various forms of proposal to pay the adjusted-service certificates. For the benefit of those of us who have not had an opportunity to familiarize ourselves with the subject, will the Senator from Texas briefly outline the various proposed forms of payment of the bonus?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Georgia that, notwithstanding the temptation to respond which is evoked by his very generous comment, I shall not do so at the present time. I do not wish to consume the time of the Senate in discussing a matter which is not now properly before the Senate; and, while I am permitted to discuss the general subject because of the pendency of my motion, I do not feel warranted in going into all the details of those particular measures at this moment.

Mr. President, it seems to me we might reach a unanimous-consent agreement to the effect that we shall take up the soldiers' adjusted-compensation bill, and, at its conclusion, that the pending motion be considered by the Senate just in the status which it occupies at the present moment. I propound such unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the agreement which the Senator proposes?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas proposes that the Senate take up at the present moment the adjusted-service certificate bill, and that at the conclusion of the consideration of that bill the motion now before the Senate be the pending motion.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not quite understand the nature of the proposal. Is it to lay aside temporarily the present motion and take up the bonus bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the request.

Mr. McNARY. And leave the motion of the Senator from Colorado in its present unsettled status?

Mr. CONNALLY. Leave it just where it now is.

Mr. McNARY. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understood the suggestion of the Senator from Texas, it was that for the present the pending question be put aside, and that the Senate begin, on Monday morning, the consideration of the so-called "adjusted-service-certificate bill", agreeing that immediately upon the conclusion of the consideration of that proposal it shall be in order and the Senator from Colorado will be recognized to make a motion to take up his bill. In other words, it would put him off only until we get the bonus bill out of the way. He would lose no rights thereby at all.

Mr. McNARY. Why not go ahead with his bill and make it the unfinished business and postpone the consideration of the bonus bill for a few days?

Mr. SMITH. Because that cannot be done.

Mr. HARRISON. If that is the desire of the Senate, of course, it is well and good. I was hoping very much that on Monday we might take up the so-called "bonus legislation" and get it out of the way.

Mr. McNARY. That could be done in the manner suggested earlier, by making the proposal of the Senator from Colorado the unfinished business, temporarily lay it aside, and take up the bonus bill on Monday.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator recognizes the fact that if the motion of the Senator from Colorado should prevail, it would be in order to make a motion to supersede the bill of the Senator from Colorado; but such a motion would be debatable, as I understand, and that would just mean loss of time of the Senate. If we arrange the matter by unanimous consent, the proponents of the legislation under consideration would lose nothing except the time it would take to consider the adjusted-service-certificate proposal.

Mr. McNARY. Why does not the Senator consent at this time that the Senate take a vote on the pending motion? Then, after the status was fixed, we probably could obtain consideration of a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, would the Senator help some of us on this side to have the motion to take up for consideration the adjusted-service-certificate legislation agreed to?

Mr. McNARY. I have stated that there might be some new light on the matter if the bill now being urged by the Senator from Colorado should become the unfinished business.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. GLASS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield first to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Perhaps it is not now necessary to say what I had intended to say, in view of the termination of the colloquy. However, I may say that I would not want to agree to postpone the motion of the Senator from Colorado in order to take up the soldiers' bonus bill unless it were also agreed that after the soldiers' bonus legislation should be disposed of the motion of the Senator from Colorado would be finally disposed of before we took up the amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act. I think that is a more serious matter than the other measures.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I had assumed that the Senator from Texas had yielded the floor. I was about to take the floor. I did not mean to interrupt the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I thank the generous Senator from Illinois. Except for the necessity of continuing the explanation of my motion, I would say the Senate would be delighted, as I would be delighted, to have the time consumed by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. As I understand the rules, when a Senator takes the floor he is to speak to the pending question. The Senator from Texas has made a motion to strike out the number of the bill mentioned in the pending motion and to insert a new number, the new number being the number attached to the soldiers' bonus bill, so called. If that is correct, is it not a fact that the status is such that one could discuss the soldiers' bonus bill under the motion of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that the Senator from Texas makes no pretensions to knowledge of parliamentary law; but it would seem to me entirely correct to answer the interrogatory of the Senator from Oklahoma in the affirmative, because the motion being a motion to substitute another bill for one that is proposed to be taken up, it would, according to all standards and canons of reason and logic, properly bring before the Senate, for the purpose of discussion, at least, all the implications of the various measures coming within the two extremes. Does the Senator from Oklahoma desire to discuss the soldiers' bonus?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Not at this time.

Mr. CONNALLY. I know of no one who is more thoroughly versed in regard to the various measures relating to the adjusted-service certificates than is the eminent Senator from Oklahoma, and at an appropriate time I hope the Senate may have an opportunity to hear the Senator from Oklahoma with regard to these measures. It was largely in anticipation of the realization of such a hope that the Senator from Texas made his motion that the Senate substitute the adjusted-service-certificate measure for the bill described in the pending motion.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have reserved the right to speak upon the soldiers' bonus bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Oklahoma reserves the right?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is the Senator desirous of proceeding today?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas will yield, I suppose that if the Senator from Oklahoma had been ready to proceed, he would not have reserved his right; but I think the Senator from Texas is eminently correct—as he always is—in the observation that when he moves to substitute the number of another bill for that of a bill sought to be brought before the Senate, in order that the Senate might be properly enlightened and be able to determine how it might wish to vote on substituting one number for another, of course, it would be appropriate to discuss every implication that follows the bill whose number is to be substituted, and probably in the most minute detail, because there might be some apparently insignificant thing in the bill proposed to be substituted which would cause Senators to vote for or against the motion. So it is important that we discuss it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Kentucky and quite agree with the relevancy and the wisdom of his observations. The concluding statement of the Senator from Kentucky was that probably some trivial or inconsequential provision in these bills might call for discussion.

Mr. BARKLEY. I said, to be exactly and meticulously correct, some "apparently" trivial matter. That is, it might appear to be trivial until it was explained, and then it might appear to be an important, consequential matter.

Mr. CONNALLY. I quite understand and agree with the Senator. In other words, the Senator from Kentucky means to suggest that what to some Senator might appear to be an inconsequential and trivial provision, would, when understood in all of its implications, after thorough discussion by the Senate, appear to other Senators to be of outstanding importance. That is quite true, and I am sure that Senators who have served here for a number of years have long since realized that too often Senators, through a merely superficial examination of a question, treat matters which are apparently of little consequence with scant consideration, when our duty here requires that we meticulously, to use the word suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, with the highest degree of care, investigate every provision of a proposed act, because it does not affect us, but it affects all of the people represented by us here in the Senate. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if I understand the Senator, then, what now appears to be important might develop, after discussion, to be unimportant, and what now appears to be unimportant might seem to become important; so that the two things would reverse themselves in the order of their importance.

Mr. CONNALLY. I quite agree with the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There have been pending before the Congress at various sessions different proposals for the payment to the soldiers of what the country has deemed to be a debt. If it is a debt, it is now 18 years past due. The House of Representatives on three separate occasions has passed a bill proposing to liquidate that indebtedness. On the present occasion the House bill has come to the Senate, and it was referred to the Committee on Finance, of which committee the distinguished Senator from Texas is a high ranking member.

Mr. BARKLEY. One of the rankest, I am sure. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator from Kentucky says "one of the rankest." I am not prepared to share in that interpretation, unless I can have the term "rankest" defined.

Mr. CONNALLY. Allow me to say to the Senator that I have very severe competition, however. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. My question is this: Inasmuch as the Senate committee has seen fit to draw a black line through each line of the bill as it passed the House and insert in lieu thereof language in a different kind of type—and, of course, we understand that the Senate committee's recommendation is a new bill entirely—and, inasmuch as the public does not understand the terms of the so-called "amendment", which throughout the country is now known as the "Harrison bill"; and, inasmuch as the Senate has had no chance to read the committee hearings and the newspapers have given us only some slight information about the new bill, does not the Senator think it might be well to spend whatever time may be necessary in at least explaining the bill which is now proposed to be brought before the Senate? Otherwise, the Senate would not be prepared to know whether or not it would want to vote to change the number in the motion of the Senator from Colorado, as proposed by the Senator from Texas. The proposal to change the phrase "S. 24" to "H. R. 3896" does not mean anything to anyone who does not know what is contained in the measures indicated by the two numbers.

Does not the Senator from Texas think it advisable to take some time to explain the bill to the Senate, particularly to those of us who are not members of the Finance Committee and know nothing about the bill, and who have not had an opportunity to read the hearings? The Senator from Texas has been present at the hearings on the bill and has made a study of it for some time, and is in a position to advise the Senate just what this amendment means.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me for the purpose of making a motion?

Mr. CONNALLY. If the motion of the Senator from Oregon does not take the Senator from Texas off his feet, he will yield.

Mr. McNARY. I take it that means that the Senator will yield. I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Oregon for the purpose of making that motion?

Mr. CONNALLY. Before I yield for that purpose, Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not think the Senate ought to agree to recess. If the motion to recess shall be voted down, I shall later make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, what was the Chair's inquiry?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair asked the Senator from Texas if he yielded to the Senator from Oregon for the purpose of making a motion to take a recess.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did the Senator from Oregon move to adjourn?

Mr. McNARY. I made a motion to take a recess.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas will be glad to yield to the Senator from Oregon for the purpose of making a motion to adjourn. What I have in mind is that I am sure the Senator from Arkansas desires those Senators who are absent to be given an opportunity to be present on Monday; and since a motion to adjourn will more nearly accomplish that than will a motion to take a recess, I presume he would prefer to make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I was about to ask the question which the Senator from Texas asked. The motion just made was to take a recess, and not to take an adjournment?

Mr. McNARY. Yes; the motion I made was that the Senate take a recess. I thought the Senator from Texas had yielded to me for the purpose of making the motion.

Mr. CONNALLY. I stated to the Chair, and the RECORD will so show, that before yielding for that purpose I desired to yield to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. After hearing the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas I did not yield.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas now yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. If it is agreeable to the Senator from Arkansas that I yield for the purpose of enabling the Senator from Oregon to make a motion to take a recess, I do so. Otherwise, I do not.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order, if there is some regular order; and if there is not any order, I demand some order.

Mr. CONNALLY. The regular order is that I go ahead.

Mr. President, I desire to be courteous to Senators. I desire especially to be courteous to the Senator from Oregon

[Mr. McNARY], who is always courteous and considerate of other Senators; and if my failing to yield brought about any serious inconvenience to the Senator, I will relieve him of that a little later when I surrender the floor.

I desire to say to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] with respect to his urgent suggestion that I discuss the various aspects of the bonus bill, that I do not feel that I ought to consume the time of the Senate in that sort of enterprise when a number of other Senators are anxious to speak this afternoon if the Senate continues in session; and I should not wish to preempt the floor and thus bring about confusion in their minds by making it necessary for them to postpone their remarks until Monday if the Senate should recess or adjourn until that day.

Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] desires to address the Senate. For the present I will withhold my motion to substitute the soldiers' bonus bill for the bill of the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New York. I shall renew the motion before we recess.

Mr. COSTIGAN rose.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I be assured now that the motion I made is pending; namely, that the Senate recess until Monday at 12 o'clock noon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon has made a motion that the Senate recess until Monday at 12 o'clock noon; and under the rules of the Senate, that motion is not debatable. The Senator from Oregon would hardly be permitted to have the floor for the purpose of yielding for debate.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that situation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the pending motion of the Senator from New York and myself to take up Senate bill 24 cannot be displaced by the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Texas is not before the Senate at the present time.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I ask, by way of parliamentary inquiry, what motion is before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to take a recess until Monday at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The parliamentary inquiry I wish to make is whether the point of order is not in order at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order against the motion to recess is not in order.

Mr. COSTIGAN. My point of order is, of course, not against the motion to recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the motion now pending.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That motion takes precedence over the motion to recess. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and called the name of Mr. ADAMS, who voted in the affirmative.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the clerk had begun the roll call, and the name of one Senator had been called, and he had voted.

Mr. BLACK. Yes, Mr. President; the yeas and nays had been ordered, the calling of the roll had been begun, and a Senator had responded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken, and the clerk will continue the call of the roll.

The Chief Clerk resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. BYRD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]. If he were present, he would vote "nay", and, if I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. I understand that if present, he would vote "yea." Were I permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. NORRIS (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. If he were present and voting, he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. OVERTON (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY]. If he were present and voting, he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I am advised he is not present and that, if present, would vote "nay." As I cannot secure a transfer of my pair with him, I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. These two Senators are paired. If the Senator from New Jersey were present, he would vote "nay", and the Senator from North Carolina, if present, would vote "yea."

I desire further to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] are necessarily absent.

I also announce the general pair of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] with the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO]. I am not advised as to how either Senator would vote, if present.

Mr. LOGAN. I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]; but as he would vote, if present, as I intend to vote, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the following special pairs:

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER];

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

If present, the Senator from Georgia, the Senator from Wisconsin, and the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea", and the Senator from New York, the Senator from New Jersey, and the Senator from Missouri would vote "nay."

I regret to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I desire further to announce that the following Senators are unavoidably detained from the Senate: The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE].

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—28

Adams	Byrnes	Gore	Russell
Bailey	Caraway	Harrison	Sheppard
Bankhead	Connally	Hatch	Shipstead
Bilbo	Couzens	King	Smith
Black	Dieterich	Lonergan	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Fletcher	Radcliffe	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Glass	Robinson	Trammell

NAYS—37

Ashurst	Costigan	Logan	Schwellenbach
Austin	Donahey	McCarran	Steiwer
Bachman	Frazier	McNary	Truman
Barkley	Gibson	Minton	Vandenberg

NOT VOTING—30

Barbour	Duffy	McGill	Pope
Byrd	George	McKellar	Reynolds
Carey	Gerry	Metcalf	Townsend
Clark	Guffey	Moore	Tydings
Coolidge	La Follette	Norbeck	Wagner
Cutting	Long	Norris	Wheeler
Davis	Maloney	Overton
Dickinson	McAdoo	Pittman

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

Mr. McNARY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING]. Not knowing how he would vote, if present, or how I want to vote, I withhold my vote. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. I repeat the announcement as to my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. Being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BULKLEY. I understand my general pair, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], would vote as I intend to vote on this question. I therefore am free to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS (after having voted in the negative). While there is a doubt in my mind as to whether my pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] would apply on this vote, inasmuch as it does not make much difference anyway, I will withdraw my vote on account of my pair with the Senator from Wisconsin, who is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. I am requested by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] to say that if he were present and voting, he would vote "yea."

I regret to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I desire further to announce that the following Senators are unavoidably detained from the Senate:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE].

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to announce the general pair of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. Also the general pair of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS].

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 10, as follows:

YEAS—50

Adams	Bone	Capper	Fletcher
Ashurst	Brown	Caraway	Frazier
Austin	Bulkley	Copeland	Gibson
Bailey	Bulow	Costigan	Gore
Bankhead	Burke	Couzens	Hastings

Clark	Glass	Maloney	Townsend
Connally	Guffey	Moore	Tydings
Coolidge	Hale	Norbeck	Wagner
Cutting	Harrison	Norris	Wheeler
Davis	La Follette	Overton	White
Dickinson	Long	Pittman

So the motion to recess was agreed to.

RECESS

Thereupon (at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, April 29, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE

MONDAY, APRIL 29, 1935

(Legislative day of Monday, Apr. 15, 1935)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Saturday, April 27, 1935, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

On April 24, 1935:

S. 1572. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893, as amended;

S. J. Res. 93. Joint resolution to extend the time within which contracts may be modified or canceled under the provisions of section 5 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934; and

S. J. Res. 97. Joint resolution authorizing the appropriation of funds for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property during the convention of the Imperial Council of the Mystic Shrine in the District of Columbia, June 8, 1935, to June 17, 1935, both inclusive.

On April 25, 1935:

S. 93. An act to authorize certain officers of the Navy and Marine Corps to administer oaths;

S. 1208. An act authorizing personnel of the naval service to whom a commemorative or special medal has been awarded to wear in lieu thereof a miniature facsimile of such medal and a ribbon symbolic of the award;

S. 1210. An act authorizing certain officials under the Naval Establishment to administer oaths; and

S. 2197. An act to permit construction, maintenance, and use of certain pipe lines for petroleum and petroleum products in the District of Columbia.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I note the absence of a quorum and move a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Johnson	Pope
Ashurst	Coolidge	Keyes	Radcliffe
Austin	Copeland	King	Robinson
Bachman	Costigan	La Follette	Russell
Bailey	Couzens	Lewis	Schall
Bankhead	Dickinson	Logan	Schwellenbach
Barbour	Dieterich	Lonergan	Sheppard
Barkley	Donahey	Long	Shipstead
Bilbo	Duffy	McCarran	Smith
Black	Fletcher	McGill	Steiwer
Bone	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	George	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Gerry	Minton	Townsend
Bulkley	Gibson	Moore	Trammell
Bulow	Glass	Murphy	Truman
Burke	Gore	Murray	Tydings
Byrd	Guffey	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hale	Norris	Van Nuys
Capper	Harrison	Nye	Wagner
Caraway	Hastings	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Carey	Hatch	Overton	Wheeler
Clark	Hayden	Pittman	White

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] are necessarily absent.

Mr. LEWIS. I anounce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is absent because of illness, and that the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] are necessarily detained from the Senate. I request that this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

A concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to enact the Frazier-Lemke loan refinancing bill now pending before it

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma (the senate concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized by the Legislature and the people of the State of Oklahoma to enact the Frazier-Lemke loan refinancing bill now pending before that body; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be mailed by the chief clerk of the house of representaitves to the Chief Clerk of both the House of Representatives and Senate of the United States Congress, and to each member of the Oklahoma delegation in Congress.

Adopted by the house of representatives this the 25th day of February 1935.

Adopted by the senate this the 24th day of April 1935.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from the chairman of the board of directors of the Inland Employees' Association, Dayton, Ohio, praying, on behalf of approximately 1,450 employees of the Inland Manufacturing Co., for the prompt enactment of the so-called "Wagner labor-disputes bill", which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at a mass meeting of 2,500 workers held under the auspices of the Custom Tailoring Workers Industrial Union of New York, New York City, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of proposed alien and sedition legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a memorial presented by a delegation composed of members or affiliated members of the New York City Committee of the American League Against War and Fascism, remonstrating on behalf of that organization against the enactment of proposed alien and sedition legislation and all measures proposing to abrogate, limit, or suppress civil rights, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate papers in the nature of petitions from the Sorosis Club and the executive committee of the Federation of Women's Clubs, both of Cleveland, Ohio, and the board of directors of the League of Women Citizens of Asheville, N. C., praying for an investigation of charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana relative to the qualifications of the Senators from Louisiana [Mr. LONG and Mr. OVERTON], which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from the State Negro Citizens' Committee, Columbia, S. C., praying for the enactment of the so-called "Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from the president and board of managers of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, Miami, Fla., praying for the prompt enactment, in the interest of consumers, of Senate bill No. 5, the pure food, drugs, and cosmetics bill, without the so-called "Clark and Bailey amendments" thereto, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Aldermen of the City of Medford, Mass., protesting against the imposition of the cotton-processing tax, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Aerie No. 1702, Fraternal Order of Eagles, of Amesbury, Mass., favoring the enactment of legislation granting monetary assistance to the States in the payment of old-age pensions, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Linton T. Bassett, chairman of the advisory committee of Townsend Club, No. 1, of Orange, Mass., praying for the enactment of the so-called "McGroarty old-age pension and social-security bill", which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the Polish American Club of Springfield, Mass., praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 2827) to provide for the establishment of unemployment, old-age, and social insurance, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Local No. 534, Cement and Asphalt Finishers Union, of Boston, Mass., favoring the enactment of House bills nos. 5450, 6124, 6368, and 6672, relative to a graduated tax on cigarettes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Celtic Social Club, of Holyoke, Mass., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the issuance of a special postage stamp to commemorate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Commodore John Barry, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the City Council of Fall River, Mass., favoring the enactment of legislation awarding the Distinguished Service Cross to John Moran, of Fall River, Mass., for bravery and presence of mind in saving the lives of occupants of a lifeboat after the torpedoing of the U. S. S. Buenaventura in the Bay of Biscay, on September 16, 1918, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a resolution endorsed by the City Council of Leominster, Mass., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the immediate payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the City Council of Leominster, Mass., favoring the removal of all pollution from the Nashau River, in accordance with the proposed plan for a Federal project, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Local Union No. 14, International Union of United Brewery, Flour, Cereal, and Soft Drink Workers of America, of Boston and Vicinity, in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the prompt enactment of the so-called "Black 30-hour work week bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Senate Joint Resolution 14

Relative to memorializing and petitioning the President and the Congress of the United States to include the Central Valley project in the national program of work relief

Whereas California has one of the gravest unemployment problems in the United States, due to the fact that the State has become the haven of unemployed from every section of the country; and

Whereas one of the most constructive methods of coping with the unemployment problem is the building of useful and necessary public works which will confer permanent and lasting benefits as well as afford immediate work relief; and

Whereas California is in urgent need of the development, conservation, and stabilization of its water resources to prevent the abandonment of thousands of farms and homes, and to avert tremendous financial losses; and

Whereas the State of California has prepared a comprehensive coordinated plan for the progressive economic development of the water resources of the State, carefully formulated over a period of 14 years, which provides for the control of floods and salinity encroachment, the improvement of navigation, the conservation and stabilization of water supplies for municipal, irrigation, industrial, and mining uses, and for the generation of electric power; and

Whereas the Legislature of the State of California in 1933 passed the Central Valley project act, which was signed by the Governor, and was thereafter approved by vote of the people of the State at a special election held on December 19, 1933; and

Whereas the said Central Valley project act created the water project authority of the State of California to execute and administer the Central Valley project, which project is designated as the first step in the comprehensive plan for the Great Central Valley of California; and

Whereas said Central Valley project has been investigated and approved by 13 agencies of the Federal Government and has been recommended for Federal financing; and

Whereas said project has further been recommended by the President's Committee on Water Flow and by the National Resources Board as one of the country's foremost projects for a national program of public works; and

Whereas there is now pending before the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works an application by the water project authority for a grant and loan of funds to construct said project; and

Whereas the House of Representatives has passed H. R. 6732, authorizing the improvement of the Sacramento River in accordance with the plan as set forth in House of Representatives' Document No. 35, Seventy-third Congress, which recommends a Federal contribution of $12,000,000 to the cost of the Kennett Dam of the Central Valley project; and

Whereas the said project will be self-liquidating under Public Works Administration financing, and the cost thereof will be returned with interest to the Federal Government from revenues obtained by the sale of water and power; and

Whereas said project is ready for immediate construction when funds are made available for such purpose; and

Whereas the consummation of the said project will enable 50,000 American people to sustain themselves by their present means of livelihood, and will prevent their being thrown into the ranks of the unemployed, and further will stop the reversion to desert of one-half million acres of highly developed and settled lands valued at $100,000,000; and

Whereas a greater degree of flood protection in the Sacramento Valley is highly desirable as evidenced by the recent floods on the Sacramento River and its tributaries; and

Whereas the construction of said project will give employment to thousands of workers now unemployed, not only in California but throughout the Nation, thereby relieving unemployment in many branches of industry, particularly in the heavy manufacturing industries in the East and Middle West; and

Whereas Congress has appropriated $4,880,000,000 for work relief, with the approval of the President of the United States, a large portion of which is intended for projects of the nature of the Central Valley project; and

Whereas the public interest, welfare, convenience, and necessity require immediate provision for adequate financing of said Central Valley project: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the State of California, through its legislature, recommends the Central Valley project to the President and to the Congress of the United States as of first and prime importance to the State of California, and respectfully requests that adequate funds be made available from the work-relief appropriation for immediate construction of the project, thereby conferring lasting benefits upon the people of the State of California and affording substantial unemployment relief now vitally necessary, all in a manner conforming admirably with the splendid program initiated by the President of the United States to speed national recovery; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor is requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and to the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of California in Congress.

CENTRAL BANK OF ISSUE

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a resolution adopted by the Grange of my State on the subject of a centrally controlled bank; also a list of the Granges which have adopted a similar resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution and list were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution

Whereas strenuous efforts are already in evidence in our National Congress to sidetrack or defeat the establishment of a real governmentally owned, controlled, and operated central bank of issue with complete power over currency and credit; and

Whereas Idaho State Grange at its last session, by unanimous vote, asked for the establishment of said bank, considering it of first and basic importance in the reestablishment of normal conditions; and

Whereas we find the ideas and wishes as expressed by the Idaho State Grange, many Pomona and local granges of the State, in connection with the establishment of said bank incorporated in a bill introduced by Congressman LEMKE, known as "H. R. 3008": Now, therefore, be it Resolved by Locust Grange, No. 118, in session duly assembled this 19th day of February 1935, That we respectfully request of our congressional delegates to use their united effort in obtaining the passage of the bill known as "H. R. 3008", or such other bill as is found to contain the same provisions and manner of operation as are contained in H. R. 3008.

Further resolved, That copies of these expressed wishes of this Grange be, without delay, forwarded to our congressional delegation, one to our honored State Grange master, W. W. Deal, one to the National Grange legislation representative, Fred Brenchman, one to President Franklin D. Roosevelt, and one to the press.

LOCUST GROVE GRANGE, No. 118,
THOS. P. POTTER, Master,
ETHEL LEWIS, Secretary.

Submitted to Grange No. 300, Lewiston, Idaho, March 20, 1935; 75 members present; x for, 0 against.

When acted upon please return immediately to the State master.

MARGARET C. LAING, Secretary.

This resolution has been endorsed by the following granges: Grange No. 246, Reynolds, Idaho; Grange No. 302, Westmond, Idaho; Grange No. 282, Boise, Idaho; Grange No. 328, Slickpoo, Idaho; Grange No. 345, Caldwell, Idaho; Grange No. 321, Albion, Idaho; Grange No. 99, Nampa, Idaho; Grange No. 253, Idaho Falls, Idaho; Grange No. 273, Plummer, Idaho; Grange No. 289, May, Idaho; Grange No. 233, Magic, Idaho; Grange No. 25, Meridian, Idaho; Grange No. 274, Salmon, Idaho; Grange No. 258, Idaho Falls, Idaho; Grange No. 22, Grangeville, Idaho; Grange No. 137, Tuttle, Idaho; Grange No. 105, Hazelton, Idaho; Grange No. 2, Payette, Idaho; Grange No. 352, Colburn, Idaho; Grange No. 118, Meridian, Idaho; Grange No. 140, Mountain Home, Idaho; Grange No. 323, Winchester, Idaho; Grange No. 293, Tensed, Idaho; Grange No. 172, Wilder, Idaho; Grange No. 312, Kootenai, Idaho; Grange No. 82, Wendell, Idaho; Grange No. 197, Upper Fairview, Idaho; Grange No. 73, Payette, Idaho; Grange No. 229, Pocatello, Idaho; Grange No. 305, Rigby, Idaho; Grange No. 353, Clarks Fork, Idaho; Grange No. 177, Kennedy Ford, Idaho; Grange No. 303, Sandpoint, Idaho; Grange No. 170, Bowmont, Idaho; Grange No. 244, Maple Grove, Boise, Idaho; Grange No. 175, Boise, Idaho; Grange No. 338, Peck, Idaho; Grange No. 179, Deep Creek, Idaho; Grange No. 234, Bruneau, Idaho; Grange No. 152, Star, Idaho; Grange No. 241, Archer, Idaho; Grange No. 100, Hansen, Idaho; Grange No. 216, Twin Falls, Idaho; Grange No. 349, Arbon, Idaho; Grange No. 225, Pleasant Valley, Idaho; Grange No. 124, Harrison, Idaho; Grange No. 24, St. Anthony, Idaho; Grange No. 357, Ferdinand, Idaho; Grange No. 181, Buhl, Idaho; Grange No. 154, Huston, Idaho; Grange No. 295, Nezperce, Idaho; Grange No. 131, Nampa, Idaho; Grange No. 59, Kuna, Idaho; Grange No. 252, Wilder, Idaho; Grange No. 116, Meridian, Idaho; Grange No. 151, Richfield, Idaho; Grange No. 3, Ruper, Idaho; Grange No. 311, Avon, Idaho; Grange No. 264, Dudley, Idaho; Grange No. 189, Buhl, Idaho; Grange No. 346, Craigmont, Idaho; Grange No. 347, Couer d'Alene, Idaho; Grange No. 285, Garfield, Idaho; Grange No. 135, Caldwell, Idaho; Grange No. 267, Jerome, Idaho; Grange No. 247, Mackay, Idaho; Grange No. 287, St. Leon, Idaho; Grange No. 164, Glenns Ferry, Idaho; Grange No. 278, Blackfoot, Idaho.

ERADICATION OF CATTLE DISEASES

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, the Government is now spending $25,000,000 in an attempt to eradicate Bang's disease from our cattle by slaughtering positive reactors. The Bureau of Animal Industry does not know whether this experiment will work, and likely it will not do better in the future than it has in the past, yet it refuses to abandon this cattle-killing method in favor of more sane and sensible methods. The Department seems to have a farm-animal-killing complex, first hogs, now cattle.

Some years ago it made a test of the Bowman treatment from laboratories in my State, but did not make it according to rules and regulations that have been found effective, and now it refuses to try it at all. It prefers the killing method. While the Department thus fiddles around, cattle die and meat prices mount.

I ask that a letter addressed to Mr. Milo Reno by the late John Thompson, editor of Wallace's Farmer and Iowa Homestead, be inserted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARCH 2, 1935.

Mr. MILO RENO,
President Farmers' Holiday Association,
Des Moines, Iowa.

DEAR MR. RENO: In reply to your telephone request for information concerning the Bowman treatment for contagious abortion in cattle, I take pleasure in making the following statements, which are based upon a great deal of first-hand knowledge derived from visiting herds of cattle that have been given this treatment.

To begin with, let me say that I am familiar with the contention of the Bureau of Animal Industry, Washington, D. C., that some years ago that institution gave the treatment a test and found it to be valueless as a curative agent for contagious abortion. No doubt a test was made, but it was made without regard to Mr. Bowman's methods and recommendations. Bowman has never claimed that one treatment of his remedy would turn a cow reacting positive to the blood test negative, and yet such a test was made by the Government, and on that result it was concluded that the treatment had no value.

Here are some plain facts that cannot be disputed by the Bureau of Animal Industry or anyone else:

The Bowman treatment has, to my knowledge, been applied to the positive cows in many herds, and in the course of from 3 to 12 months over 90 percent of the positive reactors have become negative. It has required several treatments to bring about this change. To contend that such results cannot be secured is ridiculous when facts prove the contrary.

Please understand that the blood test referred to above is the diagnostic agent which the Government and the veterinary profession uses to determine whether a herd of cattle is infected with Bang's disease or not. If, therefore, a course of treatments will turn a positive reacting cow negative and cause the herd to breed and produce calves in a normal manner, it is important that livestock breeders be informed of that fact. To withhold such useful knowledge from the public is nothing short of criminal.

Because the Bureau of Animal Industry did not succeed in turning positive reacting cows negative with one Bowman treatment, it has steadfastly refused to make another test, notwithstanding the fact that Bowman has for years turned positive reacting cows negative and stopped Bang's disease in hundreds of herds.

All that Bowman asks is to let him demonstrate what he can do with a herd infected with this disease in his own way. If he fails to turn from 90 to 100 percent of the positive reacting cows and heifers in any herd negative and fails to put them in good breeding condition, then his treatment is not what he claims it to be. Any man with common sense can ascertain whether or not the Bowman treatment can do what is claimed for it. It is not necessary that a technically trained veterinarian should superintend such a demonstration. Bowman has been doing this thing for years. I hope that you may be able to impress upon the Agricultural Committees of the House and Senate at Washington that they should appoint a committee of their own, free from prejudice for or against the Bowman remedy, and give Bowman an opportunity to prove the efficacy of his remedy in his own way. It is nonsense to say that some great scientific experiment must be conducted by technical men to determine what the Bowman treatment will do when properly administered to a herd of cattle infected with Bang's disease.

Here are a few facts about the Bowman treatment that I wish to call your attention and for which blood-test records are available as proof of the fact that the treatment has caused positive testing cows to become negative.

First, 18 positive cows that had been positive for 2 or more years, according to tests made by a State experiment station, were treated several times with Bowman's, and in less than a year all but one became negative, according to an official test. I could mention several other similar demonstrations of the efficacy of the treatment in eradicating abortion from herds. I am convinced that if the livestock men were apprised of these facts they would eradicate Bang's disease from the cattle of the United States in a few years.

The Government is now spending $25,000,000 in endeavoring to eliminate Bang's disease from our cattle by slaughtering positive reactors, and I seriously doubt whether the head of the Bureau of Animal Industry himself believes that anything of value will accrue from this experiment.

There is something radically wrong when a group of so-called "scientific" men in the employ of the Government is permitted to refuse to let a man demonstrate publicly that he can save the livestock industry millions of dollars annually, especially since he has for years been doing that very thing. Bowman is ready to show the Government what he can do, and he should be given the opportunity.

Yours very truly,

JOHN THOMPSON, Editor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. AUSTIN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1277) authorizing persons, firms, corporations, associations, or societies to file bills of interpleader, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 558) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2472) to pay an annuity to Frances Agramonte, the widow of Dr. Aristides Agramonte, member of the Yellow Fever Commission, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 559) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 2702) for the relief of Multnomah County, Oreg.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 2703) for the relief of Edwin W. Romberger; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. OVERTON:

A bill (S. 2704) for the relief of Clayton M. Thomas; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2705) granting a pension to Eddie R. Guyon;

A bill (S. 2706) granting a pension to Everett Hilliad Harvey;

A bill (S. 2707) granting a pension to Robert Hutchison Owens; and

A bill (S. 2708) granting a pension to Mary Lou Wallace Paul; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 2709) for the relief of the Ingram-Day Lumber Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2710) to amend the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BYRD and Mr. HATCH:

A bill (S. 2711) to amend the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. O'MAHONEY:

A bill (S. 2712) to promote the efficiency of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; to the Committee on Civil Service.

A bill (S. 2713) to authorize the erection of additional facilities at the existing Veterans' Administration facility, Cheyenne, Wyo.; to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

SOCIAL SECURITY—AMENDMENTS

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment and Mr. DICKINSON submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment-compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes, which were severally referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION BILL

Mr. BORAH. I desire to offer an amendment to Senate bill 2367 and ask that the amendment be printed, printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. In connection with the amendment, I also ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement signed by Mr. George Foster Peabody, chairman of the farm tenancy committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. BORAH to the bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, ordered to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill, to insert the following:

"SEC. —. (a) There is hereby created a Farmers' Home Advisory Council, which shall consist of eight members to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. All members of the council shall serve without compensation, but shall be entitled to reimbursement from the Board for traveling expenses incurred in attendance at meetings of the council. The council shall meet at Washington, D. C., at least ——— times each year, and oftener if requested by the Board. The council may, in addition to the meetings above provided for, hold such other meetings in Washington, D. C., or elsewhere, as it may deem necessary. The council may select its chairman and vice chairman, appoint and fix the compensation of a secretary, and adopt methods of procedure, and shall have power—

"(1) To confer with the Board on general business conditions and on special conditions affecting the operations of the Corporation.

"(2) To request information and to make recommendations with respect to matters within the jurisdiction of the Board.

"(b) The Board shall not undertake any general project under this act nor adopt any policy of land acquisition, improvement, or disposition, or any other policy materially affecting the extent of the operations of the Corporation, without first having obtained the aproval of the Council.

"(c) The Board shall pay the necessary expenses of the Council."

The accompanying statement presented by Mr. BORAH was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

STATEMENT ON THE BANKHEAD-JONES FARM TENANCY BILL BY THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON SMALL-FARM OWNERSHIP

No greater problem confronts our rural community than the persistent growth of farm tenancy. Nearly one-half of all our farmers are now tilling land owned by others, and if the present tendency toward converting the independent farmer into a dependent and propertyless tenant continues, then we must abandon hope of achieving a stable and progressive rural civilization. No satisfactory rural community can be either developed or maintained on a tenancy basis. In eight of our States farm tenants represent more than 60 percent of all farm operators. Nor is the problem a sectional one. Ten of the Wheat and Corn Belt States show from one-third to one-half of the farms operated by tenants, and even in such Western States as Montana and Idaho one-fourth of the farm operators are tenants. Nor is the problem a racial one. There are three times as many white as Negro tenants in the United States, and even in the South there are twice as many white as colored farm tenants.

In view of all these facts we consider the proposed bill for the gradual conversion of the tenant into a landowner as one of the most important and constructive pieces of legislation ever voted upon by the Congress of the United States, and the National Committee on Small-Farm Ownership takes this formal occasion to commend Senator BANKHEAD and Congressman JONES for bringing the problem of farm tenancy in the United States before the American Congress, and expresses the hope that the bill which is now before the Senate will be adopted. If passed, it will make possible the growth of a secure and prosperous rural community that owns the land it tills and that can develop to the fullest its share of the great American heritage.

Adopted at a conference of the Committee held in Washington, April 19, 1935.

The National Committee on Small-Farm Ownership: George Foster Peabody, chairman; Dr. Will W. Alexander, director, Commission on Interracial Cooperation; Rev. W. Howard Bishop, past president National Catholic Rural Life Conference; Dr. Edwin R. Embree, president Julius Rosenwald Fund; Dr. Ivan Lee Holt, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America; William Green, American Federation of Labor; Dr. Charles S. Johnson, director, Department of Social Science, Fisk University; F. E. Murphy, the Tribune, Minneapolis, Minn.; Dr. Howard Odum, the University of North Carolina; Charlton Ogburn, counsel, American Federation of Labor; Prof. Frank O'Hara, Catholic University; Dr. Clarence Poe, editor, the Progressive Farmer, Raleigh, N. C.; B. Kirk Rankin, editor, Southern agriculturalist, Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. Edgar Schmiedeler, director, Rural Life Bureau, National Catholic Welfare Conference; M. W. Thatcher, the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union of America; Cal Ward, the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union of America; Benjamin Hubert, president Georgia State College, Savannah; Donald Comer, Avondale Mills, Birmingham, Ala.; Clark Howell, editor, The Atlanta Constitution; Frank O. Lowden, of Illinois; John B. Miller, president Farmers Cooperative Council; Maj. Robert Russa Moton, Tuskegee Institute, Alabama; Rt. Rev. John A. Ryan, National Catholic Welfare Conference; Edgar B. Stern, New Orleans, La.; Louis J. Taber, president the National Grange; Gen. Robert E. Wood, president Sears Roebuck, Chicago, Ill.; J. F. Jackson, general agricultural agent, Central of Georgia Railway; and Hugh McRae, president Southeastern Council.

EXTENSION OF NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT

Mr. KING. I send to the clerk's desk an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending N. R. A. measure, being Senate bill No. 2445, which is now before the Finance Committee. I ask that the amendment submitted by me be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be received, referred as indicated by the Senator from Utah, and printed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the amendment which I have submitted as a substitute for the Harrison bill is designed to supplement existing laws against monopolies, restraints of trade, and price discrimination. In effect, it is a supplement to the Federal Trade Commission Act, following out and extending the present policy of the Commission in dealing with unfair competition through trade-practice conferences. The amendment, if adopted, will permit the Federal Trade Commission to invite the members of trades or industries or subdivisions thereof to a trade-practice conference for consideration and submission to the Commission of agreements initiated and voluntarily entered into by such members. These agreements must be in strict compliance with the policy declared in the proposed substitute to preserve the antitrust laws in full vigor. The proposed amendment does, however, specify that the agreements shall provide rules of business conduct for the accomplishment of certain purposes, all designed to encourage full and fair competition. After the conference, if the Commission finds that the agreements are salutary and will not lessen competition, restrain trade, or tend to create a monopoly, it shall so advise the industry. If, however, the Commission makes a contrary finding, the industry is so advised, a hearing is held, and if thereafter the opinion of the Commission remains unchanged it shall issue an order to cease and desist from carrying out the agreements.

Procedure will, of course, be the same as provided in existing law for issuance of orders under the Federal Trade Commission Act. In other words, review and enforcement of orders is had in the United States circuit court of appeals, subject to appeal to the Supreme Court in proper cases.

The second part of the proposal is to declare certain practices unfair methods of competition within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended. These are in substance the so-called "labor provisions" of the National Industrial Recovery Act and the Harrison bill, except that administration is lodged with the Federal Trade Commission. Authority is given for the Federal Trade Commission to provide minimum wages and maximum hours for any trade or industry or subdivision thereof engaged in commerce. These standards must be fair and reasonable and calculated to promote or maintain fair competition. Here, too, the Commission is authorized to proceed as at present under the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

It is conceivable that the Federal Trade Commission may at this time possess in some measure the authority specified in the proposal. If so, it will be highly advantageous to encourage the Commission to take such jurisdiction; and, as a safeguard, it is provided that the measure shall not be construed to limit the jurisdiction of the Commission under existing law. Accordingly, even upon the expiration of the act, which I have fixed at 1 year, the Commission will continue to retain unimpaired any jurisdiction it may now have and which may be covered by the proposed substitute.

INVESTIGATION RELATIVE TO NATURAL GAS

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, on March 16 last I submitted a resolution, which is designated as "Senate Resolution 108", which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. We have consulted with the Federal Trade Commission, and I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Federal Trade Commission dated April 6, 1935, as a reason for not prosecuting the consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 6, 1935.

Hon. BURTON K. WHEELER,
Chairman Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Senate Resolution 108

MY DEAR SENATOR: This is in acknowledgment and reply to your letter of April 3.

Referring to Senate Resolution 108, directing an investigation by your committee into certain matters therein specified relative to the production, distribution, and sale of natural gas, you say:

"I would appreciate it if this committee could have your comment on this proposed legislation and any material which would be helpful to the committee."

Pursuant to the Senate's direction, given in Senate Resolution 83, Seventieth Congress, first session, as extended through the current year by Senate Joint Resolution 115, Seventy-third Congress, second session, the Federal Trade Commission is already well on its way in its investigation into the natural-gas industry, including natural-gas production and natural-gas pipe lines, and retail distribution of natural gas. Under the extension directed by Congress to the end of the present calendar year, the Commission has directed its utilities staffs, both economic and legal, to devote practically all of their time to the natural-gas and natural-gas pipe-line industries. Engineering surveys are also being made of the physical properties devoted to the natural-gas business including problems of conservation, production, transportation, and operations.

Under separate cover I am sending you a copy of Federal Trade Commission Report, part 68 (Senate print), which contains a report on the general gas situation in the United States (ex. 6068). This is printed beginning at page 819. Colonel Chantland's statement as to the situation and Mr. Carter's testimony begin at page 174. This covers substantially the first part of point 9 of the resolution.

Already examinations have been made and reports sent to the Senate on corporations in the natural-gas and pipe-line industry, including some on the examination of physical properties, as follows: Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation (Morgan) (Senate print, pts. 47, 49, 52, 64, 68); and on its subsidiaries, Manufacturers Light & Heat Co., Columbia Gas Construction Co., Union Gas & Electric Co., Ohio Fuel Corporation, Columbia Securities Corporation (Senate print, pt. 47), United Fuel Gas Co., Huntington Gas Co., Cincinnati Gas Transportation Co., American Fuel & Power Co. (Senate print, pts. 49, 52), Southwestern Gas & Electric Co. (former Dawes interests, Senate print, pt. 68).

The following companies of Cities Service Corporation (Doherty interests): Cities Service Gas Co., Cities Service Gas Pipe Line Co., Gas Service Co., Kansas City Gas Co. (Senate print, pts. 67, 70).

There has also been a report presented on the Natural Gas Pipe Line of America (Senate print, pt. 62). This company owns a pipe line from the Texas Panhandle to Chicago and is jointly owned by the Cities Service Co., Natural Gas Investment Co. (Insull), Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, Southwestern Development Co., the Texas Co., and Columbian Carbon Co.

In addition to the above, examinations have been completed and reports are nearing completion on the American Natural Gas Corporation and Southern Natural Gas Corporation.

Examinations are in progress on the following natural-gas and natural-gas pipe line companies: Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line Co., United Gas Corporation, Lone Star Gas Corporation, Lone Star Gas Co., Northern Natural Gas Co., Kansas Pipe Line & Gas Co., Washington Gas Light Co.

In all of these examinations and reports attention is given to substantially all of the points covered in the resolution. It is for the Senate to say whether a task, already assigned to this Commission by the Senate and well in progress, need also be done by a committee of the Senate with the considerable duplication that would seem inevitable.

Very truly yours,

EDWIN L. DAVIS, Chairman.

ISSUANCE OF UNITED STATES NOTES

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, there has been considerable interest and discussion respecting the use of United States notes during the Civil War period. I asked the Secretary of the Treasury for an official report respecting their current value at the time. His responsive letter is exceedingly illuminating, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington.

Hon. A. H. VANDENBERG,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: For the Secretary of the Treasury, receipt is acknowledged of your letter of April 25, requesting statistics and related information on the depreciation of United States notes ("greenbacks") during the Civil War period.

The following table shows the average gold value of United States notes each calendar year during the suspension of specie payments, January 1, 1862, to January 1, 1879:

1862	88.3
1863	68.9
1864	49.2
1865	63.6
1866	71.0
1867	72.4
1868	71.6
1869	75.2
1870	87.0
1871	89.5
1872	89.0
1873	87.9
1874	89.9
1875	87.0
1876	89.8
1877	95.4
1878	99.2

Assistant to the Secretary.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the radio address delivered by the President of the United States on last evening, April 28, 1935, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Since my annual message to the Congress on January 4, last, I have not addressed the general public over the air. In the many weeks since that time the Congress has devoted itself to the arduous task of formulating legislation necessary to the country's welfare. It has made and is making distinct progress.

Before I come to any of the specific measures, however, I want to leave in your minds one clear fact. The administration and the Congress are not proceeding in any haphazard fashion in this task of government. Each of our steps has a definite relationship to every other step. The job of creating a program for the Nation's welfare is, in some respects, like the building of a ship. At different points on the coast where I often visit they build great seagoing ships. When one of these ships is under construction and the steel frames have been set in the keel, it is difficult for a person who does not know ships to tell how it will finally look when it is sailing the high seas.

It may seem confused to some, but out of the multitude of detailed parts that go into the making of the structure the creation of a useful instrument for man ultimately comes. It is that way with the making of a national policy. The objective of the Nation has greatly changed in 3 years. Before that time individual self-interest and group selfishness were paramount in public thinking. The general good was at a discount.

Three years of hard thinking have changed the picture. More and more people, because of clearer thinking and a better understanding, are considering the whole rather than a mere part relating to one section or to one crop, or to one industry, or to an individual private occupation. That is a tremendous gain for the principles of democracy. The overwhelming majority of people in this country know how to sift the wheat from the chaff in what they hear and what they read. They know that the process of the constructive rebuilding of America cannot be done in a day or a year, but that it is being done in spite of the few who seek to confuse them and to profit by their confusion. Americans as a whole are feeling a lot better—a lot more cheerful than for many, many years.

The most difficult place in the world to get a clear and open perspective of the country as a whole is Washington. I am reminded sometimes of what President Wilson once said: "So many people come to Washington who know things that are not so, and so few people who know anything about what the people of the United States are thinking about." That is why I occasionally leave this scene of action for a few days to go fishing or back home to Hyde Park so that I can have a chance to think quietly about the country as a whole. "To get away from the trees," as they say, "and to look at the whole forest." This duty of seeing the country in a long-range perspective is one which, in a very special manner, attaches to this office to which you have chosen me. Did you ever stop to think that there are, after all, only two positions in the Nation that are filled by the vote of all of the voters—the President and the Vice President? That makes it particularly necessary for the Vice President and for me to conceive of our duty toward the entire country. I speak, therefore, tonight to and of the American people as a whole.

My most immediate concern is in carrying out the purposes of the great work program just enacted by the Congress. Its first objective is to put men and women now on relief rolls to work and, incidentally, to assist materially in our already unmistakable march toward recovery. I shall not confuse my discussion by a multitude of figures. So many figures are quoted to prove so many things. Sometimes it depends upon what paper you read and what broadcast you hear. Therefore let us keep our minds on two or three simple essential facts in connection with this problem of unemployment. It is true that while business and industry are definitely better our relief rolls are still too large. However, for the first time in 5 years the relief rolls have declined instead of increased during the winter months. They are still declining. The simple fact is that many million more people have private work today than 2 years ago today or 1 year ago today, and every day that passes offers more chances to work for those who want to work. In spite of the fact that unemployment remains a serious problem here, as in every other nation, we have come to recognize the possibility and the necessity of certain helpful remedial measures. These measures are of two kinds. The first is to make provisions intended to relieve, to minimize, and to prevent future unemployment; the second is to establish the practical means to help those who are unemployed in this present emergency. Our social-security legislation is an attempt to answer the first of these questions. Our work-relief program the second.

The program for social security now pending before the Congress is a necessary part of the future unemployment policy of the Government. While our present and projected expenditures for work relief are wholly within the reasonable limits of our national credit resources, it is obvious that we cannot continue to create governmental deficits for that purpose year after year. We must begin now to make provision for the future. That is why our social-security program is an important part of the complete picture. It proposes, by means of old-age pensions, to help those who have reached the age of retirement to give up their jobs and thus give to the younger generation greater opportunities for work and to give to all a feeling of security as they look toward old age.

The unemployment-insurance part of the legislation will not only help to guard the individual in future periods of lay-off against dependence upon relief, but it will, by sustaining purchasing power, cushion the shock of economic distress. Another helpful feature of unemployment insurance is the incentive it will give to employers to plan more carefully in order that unemployment may be prevented by the stabilizing of employment itself.

Provisions of social security, however, are protections for the future. Our responsibility for the immediate necessities of the unemployed has been met by the Congress through the most comprehensive work plan in the history of the Nation. Our problem is to put to work three and one-half million employable persons now on the relief rolls. It is a problem quite as much for private industry as for the Government.

We are losing no time getting the Government's vast work-relief program under way and we have every reason to believe that it should be in full swing by autumn. In directing it, I shall recognize six fundamental principles:

(1) The projects should be useful.

(2) Projects shall be of a nature that a considerable proportion of the money spent will go into wages for labor.

(3) Projects which promise ultimate return to the Federal Treasury of a considerable proportion of the costs will be sought.

(4) Funds allotted for each project should be actually and promptly spent and not held over until later years.

(5) In all cases projects must be of a character to give employment to those on the relief rolls.

(6) Projects will be allocated to localities or relief areas in relation to the number of workers on relief rolls in those areas.

I next want to make it clear exactly how we shall direct the work:

(1) I have set up a Division of Applications and Information, to which all proposals for the expenditure of money must go for preliminary study and consideration.

(2) After the Division of Applications and Information has sifted these projects, they will be sent to an Allotment Division composed of representatives of the more important governmental agencies charged with carrying on work-relief projects. The group will also include representatives of cities and of labor, farming, banking, and industry. This Allotment Division will consider all of the recommendations submitted to it, and such projects as they approve will be next submitted to the President, who under the act is required to make final allocations.

(3) The next step will be to notify the proper Government agency in whose field the project falls, and also to notify another agency which I am creating—a Progress Division. This Division will have the duty of coordinating the purchase of materials and supplies and of making certain that people who are employed will be taken from the relief rolls. It will also have the responsibility of determining work payments in various localities, of making full use of existing employment services, and to assist people engaged in relief work to move as rapidly as possible back into private employment when such employment is available. Moreover, this Division will be charged with keeping projects moving on schedule.

(4) I have felt it to be essentially wise and prudent to avoid, so far as possible, the creation of new governmental machinery for supervising this work. The National Government now has at least 60 different agencies with the staff and the experience and the competence necessary to carry on the 250 or 300 kinds of work that will be undertaken. These agencies, therefore, will simply be doing on a somewhat enlarged scale the same sort of things that they have been doing. This will make certain that the largest possible portion of the funds allotted will be spent for actually creating new work and not for building up expensive overhead organizations here in Washington.

For many months preparations have been under way. The allotment of funds for desirable projects has already begun. The key men for the major responsibilities of this great task already have been selected. I well realize that the country is expecting before this year is out to see the "dirt fly", as they say, in carrying on the work, and I assure my fellow citizens that no energy will be spared in using these funds effectively to make a major attack upon the problem of unemployment.

Our responsibility is to all of the people in this country. This is a great national crusade to destroy enforced idleness which is an enemy of the human spirit generated by this depression. Our attack upon these enemies must be without stint and without discrimination. No sectional, no political distinctions, can be permitted. It must, however, be recognized that when an enterprise of this character is extended over more than 3,000 counties throughout the Nation there may be occasional instances of inefficiency, bad management, or misuse of funds. When cases of this kind occur there will be those, of course, who will try to tell you that the exceptional failure is characteristic of the entire endeavor. It should be remembered that in every big job there are some imperfections. There are chiselers in every walk of life; there are those in every industry who are guilty of unfair practices, every profession has its black sheep; but long experience in government has taught me that the exceptional instances of wrongdoing in government are probably less numerous than in almost every other line of endeavor. The most effective means of preventing such evils in this work-relief program will be the eternal vigilance of the American people themselves. I call upon my fellow citizens everywhere to cooperate with me in making this the most efficient and the cleanest example of public enterprise the world has ever seen. It is time to provide a smashing answer for those cynical who say that a democracy cannot be honest and efficient. If you will help, this can be done. I therefore hope you will watch the work in every corner of this Nation. Feel free to criticize. Tell me of instances where work can be done better or where improper practices prevail. Neither you nor I want criticism conceived in a purely fault-finding or partisan spirit, but I am jealous of the right of every citizen to call to the attention of his or her Government examples of how the public money can be more effectively spent for the benefit of the American people.

I now come, my friends, to a part of the remaining business before the Congress. It has under consideration many measures which provide for the rounding out of the program of economic and social reconstruction with which we have been concerned for 2 years. I can mention only a few of them tonight, but I do not want my mention of specific measures to be interpreted as lack of interest in or disapproval of many other important proposals that are pending.

The National Industrial Recovery Act expires on the 16th of June. After careful consideration, I have asked the Congress to extend the life of this useful agency of government. As we have proceeded with the administration of this act, we have found from time to time more and more useful ways of promoting its purposes. No reasonable person wants to abandon our present gains; we must continue to protect children, to enforce minimum wages, to prevent excessive hours, to safeguard, define, and enforce collective bargaining, and, while retaining fair competition, to eliminate, so far as humanly possible, the kinds of unfair practices by selfish minorities which unfortunately did more than anything else to bring about the recent collapse of industries.

There is likewise pending before the Congress legislation to provide for the elimination of unnecessary holding companies in the public-utility field.

I consider this legislation a positive recovery measure. Power production in this country is virtually back to the 1929 peak. The operating companies in the gas and electric utility field are by and large in good condition. But under holding-company domination the utility industry has long been hopelessly at war within itself and with public sentiment. By far the greater part of the general decline in utility securities had occurred before I was inaugurated. The absentee management of unnecessary holding-company control has lost touch with and has lost the sympathy of the communities it pretends to serve. Even more significantly it has given the country as a whole an uneasy apprehension of overconcentrated economic power.

A business that loses the confidence of its customers and the goodwill of the public cannot long continue to be a good risk for the investor. This legislation will serve the investor by ending the conditions which have caused that lack of confidence and good will. It will put the public-utility operating industry on a sound basis for the future, both in its public relations and in its internal relations.

This legislation will not only in the long run result in providing lower electric and gas rates to the consumer, but it will protect the actual value and earning power of properties now owned by thousands of investors who have little protection under the old laws against what used to be called frenzied finance. It will not destroy values.

Not only business recovery, but the general economic recovery of the Nation will be greatly stimulated by the enactment of legislation designed to improve the status of our transportation agencies. There is need for legislation providing for the regulation of interstate transportation by busses and trucks, to regulate transportation by water, new provisions for strengthening our merchant marine and air transport, measures for the strengthening of the Interstate Commerce Commission to enable it to carry out a rounded conception of the national transportation system in which the benefits of private ownership are retained, while the public stake in these important services is protected by the public's Government.

Finally, the reestablishment of public confidence in the banks of the Nation is one of the most hopeful results of our efforts as a Nation to reestablish public confidence in private banking. We all know that private banking actually exists by virtue of the permission of and regulation by the people as a whole, speaking through their Government. Wise public policy, however, requires not only that banking be safe but that its resources be most fully utilized in the economic life of the country. To this end it was decided more than 20 years ago that the Government should assume the responsibility of providing a means by which the credit of the Nation might be controlled, not by a few private banking institutions but by a body with public prestige and authority. The answer to this demand was the Federal Reserve System. Twenty years of experience with this System have justified the efforts made to create it, but these 20 years have shown by experience definite possibilities for improvement. Certain proposals made to amend the Federal Reserve Act deserve prompt and favorable action by the Congress. They are a minimum of wise readjustment of our Federal Reserve System in the light of past experience and present needs.

These measures I have mentioned are, in large part, the program which under my constitutional duty I have recommended to the Congress. They are essential factors in a rounded program for national recovery. They contemplate the enrichment of our national life by a sound and rational ordering of its various elements and wise provisions for the protection of the weak against the strong. Never since my inauguration in March 1933 have I felt so unmistakably the atmosphere of recovery. But it is more than the recovery of the material basis of our individual lives. It is the recovery of confidence in our democratic processes and institutions. We have survived all of the arduous burdens and the threatening dangers of a great economic calamity. We have in the darkest moments of our national trials retained our faith in our own ability to master our destiny. Fear is vanishing and confidence is growing on every side, renewed faith in the vast possibilities of human beings to improve their material and spiritual status through the instrumentality of the democratic form of government. That faith is receiving its just reward. For that we can be thankful to the God who watches over America.

ADDRESS BY POSTMASTER GENERAL FARLEY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the radio address delivered in New York on Saturday night, April 27, 1935, by the Postmaster General, Hon. James A. Farley, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, at the banquet in celebration of the one hundred and ninety-second birthday of Thomas Jefferson.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At the outset of my remarks this evening I want to take this opportunity of expressing to the committee having this affair in charge most sincere and heartfelt thanks for the courtesy which they have extended to me in permitting me to address this very delightful gathering. It makes me particularly happy because of the fact that I have been a member of this club for many, many years and have been one of its vice presidents for several years.

Let me begin my message to you with congratulating New York on having a Democratic Governor at this time. I mean a real Democratic Governor—not one who merely wears the party emblem while he devotes himself to self-advertisement and announces himself as the evangel of some wild-eyed scheme to make everybody rich.

I don't mean to tell you that Governor Lehman is the only competent State executive in the Union. Such times as we have been going through tend to bring to the surface extreme fanatics and opportunists. In this respect the Empire State has reason to felicitate itself.

But I didn't come here to discuss State politics or State officials, interesting and important though they are. I do want to talk to you about the national political situation, the record that the Democratic administration has made, and the necessity for the continuation of the great work that was begun so dramatically on March 4, 1933, and that has progressed so amazingly that every business index shows industrial progress and well-being.

In fact, business has become so healthy that a lot of people have forgotten the period when they begged the Government to find some sort of life raft on which they could keep afloat, and when, incidentally, they proclaimed that Franklin D. Roosevelt had effected the salvation of our economic system. Now some of these same people are criticizing the President because he is adhering to the course he laid out in his inaugural address.

They have been made secure and they object to his going on to effect security for others.

Did you ever know an executive of definite views whose policies were not criticized, whether he was the President of the United States or the engineer of the train on which you travel? I don't think I ever made a journey where some of my fellow passengers were not complaining that we were going too fast or too slow or who failed to blame the man in the engine cab for the bumps consequent on the roughness of the road—complaints that even those who uttered them forgot when we had safely reached our destination. It is the same way with our political government. From Washington down, our greatest Presidents functioned under a barrage of complaint frequently reaching the point of defamation, and yet history records their administrations as conspicuous successes and we rear in grateful memory monuments to those who in their terms were called aristocrats or anarchists, despots or defectives. I don't recall seeing any monuments to those who threw the bricks, though they made a lot of noise in their day.

It's a curious thing that so many people think they can run this Government of ours better than the people they elected to do the job. It is perhaps even more curious that the most vociferous of these are the very men who made a hash of their own affairs—the Republican politicians who permitted our country to drift into the depression mess without sensing that it was imminent, and who for 3 years after the initial crash stood by, bewildered and planless, while things went from bad to worse, and did nothing about it. These men, who had had complete control of the Government for a dozen years, and those others who, after piling up great fortunes, had not the wit or wisdom to hold onto them, are the people who are now the most clamorous in opposition to the Roosevelt administration. These are the people who ask you to believe that they know more about putting out a vast conflagration than the officials who have been fighting the fire and have reduced it to the smoldering stage.

The one great disastrous defect of the emergency program is that it came 3 years too late. Had it been undertaken in 1929 instead of 1933 and been carried through with the vigor that has characterized the efforts of the present administration, we would not now be worrying about the dole and $5,000,000,000 relief funds.

Now, I am going to let you into an administration secret. Who is the man more distressed about the length of the unemployment roll, the size of the dole account, and the vastness of the relief measure—more concerned than the reactionary organizations or big business or the political quacks with their mad schemes for distributing the wealth of the country? I'll tell you. It is the man who has to meet the problems and shoulder the responsibility. Franklin D. Roosevelt has the job, and, unlike some of his predecessors, has no disposition to shirk it. Yes; I have in mind the same man you have—the gentleman who recently issued a message to the Republicans full of platitudes about the evils of bureaucracy and the necessity of a return to normal processes, but gave no word as to how he would handle the job if he had another shot at it.

I might refer here likewise to Senator DICKINSON, of Iowa, who apparently has the notion that he may be the Republican white hope in 1936. He explained the other day to a Virginia audience that it was an easy matter to devise a plan that would raise us out of the depression, but was no more informative about what plan he would suggest than was the ex-President. I think I have some standing as a political prognosticator, and in my opinion the Senator from Iowa had better look after his present post rather than to the sterile distinction of being the Republican candidate for President in 1936, for I miss my guess if Mr. DICKINSON does not join the melancholy order of ex-Senators after November next year. He is a hang-over of the period of Smoot and Arthur Robinson, Fess, and Moses, and belongs in the historical museum with them, and every word the National Committee gets from Iowa confirms me in my belief that he will find his appropriate niche in the group.

Then there is that other Republican statesman, the Honorable Ogden Mills, worthy successor to Andrew Mellon as Secretary of the Treasury in the last administration. He, too, is shocked and grieved at President Roosevelt's activity. He is full of forebodings lest the vast program to substitute work for doles shall plunge the country into a ghastly crisis. I admit that Ogden Mills should be an authority of economic catastrophes. He was a conspicuous part of the administration that led us into the worst depression in our history. That administration let us tumble into that abyss without a word of warning and did not do a thing toward helping us out of the black hole. However, New York may be trusted to take care of Mr. Mills if he ever comes to the political surface again—just as it did on other occasions.

Likewise, among the self-appointed guardians of the Constitution, who are viewing with alarm the national strides toward recovery, is one more statesman, Colonel Roosevelt, better known perhaps as "Teddy the Little", President of the New York National Republican Club. Now I don't venture to assert that he is another Republican "white hope" for 1936, but stranger things have happened. I remember, for example, a gubernatorial election in this State. In that election the important figures in the New York G. O. P. fled from the nomination as from a pestilence, so they let "Fifth Cousin Teddy" hold the bag. In short, his party is so enthusiastic for him that it is willing to nominate him for anything where defeat is a foregone conclusion, and on that basis the principle might be extended to the national field.

In accepting the presidency of the New York Republican Club, the G. O. P.'s burnt offering told with considerable passion what he thought of the new deal. He did not refer to one conspicuous act of the Democratic administration—the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. In this connection we might hark back to another of the colonel's speeches of acceptance—that in which he took the futile gubernatorial nomination. The man who won that election was Alfred E. Smith. There was no question where he stood on prohibition. But little Teddy, with his usual political acumen, took the other side. Said he, "I shall do all in my power to secure the enactment of proper statutes to assist our peace officers in the enforcement of this act of Congress."

Senator Calder, himself one of the early Republican casualties, mournfully announced that Colonel Roosevelt's stand against modification was the main cause of his defeat.

For a time those who would seek prosperity by a return to the system that brought us to the verge of national bankruptcy proclaimed that under the new deal we had made no progress at all. Swept from this anchorage by the flood of statistics of gains all along the line, they proclaimed that we would have worked out of the slump without any Government intervention. Let us look into that absurd contention for a moment. Cast your mind back to March 1933—with banks toppling like tenpins and the whole country in a panic. Franklin D. Roosevelt stopped that on his first day in the White House by closing all the banks until the solvent could be segregated from the insolvent. After he got the banks to functioning in orderly fashion, we had no more of bank runs and bank failures. Will anybody contend that the measure of recovery we have attained would have come if the President had not had the wisdom and the courage to take that drastic step?

To listen to the critics of the administration one might suppose that the President of the United States wanted the $4,800,000,000 relief fund to gratify some whim or hobby of his own. He would be a queer sort of individual if he set about incurring all the grief, worry, and work of administering that fund unless he felt—in fact, unless he knew—that all the anxiety and labor coincident with it was necessary and a great step toward completing the job he undertook to get this country out of the depression; and, what is of no less importance, to keep it on the plateau once we have climbed the long hill. He might have, for example, asked for this money by installments. He might have been willing to leave its distribution in the hands of Congress. But, let me ask you, Do you think that either of these alternative processes would have accomplished what he is trying to accomplish? The installment system would have involved indefinite delay in the fulfillment of the hope of getting all the unemployed capable of employment into jobs. Leaving it to Congress to say where and when and how the money should be spent would have retarded the program. No one knows better than I the problems of a Congressman and a Senator, and it would be unfair to them and their constituents to place upon their shoulders the responsibility of promptly allocating the funds to be distributed under the work-relief measure.

In the administration of the work-relief program, reaching as it will to every city, town, and hamlet in the broad expanse of our entire country, the American people I know will place their trust in the wisdom of President Roosevelt. He will administer the program impartially; he will administer it sympathetically; he will administer it with a solemn realization of what its accomplishment will mean towards return of normal economic life to the citizens of the country.

The work-relief legislation is the knockout blow to the depression. Administered properly it will give the impetus to business and industry that will help economic recovery onward on the upward road that it has been following since President Roosevelt undertook to bring a sane program for recovery into the industrial and financial chaos of 1932 and early 1933.

I rest content that the American people will give this latest recovery measure their undivided support and cooperation, so that the legislation may justify the faith that the administration and the leaders repose in it.

Some people fail to realize how far we have traveled on the way to recovery. The critics of the administration ignore the figures and seek to convey that our plight is as desperate as it was when we were in the depression's deepest hole. They point to the number of people on relief rolls, as if that were the only index to the real state of the country. Whereas, for various reasons, to some of which I have referred, it is not in any way an accurate index.

I am not overfond of statistics, but I think you will agree with me that the one unfailing yardstick for how the country is getting along is the income-tax collections. Last month's collections, for example, were $90,000,000 more than those of March 1933, and nearly double those of March 1932. We have figures for the first 9 months of the current fiscal year and we find an increase of more than $200,000,000 over the corresponding period last year. As the taxes paid represent roughly 5 percent on the incomes, these figures would show that despite the lamentations and croakings of those who are looking for faults and flaws, the income-tax paying people of this country netted about $4,000,000,000 more than they did during the same time of the previous year. Now take what the statisticians describe as the national income, which means the net value of the goods and services produced or rendered. According to the National Industrial Conference Board's annual estimate, which was just issued, we were $6,000,000,000 richer in 1934 than we were in 1933.

It does not matter where you tap the record, whether in bank deposits, or farm products, or corporation gains, or pay rolls, you get the same picture of a rising economic barometer. The last report of the Department of Commerce showed that in February industrial pay rolls were $11,000,000 more per week than in January. According to the reports from 27 automobile-manufacturing plants the last week in March showed an all-time high mark in production, and the General Motors Corporation announces that it sold more cars last month than during any March since 1929.

These figures mean something and what they mean to the business world is told by Dun & Bradstreet's Weekly Survey just issued. There is nothing political, nothing pollyanna about that cold-nosed document, which says: "Evidences are multiplying that before the conclusion of the current quarter business progress will have developed to a degree beyond the most sanguine estimates offered at the beginning of the year. Sentiment has shown a complete transformation."

"But", the critics groan, "look at all the money the Government is handing out." Well, let's look at that. We find that about 2,000 farmers repaid their loans in full during February. We find that 83 percent of all the farmers who were granted loans through the land banks have met their interest payments. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is taking in money faster than it is paying it out, and in a review of its balance sheet issued on the last day of March, this central financial agency of the Government reports that 53 percent of all the money it has loaned has been repaid. Well, you have only to look at the market reports in the newspapers to see that all the Government bonds are above par and the Treasury points out that despite the increase in the public debt the Government is paying less interest on that indebtedness than it did a year ago, and I don't think any other nation in the world is able to make as solid a showing.

So you see we are getting along pretty well; and, in the face of these figures, you can put your own estimate on the value of the reports so industrially being circulated by the political foes of the administration that the President is no longer a popular idol. These statements represent a hope of those who would like to see the Government given back to the control of the same group that ran the ship of state on the depression rock 3 years ago, and did absolutely nothing toward getting us afloat while they remained in power. They talked the same way before the congressional election of 1934, and the people's answer was the highest tribute they have paid an administration in our country's history. If there were an election tomorrow you would see no change in the expression of sentiment from that of last November. Franklin D. Roosevelt has done and is doing a great job, and however particular groups may criticize the measures that they think are hampering their individual forays, the people of the country realize what the prosperity figures mean. In addition to that group of critics there are, of course, the outfits that always attempt to create and capitalize unrest—the quacks of politics and economics who talk about the redistribution of wealth and seek to allure the American people into adopting policies which they promise would make everybody rich. The lure of these doctrines naturally appeals to the fellow out of a job on the hypothesis that any change could not make him worse off. We have experienced these agitations before and we have seen them flourish and bloom, but inevitably the hard, common sense of the American people has prevailed. We will find that as pay rolls increase and as business men return to the normal processes of their craft and are willing to take the same chances that brought them success before the crash frightened them, the prophets of Utopia will be forgotten.

Of course, the President's task in bringing order out of chaos and contentment out of misery is not being made any easier by the constant efforts of this or that group to persuade the people that conditions are desperate and that we are headed toward final destruction. The greatest element in restoring prosperity is the creation of confidence. Everything that tends to the destruction of confidence delays recovery. Some men, because of personal ambition, political expediency, or a desire to help themselves regardless of how they harm the country, are trying to break down the faith of the people in President Roosevelt. They think that they or their political organizations might profit. But even there they are wrong. In the first place, the country will never deliberately precipitate itself either into chaos or into the arms of the old exploiting, reactionary group. In the second place, the President's hold on the country is too close to be threatened, must less destroyed.

The people have faith in him as he has faith in them. It has been so since the dawn of his administration. It took only a word from him in March 1933 to still whatever there was of anxiety over the total bank holiday. He said then, as he says now, "Let us unite in banishing fear. We have provided the machinery of restoration; it is up to you to support it and make it work. It is your problem no less than it is mine. Together we cannot fail."

RAILROAD REORGANIZATION—STATEMENT ON BEHALF OF INDEPENDENT BONDHOLDERS' COMMITTEE

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement submitted by Prof. Charles A. Beard on behalf of the independent bondholders' committee in connection with railroad reorganization.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUPPLEMENTAL STATEMENT SUBMITTED BY CHARLES A. BEARD ON BEHALF OF INDEPENDENT BONDHOLDERS COMMITTEE TO UNITED STATES SENATE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE

On March 26, 1935, the Honorable Charles D. Mahaffie, a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, was questioned by the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the United States Senate. He was asked specifically about the railroad reorganization law which was passed by Congress on March 3, 1933. The following is a quotation from the record before the Senate committee:

"The CHAIRMAN. And you think it important that section 77 should be revised or amended, do you?

"Mr. MAHAFFIE. I think it is vital. I think we cannot proceed very far with reorganizations that will stand up under the present section 77. It has got to be revised."

On the following day the Honorable Joseph B. Eastman, Federal Coordinator of Transportation, appeared before the same committee. He also said that the railroad reorganization law, which is section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, should be revised. When Mr. Mahaffie appeared before the Senate committee he spoke, of course, only for himself and not for the Commission as a whole. However, he is a member of Division 4 of the Interstate Commerce Commission—the division which deals with railroad finance—and had many years' experience with the subject previously as a director of the Bureau of Finance. Mr. Eastman has also been for a number of years a member of Division 4 of the Interstate Commerce Commission. When these two Government officials agree on the vital importance of a change in the railroad reorganization law, passed as recently as 2 years ago, it is appropriate to inquire into the difficulty to which they point and into the circumstances which may have a bearing on that difficulty.

THE WINDFALL FOR THE VAN SWERINGEN BANKERS

Senator WHEELER, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, called attention to the fact that under the railroad reorganization law of 1933 the Van Sweringens and their bankers, controlling more than one-third of the stock of the Missouri-Pacific Railroad Co., are in a position to block for a long time any reorganization of that road unsatisfactory to themselves. Referring to this power lodged in any group in control of more than one-third of the stock of a railroad, Mr. Eastman said to the Senate committee:

"In event that more than one-third are unwilling, a reorganization can be held up unless you have a long proceeding, with valuations, and so forth, by which you can demonstrate the fact that the company is technically insolvent under the law and must get rid of its stock."

Mr. Eastman also told the Senate committee that under the railroad reorganization law of 1933, creditors who can get themselves classified as a special group by themselves are also in a position to block reorganization. He told the Senate committee that J. P. Morgan & Co. had achieved this very position for themselves with respect to reorganization of the Missouri-Pacific Railroad.

The tactical position thus obtained by the Van Sweringens and their bankers as a result of the passage of the railroad reorganization law of 1933, is a value to them of the greatest importance. The practical position of affairs with respect to such railroads as the Missouri-Pacific Railroad Co. is such today that the tactical advantage obtained by the Van Sweringens and their bankers as a result of the reorganization statute constitutes one of the greatest gifts ever received from our Government in all the history of American finance.

The fact that such a gift, or indeed any gift, may be carved out by the bankers was not at the time discussed in Congress. From that day until recently, for a period of 2 years, the sorry truth, concealed behind an apparently beneficent statute, has remained hidden from Congress. Full disclosure of the circumstances surrounding the affair is imperatively needed. Disclosure is required so that Congress may force Wall Street bankers and promoters to disgorge what Congress never intended them to have. They must be forced to disgorge, because already the Van Sweringens and the Morgans, chief among those who share this gift, have proceeded to use and to abuse the power which, unmarked by the world at large, fell into their lap.

It is appropriate to state facts showing how a statute passed to help the public is being converted, by bankers' tactics, into a statute to help the Van Sweringens and the Morgans. It is essential to describe some of the circumstances, that portion now available, relating to this affair. For the facts and circumstances drive home a truth already demonstrated in the hearings on Senator WHEELER's resolution for a thorough inquiry into railroad finance. Those hearings brought out some of the practices of bankers and promoters in debasing railroad finance—fragments of a far larger body of facts which can be unearthed only by a congressional inquiry. What the committee learned then was more than enough to demonstrate the need for such an inquiry. What must now be related can leave no room for any further doubt of the fact that protection of the public's investments in railroad securities, protection of every public interest in this matter, calls for the prompt passage of Senator WHEELER's resolution.

Our discussion here will deal specifically with the Van Sweringens and the J. P. Morgan & Co. banking syndicate, because they were the first to use the boon they got, they stood most in need of that boon, and they stand to make more out of it than anybody else in the United States.

The gift which the Morgan-Van Sweringen group obtained was a procedure by which they may be able to effect a stranglehold on the $2,000,000,000 railroad empire they had controlled and were about to lose. Before describing the nature of the prize obtained by these bankers and promoters, we wish to subscribe to the view which all will doubtless entertain, that so far as the Government authorities are concerned, it is obvious that none of them could have had the remotest intention to confer such a gift. It is of course clear, as has already been indicated, that Congress was not informed of what was involved in the legislation which raised the Wall Street group from despair to happiness. In the course of the scanty debates on this legislation in the Senate and the House of Representatives, there was not the whisper of a suggestion of even a shadow of the truth with respect to what was being secured by the Morgan-Van Sweringen group.

HOW THE MORGAN-VAN SWERINGEN GROUP BENEFITED BY THE PASSAGE OF A STATUTE

The railroad reorganization statute gave to any person controlling more than 33⅓ percent of the stock of a railroad company the practical power to delay, and possibly to obstruct for so long a time as to prevent, the adoption of any reorganization plan for their railroad, no matter how sound the reorganization plan might be, no matter if all the bondholders and all the other stockholders favored that plan, no matter if the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal courts approved the plan, no matter if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had made loans to the railroad and also approved the plan, no matter if the entire American public deemed the plan a fair and sound one. Any person or group holding 34 percent of the common stock or of the preferred stock, or of any class of stock, of a railroad corporation, indeed any group holding one share more than 33⅓ percent of any class of stock, was given the right, by a statute, to block in this way any and every plan of reorganization for that railroad. This, in effect, put in the hands of such a person or group the power to levy tribute on all the bondholders, on the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and on all the other stockholders. A group holding 34 percent of any class of stock of any railway which might have to undergo reorganization, was given by law the power to do what the Barbary corsairs practiced long ago.

This was a godsend to the Morgan-Van Sweringen people, who, using investors' money, had acquired control of great railroad systems, saw that some of them were due for receivership right away, and realized that receivership might end the control these financiers and speculators had been enjoying over the railroads in question. Having maneuvered themselves into a position to vote more than 33⅓ percent of the common stock of a number of these railroads, the Morgan-Van Sweringen group were able to use for their own purposes and purse the railroad-reorganization statute as soon as it became law.

Let us go back to the statute which the Morgans and Van Sweringens adopted as their angel, the angel to deliver them from mortal peril. The statute does not express, in so many words, that which these gentlemen have made to do for them. Had it contained any such words, expressly telling the story, the bill would of course have died at once. The statute simply says that a plan of reorganization for a railroad may not be finally approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission until it has been accepted by the owners of two-thirds of each class of stock issued by that railroad. Then, the law appears to add a number of conditions, so that the new right created by this statute may not be made the subject of arbitrary abuse. We say it "appears" to add some conditions which will prevent abuse. Those conditions may, in actual practice, be defeated by able bankers and astute financial lawyers.

Consider, for example, that condition which was included in the new law to the effect that a fair reorganization plan may be put through, even though 34 percent of the stocks is lined up against it, if the railroad company which is to be reorganized is insolvent. This seems all right. It should have been effective to deprive the Van Sweringens and the Morgans of their control over the reorganization of such a road as the Missouri Pacific Railroad, which is insolvent, having merely a facade of solvency by reason of the financial devices of stock-watering and overcapitalization.

But this facade, these devices, make a fortress behind which the Morgans and Van Sweringens may defeat the restrictions introduced into the 1933 reorganization law to prevent abuse of the new right created by that law. By freeing themselves from such restrictions, they may make their power almost unlimited. This they can accomplish with the help of their lawyers—and it must not be forgotten that these bankers and promoters can command the best legal talent in Wall Street. That talent can be called in to fight any attempt to obtain a court ruling that a railroad undergoing reorganization is insolvent. Such a court ruling is the sine qua non to the effectiveness of the safeguarding restriction imposed by Congress, the restriction which would prevent abuse of power by the Morgan-Van Sweringen group in the case of insolvent railroads, such as the Missouri Pacific. This sine qua non, this court ruling, may be prevented by skillful lawyers, no matter how insolvent the railroad may actually be. The court ruling may be blocked for years and years, and this obstacle can meantime be used to put the bankers astride the reorganization road, demanding princely ransoms from all who would pass. The tribute they levy, the tribute they are likely to demand, before they let a reorganization go through, is continued control of the railroad by themselves.

Let us see how the lawyers may block a court ruling that an insolvent railroad is insolvent. They may do so by insisting that the railroad shall first be valued by the court. This would mean that before the court makes a formal ruling that the railroad is insolvent, the court must conduct a valuation proceeding, possibly valuing the railroad in utmost detail—every rail, every tie, every locomotive and car, every roundhouse and station, every right of way, every bridge, every bit of the physical property of the road.

What this would mean is known to anyone acquainted with valuation proceedings in the case of both public-utility companies and railroads. Take the easiest case, that of the public utilities, many of them much smaller than any of our major railroads, much smaller than any one of a number of the railroads controlled by the Morgan-Van Sweringen group. The valuation of such public utilities had been dragged out for years and years. Even after a trial court makes a decision on valuation, appeals can be made to run for years and years.

Turning to the railroads valued by the Interstate Commerce Commission for rate-making purposes, we find that years and years have passed before the Commission has been able to bring a valuation proceeding to a close; and even when it thought that it had succeeded in doing so, it soon found it was only in the first stage of a much longer journey, of a proceeding which would take many years more. For appeals were taken to the courts, and there it was found that great doubt and uncertainty prevails with respect to the very principles governing valuation of railroads. Who knows how many years must elapse before those doubts and uncertainties are resolved?

Now, apply this experience to the case of the Van Sweringen roads. The Van Sweringens and Morgans, aided by Wall Street financial lawyers, might prevent for many years to come the conclusion of any court proceeding brought to determine whether any of the railroads heretofore in their empire are insolvent. The Interstate Commerce Commission itself, the Wall Street district itself, may know full well that a railroad is insolvent; but that is not enough. The bankers' lawyers will insist upon one of these complicated, intricate, endless legal proceedings to value the railroad and determine the question of solvency or insolvency.

How difficult this may be was recently indicated with respect to the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway Co., which is in bankruptcy and in the charge of the Federal court in St. Louis. The Interstate Commerce Commission a few months ago adopted an order directing its counsel to apply to the Federal courts to determine whether that railway was solvent or not. It is, of course, grossly insolvent. It was insolvent from the very time that it was reorganized previously by Speyer & Co. and J. & W. Seligman & Co. in 1917. It has been so full of wind and water for so many years that there never was any real value behind the common stock of that railway, and there is not now any real value even behind its preferred stock. But when the proposition was put to the Federal court in St. Louis, committees representing security holders appeared and objected to the conducting of such a proceeding. One of the principal grounds for holding off the conduct of such a proceeding was that it might be endless.

So as a practical matter the safeguarding restriction contained in the statute may be pushed out of the law by astute lawyers and astute bankers and promoters—may be pushed out for so many years as to constitute a permanent barrier. The statute contains other restrictions, but these also may as a practical matter be defeated by the able lawyers whose services are at the command of the Morgans and the Van Sweringens.

It is unnecessary to go into further detail on this subject. The committees of Congress can undoubtedly obtain the lawyers of the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or from the Federal Coordinator of Transportation, a detailed explanation of each provision of the statute and its practical uselessness against such powerful people as the Wall Street bankers and the railroad promoters.

In this connection one has to bear in mind how judges, overburdened with many other classes of work, are without the necessary background to enable them to cut the Gordian knot. The limitation under which judges actually labor, when confronted with these big railroad receiverships and reorganizations, were pictured for the United States Senate in a report made 2 years ago by the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission. In view of these practical difficulties confronting judges, in view of the abundant evidence of the use made of railroad bankruptcy proceedings by Wall Street, even when those proceedings have been under the direction of highly esteemed judges, it is apparent that not even the provision of the law empowering judges to terminate such bankruptcies is likely to save the country from the Morgan-Van Sweringen stranglehold. As so often happens in these big reorganizations, provisions for the protection of the ordinary man are actually turned around to help the superman; and the power to terminate railroad-bankruptcy lawsuits may be held up as a bogy man to hurry investors and the Government lending authorities into accepting a reorganization drafted in the interests of the bankers and their convenient front, the Van Sweringens.

Applying the practical meaning of the law to the Van Sweringen empire, we discover that through holding companies nominally owned by the Van Sweringens and actually controlled by J. P. Morgan & Co. and their banking syndicate these interests are in a position to block the reorganization of every one of the major railroads which they have heretofore controlled. Let us take, for example, the Missouri Pacific Railroad Co. More than 34 percent of its stock is owned by the Alleghany Corporation, which in turn is controlled by the Morgan-Van Sweringen group. In consequence that group can effectively block the road to reorganization. It can effectively block the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which has put more than $23,000,000 into the Missouri Pacific. The Morgan-Van Sweringen group can similarly block the owners of over $410,000,000 of bonds, who have the first right to the property of the Missouri Pacific. The Morgan-Van Sweringen group can similarly block the owners of $71,000,000 of preferred stock of the Missouri Pacific. In short, the Morgan-Van Sweringen group have the whip hand. Nobody can move without them. Their terms must be accepted by all other interests—interests of almost $500,000,000 in amount. The holders of those $500,000,000 of securities, whose rights are superior to the rights of the Morgan-Van Sweringen group, must wait year after year. To be sure, it is conceivable that the holders of these senior securities might find some way out of their dilemma by some chance, or through the help of some skilled lawyer, or through some accident; but knowing how able are Wall Street bankers and promoters in matters of this kind, matters involving their power over hundreds of millions and billions of dollars of the investments of the public, one can be sure that the probabilities are rather in favor of the entrenched Wall Street group than of the great mass of security holders.

What is true with respect to the Missouri Pacific is true with respect to other big railroad systems which are now in bankruptcy. This power, exercised under the 1933 statute by the Morgans and Van Sweringens, they would never have had under the law as it stood prior to March 3, 1933. The boon, the gift, the prize, the empire thus placed within the stranglehold of the Morgans and the Van Sweringens was placed within their power by a law adopted just when the Morgans and the Van Sweringens were in desperate need of achieving the very position which this law gave them—a position, so far as we know, never before in all American history enjoyed by any other bankers or anybody else.

So remarkable is this coincidence that it may be helpful to the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce to receive some facts with respect to the circumstances in which the Morgan-Van Sweringen group found itself during the depression.

THE MORGAN-VAN SWERINGEN EFFORTS TO PRESERVE THEIR CONTROL DURING THE EARLIER YEARS OF THE DEPRESSION

Although the United States Senate Committee on Banking and Currency did not have the time to delve more deeply into the affairs of the Van Sweringens, and particularly did not have the time to unearth the activities of the Van Sweringens and their bankers in the later years of the depression, that Senate committee nevertheless demonstrated beyond any doubt the fact that the Van Sweringens, on a personal investment of "shoe-string" proportions, acquired control of a railway empire in which the investing public had put some two billion dollars. Obviously, a financial structure of this size, resting on a comparatively infinitesimal base of Van Sweringen investment, was likely to come tumbling down on their heads in the first financial storm. This could be prevented only if one were able to resort to the conjurer's art. The Van Sweringens and their bankers resorted to that art.

One of the first efforts of the Van Sweringens, so common in the case of a big plunger who has been caught by the market, was to speculate even more deeply and to use for the purpose money to which they had no right. They played the market with money of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Co., and they lost. That loss they caused the Missouri Pacific to bear.

The Van Sweringens also endeavored to save their structure by juggling with money. They had the Missouri Pacific lend money with its right hand to subsidiary railroads and then take money back from subsidiary railroads with its left hand. They called the money delivered to the subsidiaries "loans", and the money taken from the subsidiaries "dividends", and by thus tossing balls in the air they made zero into the appearance of something which did not exist—into the appearance of earnings by the Missouri Pacific Railroad on which the market value of its stock might be held higher, and thus on which the holding company controlled by the Van Sweringens and the Morgans might be saved from defaulting on the bonds which the bankers had sold to the public.

The Van Sweringens not only pulled rabbits out of a hat in this way, but they also made rabbits disappear so that nobody could see that there had been any rabbits. The fact that the Van Sweringens had forced the Missouri Pacific into stock-market-gambling transactions was kept from the Interstate Commerce Commission, which, under the law, should have been given the truth, and from the security holders of the Missouri Pacific, who, under the law, were also entitled to be told the truth.

Other steps of a comparable nature were taken by the Van Sweringens in an effort to protect themselves and their bankers before they reached the extremity, in which only help of the Government of the United States could save them. They unloaded real estate and terminal properties on the Missouri Pacific Railroad in the midst of the depression at higher-than-boom-time prices and let the mystified public understand that real-estate promotion and prices which utterly ignored the depression were really appropriate features of the operation of a railroad. Finally, the Van Sweringens treated the railroads in their control as though these iron highways were rich milch cows, and milked them through a Van Sweringen milking machine, one of the Van Sweringen corporations setting the dairy industry a remarkable example by getting each year more out of these railroads than the year before, although each depression year the railroad companies were fed with constantly less business and less revenue.

The facts just stated were recently presented to the Committee on Interstate Commerce in more detail, and the sources of the information then furnished the committee were, in all cases where any Senator asked for them, given to the committee.

GOVERNMENT HELP

When the magicians' entertainment was over and the magicians themselves were obliged to face the world of cold realities, they realized that they were done for unless the Government would come to their help. So, together with other railroads, the companies under their control asked the Interstate Commerce Commission to permit them to charge the shipping public higher rates than were charged in the boom years; and to save the roads from receivership the Interstate Commerce Commission permitted them to exact from the shipping, and thus from the consuming public, at a time when it was less able to pay more than it had been paying in previous years, increased rates on a number of commodities. The matter was finally settled on condition that all the money obtained by these rate increases should be available, through a corporation organized by the railroads, for the help of any of them that might need money in order to keep out of receivership.

This, however, was not enough for railroad promoters in the precarious condition of the Van Sweringens and for railroad bankers whose loans to railroad promoters were as badly endangered as the loans of the Morgan banking syndicate to the Van Sweringens. The tills of tradesmen purchasing goods and paying more by reason of increased freight rates, and the wages of the general public, whose cost of living was increased by the rate increases, were not adequate sources for the Van Sweringens. They wanted access to the Treasury of the United States, and they got such access. They wanted access to the United States Treasury on condition that they and their bankers should be allowed to retain full control of the Van Sweringen railroad empire, and this condition also they were able to secure practically as they wanted it.

But the greed of the bankers led to something in the nature of a scandal, and soon blocked the efforts of the Van Sweringens to remain in control with the help of unlimited millions from the Government Treasury. The earliest applications to the newly created Reconstruction Finance Corporation by the Van Sweringen roads were applications, in considerable part, for Government money with which to pay the debts of the roads to their bankers. Some of the people who were to get money this way were private bankers, who had no right under the law to get Government help at all. Some of them were large New York banking institutions which did not need Government help in order to remain in business, and therefore under the law were not entitled to help. The most glaring cases in which private bankers and New York banks, using the railroads as pipe lines for Government money, got indirectly from the United States Treasury what they could not have gotten directly, arose out of applications by such Van Sweringen railroads as the Missouri Pacific, the Nickel Plate, the Erie, and the Chicago & Eastern Illinois. Through these roads, J. P. Morgan & Co. and Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the two principal private banking firms in America, and Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, a Morgan bank and closely involved with the Van Sweringens, secured authorizations to get Government money in the amount of over $15,000,000. The resulting scandal led to a clamor in Congress which made it much more difficult to get Government millions for the Van Sweringen-controlled railroads, even if they had not begun, as they in fact did, to exhaust their available securities requisite for pledge to the Government as security for any further money it might sink in these roads.

THE DESPERATE PLIGHT OF THE VAN SWERINGENS AND THEIR BANKERS

Faced with such conditions, it looked as though the Van Sweringen empire was about to break down like the house of cards it really was. As has already been indicated, if the Van Sweringen roads were compelled to go into receivership, under the law as it had always applied to security holders in such cases, there was considerable danger that the Van Sweringens would be wiped out and that the interest held by the bankers, being in substance the interest of the Van Sweringens, would also have to go overboard.

This jeopardized the Van Sweringen control of $2,000,000,000 of property, the control of a Nation-wide network of railroad systems. The same stake was also involved for the bankers, but, in addition, they had another stake. They had tens of millions of dollars which might have been lost if they lost control. How much was owing to the bankers by the Van Sweringens in the latter part of 1932 or early 1933 is not at the present time disclosed, and may not be disclosed until the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce has been authorized by the United States Senate to make a thorough inquiry. What is known is that at the present time the Van Sweringens owe the bankers $48,000,000. The importance of so huge a sum to bankers headed by J. P. Morgan & Co. may be gaged from the fact that the amount now due to the bankers from the Van Sweringens exceeds the total net worth of J. P. Morgan & Co. at the time of the passage of the railroad reorganization statute on March 3, 1933. Anyone who reads the Morgan hearings before the United States Senate Committee on Banking and Currency and notes with care the discussion in which the head of the Morgan law firm blocked the efforts of Mr. Pecora, the attorney of that committee, to get the true facts about J. P. Morgan & Co.'s financial balance sheet, will recognize that the wiping out of the Morgan share of the huge banking loan to the Van Sweringens' personal corporations might have been seriously embarrassing to J. P. Morgan & Co., even to the point of threatening its position as overlord of some of the biggest railway, public-utility, and industrial corporations of the United States.

These were the tremendous stakes and the corresponding needs of J. P. Morgan & Co. and the Van Sweringen interests when Congress acted in the early part of 1933.

ENTER THE NEW YORK FINANCIAL LAWYERS

Months before Congress acted there were some significant developments. These arose, though the general public would not have deemed it possible, out of efforts of President Hoover and his Solicitor General of the United States to achieve reforms of bankruptcy procedure. Early in his administration President Hoover instructed the Solicitor General to make a thorough study of bankruptcy reform. A lengthy report was subsequently made by the Solicitor General and was transmitted to Congress by President Hoover. His message, and the accompanying report of the Solicitor General, dealt largely with the subject of relief of the small debtor and the ordinary creditor, as well as relief of the overindebted farmers. These documents, dealing with subjects which seemed very far indeed from the problems of railroad bankers and promoters and their lawyers, were turned to good account by them for their own needs.

A meeting was held in New York City on May 25, 1932. This meeting was held in the bar association there. The man who presided over it was president of that association and head of the law firm which handles the legal business of J. P. Morgan & Co. and Guaranty Trust Co., the chief Van Sweringen bankers. At this meeting a resolution was adopted to seek to broaden the bills then pending in Congress for the reform of bankruptcy law, by including reorganization provisions for insolvent railroad corporations. A committee to urge and help Congress make these fundamental changes in the pending bills was appointed. It may be of interest to note who did the appointing and who were appointed to the committee.

The meeting, though attended by a very small fraction of the membership of the Bar Association of New York, was graced with the presence of important financial lawyers. First, of course, was the presiding officer. Others were also present from his law firm, the firm of Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Gardiner & Reed. One of these was appointed a member of the special committee. This gave the J. P. Morgan and Van Sweringen lawyers a key position at once. Another place on the committee was granted to another big financial lawyer, a partner in the law firm of Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine & Wood, the regular attorneys for Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and for J. & W. Seligman & Co., New York banking firms active in railroad finance, railroad reorganization, and railroad control. The fact is that he was also general counsel at the time of St. Louis-San Francisco Railway Co., which was then engaged in preparing a futile reorganization of its bankrupt finances and was shortly thereafter going into receivership. He was also at the time—and still is—New York counsel for and a director of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co., recently reorganized under the auspices of his banking clients and himself. Both railroads, for which he was general counsel, were at the time in danger of receivership, and one of them has already gone into receivership, while the other is in all likelihood going to go into receivership shortly.

A third member of this committee was a New York lawyer who has been much used by leading New York banks, including Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, in receivership and bankruptcy business. Thus, the committee appointed by the head of the law firm which serves J. P. Morgan & Co., contained a majority (since there were only five members of the committee) who were closely associated with the big private bankers and banks of New York—the ones who play the most prominent part in railroad finance and railroad reorganization.

This committee of lawyers reported to the Bar Association of New York under date of April 5, 1933, a month after the passage of the law which has proved so wonderful for the Van Sweringens and their bankers. The report was to the effect that Congress had passed a law dealing with railroad reorganization. The report included no disclosure of the part played by the lawyers' committee in molding that statute, or of the part played by any of its financial lawyer-members in that molding process.

Although the committee members did not make disclosure to the bar association for which they were supposed to act, a series of strange circumstances brought to light what at least one of these financial lawyers had to do with the legislation which was pending before Congress. The facts came to light as a result of a loan of some $3,390,000 by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway Co., in the summer of 1932—a matter already called to the attention of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce. This money was lent by the Government to the railway to be used for the payment of taxes and interest, after the railway reported that it was in most urgent need of Government money for that purpose. But the bankers in control of the road shortly thereafter took $400,000 out of its cash box and delivered it to themselves as reorganizers of that railway. The New York attorneys for those reorganizers, who have since abandoned the reorganization plan which they prepared in 1932, have sought to be paid $100,000 for their services in that reorganization fiasco. Those lawyers are Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine & Wood, one of whose partners was a member of the New York City Bar Association committee appointed in 1932 to work on the subject of railroad reorganization. Supporting this law firm's demand for $100,000 for preparing and pushing a Frisco Railway reorganization plan so deficient that it was thrown overboard as soon as its deficiencies had been publicly exposed, papers were submitted to the Federal court in St. Louis describing the services of the lawyers. These papers were filed in the archives of that court. The firm of Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine & Wood included in their statement to the Federal court in St. Louis the following:

"The proposed law for reorganization of railroads under the Bankruptcy Act was under active discussion, and counsel for the [managers meaning Messrs. Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine & Wood, acting as attorneys for the reorganization managers of the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway Co.] * * * devoted a great deal of time to consideration and discussion of the proposed law. Many amendments were suggested by counsel for the managers [that is to say, by Messrs. Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine & Wood], most of which were adopted in the law as finally passed."

The document from which these words are quoted is entitled by the law firm seeking the $100,000, "A Memorandum of Services Rendered by Counsel for Readjustment Managers." This memorandum is called schedule M, attached to a formal court petition entitled "Petition of Readjustment Managers for Approval of Accounts." This petition was sworn to on February 13, 1934. The words we quote from schedule M are to be found on page 8 of that schedule.

We have felt it important thus minutely to identify the papers of these lawyers because of the importance of the revelation they made in the course of seeking their $100,000 fee. Now, for the first time, there is definite proof of the large part played by one of the Wall Street lawyers in connection with the creation of the railroad reorganization law. Now, for the first time, the public can know that lawyers of such great stature in Wall Street were able to labor on this legislation without anybody on the outside knowing anything about it. The words quoted above from the papers filed in St. Louis are illuminating indeed, despite the failure to specify the nature of the lawyers' activity and the methods they followed. It is curious that in a memorandum of services seeking $100,000 out of the treasury of a hard-up, bankrupt railroad, the lawyers did not deem it appropriate to tell a good deal more of their doings, to describe the amendments they prepared for inclusion in the legislation before Congress, and to state what representations they made in getting their amendments adopted. If we knew what they then said and how they got what they wanted, we would be able to see whether there were any disclosures they did not make, when they went to work to fix up the railroad reorganization bill.

No public disclosures of any kind, not even in the general language quoted above from the court records in St. Louis, have, so far as we know, been made by the other financial lawyers on the bar association committee. Only a thorough inquiry, such as that proposed for the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, will make it possible to ascertain just what each of these distinguished financial lawyers did in helping Congress to pass a law which, as things turned out, has proved such an inestimable boon to J. P. Morgan & Co., their banking allies, and the Van Sweringen interests.

We do not undertake to say what these lawyers did, what these lawyers intended, or what connection there was between their work and the provisions of the law as it now stands. We present simply the facts that are available in public records.

One thing about the activities of these lawyers can be stated, and that is the lack of knowledge of Congress that the lawyers were doing so much to make the railroad reorganization statute what it is today. While the Wall Street attorneys were laboring on the legislation, the House Judiciary Committee was engaged in reporting to the House on the theory that the bill would eliminate "the opportunity for manipulation on the part of special groups." When the bill, as it came up in the House for passage, was there debated, the leading advocate of the legislation made remarks showing that he thought the bill would eliminate the very evil of banker control which it has in fact accentuated. He said, "Are you going to leave the management of the reorganization and receivership of these railroads in the hands of the gang that has ruined the railroads * * *?"

The courageous Congressman who spoke these words, a public servant with the finest of records in the public service, was obviously kept in the dark about what was really going on behind the scenes. For, when he spoke of "the gang that has ruined the railroads", when he indicated that he was trying to get rid of the Wall Street group, he did not mince words. He did not hesitate to name names. Those he wanted to get rid of were, as you will see if you consult the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the Morgan firm, the Kuhn-Loeb firm, and their lawyers. He specifically included among these lawyers two of the committee working at the very time to get the very statute that was then under discussion in Congress. What better proof can one ask of the skill of these gentlemen in getting what they wanted with a minimum of friction, arousing the minimum of hostility and distrust for what they sought?

Any member of the Senate committee who wants to read the debates on this subject in the House, and the names mentioned during those debates, will find them in the seventy-sixth volume of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at page 5358.

Leaders in the Senate were equally kept in the dark about the financiers' lawyers and their handiwork. The bill was discussed in the Senate by the Senators who were then chairmen of the Committee on Interstate Commerce and the Committee on the Judiciary. Both chairmen had long demonstrated their devotion to the public interest. Both would have fought to the utmost any attempt by Wall Street to get the kind of railroad reorganization statute the bankers wanted. Yet, though each of these committee chairmen took considerable part in the debate in the Senate, neither of them had the benefit of any disclosure about the activities of the legislative draftsmen from Wall Street. Indeed, such had been the representations on which the bill was being pressed for passage, such had been the nondisclosures, that one of the chairmen said of the bill, "This is a plan to take out of the Wall Street bankers the power to reorganize the railroads which they have had heretofore * * *." This remark, and more to similar effect, can be found on page 5269 and other pages of the seventy-sixth volume of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the Seventy-second Congress.

HOW THE BILL BECAME LAW

In view of the lapse of more than 2 years since the adoption of the railroad reorganization law by Congress, and in view of the fact that the law was adopted in the rush of the final days of the Seventy-second Congress, we may, perhaps, be indulged in recalling to the minds of the members of this committee the haste with which that law was passed by Congress. You will remember that there was a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary and that this subcommittee refused to recommend passage of the railroad reorganization law. You may remember that in the course of the debates in the Senate a member of that subcommittee, Senator Bratton, of New Mexico, now a United States judge, said that, "In the final analysis of the situation only one member of the Judiciary Committee has given prolonged consideration to this important measure. As a member of the subcommittee and as a member of the full Committee on the Judiciary, I do not think we would be justified in passing during the closing days of this session a measure so far-reaching in its effects as the section touching railroad reorganization." Senator WAGNER, of New York, asked whether the full Judiciary Committee had considered the legislation, and received the reply, "It has not." One may sum up what took place in the Senate by quoting from the remarks of two Senators. The Senator who introduced the bill said that he did so because "It was suggested to me yesterday that it was perfectly possible to have this bill rushed through the Senate." A number of Senators warned of the danger of such rush methods. Their views are illustrated by the following remarks of Senator CONNALLY, of Texas:

"This is a measure too complex, too intricate, too important for me to vote upon it largely in the dark. If the Committee on the Judiciary, after examining the amendment, declined to act on it—and that committee ought to know more about it than the rest of the Senate—if the Senate here now, in the last 3 days of its session, under tremendous pressure, in a mere brainstorm, passes this legislation because it thinks something must be done, but does not know quite what it is, I cannot get my own consent to vote for the amendment * * * the matter has not had proper consideration. In other words, they have considered it briefly; they know something ought to be done; they know one of the patient's legs ought to be cut off, but they do not know which one; and they will just cut off one in order to be doing something."

The passage here quoted from the debates are to be found on pages 5033, 5036, 5037, and 5274–5275 of the seventy-sixth volume of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

It was on the plea of emergency that Senators voted for the bill. Some Senators voted for it on the ground that this would relieve the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of the necessity of making further loans to the railroads—an opinion which reckoned without the astuteness of financiers and their lawyers, who may, in the course of reorganization, get far more money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for particular railroads than the Government has put into them up to the present time. Consider for a moment the application of the Van Sweringens for $75,000,000 to be used in the reorganization of the Missouri Pacific—more than three times the sum, huge as it was, that the Missouri Pacific had gotten out of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation prior to the railroad's resort to the bankruptcy court.

Needless to say, as soon as the railroad reorganization bill became law, the J. P. Morgan & Co. and Van Sweringen interests got busy, and within a few weeks had formally applied to receive such advantages as might be gleaned, using railroads under their control as instrumentalities to help these bankers and promoters under the new law.

J. P. MORGAN & CO.'S VETO POWER

The Morgans and Van Sweringens were not content with the huge gift they had secured for themselves in their role as lords of the Alleghany Corporation, and thus of its holdings of Missouri Pacific common stock—more than the requisite 33⅓ percent. Having annexed this benefit, they later proceeded to make use of another provision of the law. Just as a fraction of a percent more than one-third of any class of stock can embarrass any and all reorganizations, so a fraction of a percent more than one-third of any class of creditors can, under the 1933 law, embarrass or block any reorganization. J. P. Morgan & Co. now have the benefit of an order of the Federal bankruptcy court making them a special class. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has contested this order and has shown the court that J. P. Morgan & Co. have not the remotest ground for claiming to be a special, single, and exclusive class of creditors of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Co. The matter is still to be decided by the Federal court, but at the present moment the banking firm is entrenched by an order of the court—an order under which the bankers can effectively turn thumbs down on the best reorganization plan in the world, even though that plan were favored by all the bondholders of the railroad, by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and by all the holders of Missouri Pacific's preferred and common stock other than the Morgan and Van Sweringen interests.

THE BANKERS' VETO POWER THROUGH THE PROTECTIVE COMMITTEES

J. P. Morgan & Co. have put one of their partners on the principal bondholders' committee in the Missouri Pacific reorganization. They have put a partner of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. on that committee, and they have other friends and allies on that committee. That committee purports to represent the Missouri Pacific bondholders. Facts have been submitted to the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce showing that the banker-influenced Missouri Pacific committee, ostensibly offering to represent bondholders, insists upon becoming absolute owner of the bonds of the general investing public and assumes to itself even an extraordinary privilege under which its individual members may speculate in the very class of bonds for which they have undertaken to become guardians. This committee has reserved the right, for all its members and their banking firms, to sit on both sides of the table, to be at one and the same time both for and against the bondholders they ostensibly protect. Every member of the bankers' committee has reserved the right to make private profits by dealing in his private capacity with himself as a committee member.

J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and their allies on the "protective committees" have also undertaken to defeat a portion of the railroad reorganization law they do not like. Congress sought to give to bondholders the right to vote on reorganization plans, to express their personal preferences, to have something to say about their own property. But the bankers' committee, using intricate legal devices for the purpose, seeks to take away from bondholders what Congress wanted them to have. The "protective committee" wants to make bondholders pay a heavy tax to the protective committee for exercising the voting privilege conferred on them by Congress. That is the type of additional stranglehold these bankers have sought to obtain.

THE BANKERS MONOPOLIZE THE VOTERS' LISTS

When Congress enacted the railroad reorganization law, Congress tried to give investors in railroad securities one of the most important of safeguards. Congress tried to give them the opportunity of communicating with each other, conveying facts to each other, warning each other of dangers, gathering together for common protection. This was to be made possible by requiring that the names and addresses of bondholders in a bankrupt railroad be placed on file in court, so that any of them who desired to do so could communicate with his fellow investors.

This attempt by Congress was in line with sound practice. It followed the long-standing precedent under which stockholders have been entitled to get the names and addresses of their fellow stockholders. It is similar to the method employed in political elections when voters' lists are made accessible to all parties.

Congress tried to give bondholders this protection, but the bankers have defeated the purpose of Congress. Consider the Missouri Pacific Railroad bankruptcy. Bondholders' lists are in the possession of the banks and bankers, J. P. Morgan & Co. and banks in its sphere of influence, such as Guaranty Trust Co. of New York and Bankers Trust Co. of New York. These lists are used by the banker-organized "protective committees" to get bondholders to give up their bonds to those committees and to give them up in such a way that bondholders' interests are, as already explained, in great danger.

Bondholders who have studied the facts want to get those facts to their fellow investors, to warn them about the bankers' committees, about the bankers' purposes. This cannot be done. Independent bondholders cannot get the lists of names and addresses. The lists of thousands of names are not on file in court. Only a few hundred names are filed there. The vast majority of names are kept secret. How can this be, in view of the purpose of Congress? The lawyers found a loophole in the law and defeated what Congress intended. They claim that technically the law has been complied with—this law that Congress intended for the benefit of the investing public, this law on which Wall Street lawyers quietly worked. As a result, the Van Sweringen bankers have tightened their grip, and ordinary investors are insulated from each other, unable to communicate with one another, left at the mercy of the bankers, who have converted into a private preserve for themselves the bondholders' lists, which should be available to all.

INFLUENCE THROUGH THE BANKRUPTCY COURT MACHINERY

Your committees may be interested to know how much reform was achieved through the railroad reorganization law. The people in control of the Missouri Pacific were the first people to take advantage of this law. At the outset, they induced the court to leave the control of this property in the hands of themselves, rather than in the hands of the court through independent trustees. Thereafter, when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation urged strenuously that trustees ought to be appointed so that control of the property in bankruptcy should be really in the hands of the court and not in the hands of the Van Sweringens and their bankers, two trustees were appointed. One of these was the president of the road—the man chosen for that road by the bankers and continued in the job by the Van Sweringens. Then came the highly important question, Who should be the counsel for the court trustees in control of the property? The man chosen for this job was the counsel of the railroad company—the man previously used as counsel of the road by the Van Sweringens themselves. As a result, when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation waged a fight in behalf of all bondholders and creditors and security holders of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Co., attacking the transaction by which the Van Sweringens had unloaded on the Missouri Pacific for $20,000,000 some real estate and terminal properties, one of the two court trustees and the general counsel for the trustees helped the Van Sweringens, and not the Missouri Pacific, not the bankruptcy estate, not the bondholders of the road, not the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as a creditor, not anybody who had a genuine and single-minded interest in the railroad.

The Missouri Pacific has now been in the bankruptcy court for approximately 2 years. The bankruptcy law applies to these railroad-reorganization bankruptcy proceedings. Under the bankruptcy law, if a small business man becomes bankrupt, there is almost automatically a proceeding to question him and any and all persons who have dealt with him in order to throw light on what has happened to the business and property of the bankrupt—to ascertain whether there has been mismanagement, waste, or concealment of assets, and to ascertain whether it is possible by lawsuits against any persons to recover damages for the bankrupt estate and for the creditors of the bankrupt. Has anything remotely approaching this been done in the Missouri Pacific bankruptcy for the benefit of the holders of approximately $500,000,000 of securities? With the exception of the fight made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with respect to one transaction only, there has been no examination of officers or directors or bankers or promoters of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Co. On no subject has any banker of the Missouri Pacific Railroad been examined. Independent bondholders of Missouri Pacific Railroad have been trying their hardest to get an examination of the bankers and directors and stock brokers who made money out of the Missouri Pacific and had a hand in what befell it. But up to the time we had our latest word on the subject, no order had yet been made in the court proceeding subjecting the bankers and directors to the same treatment, or anything like the treatment, given a small business man in the bankruptcy courts as a matter of course. The financiers and promoters who ran the Missouri Pacific Railroad in Wall Street have thus far got off scot-free, though the company has been in bankruptcy and under the bankruptcy court for 2 years.

That is the way in which the railroad reorganization law, so advantageous to the Morgans and Van Sweringens in the use to which they put it, has proved to be beneficial to them in saving them from the embarrassment of examination and disclosure of what they did to this railroad in past years.

ANOTHER BOON FOR THE MORGANS AND THE VAN SWERINGENS

The bankers and promoters in control of the Van Sweringen empire were faced with another grave danger. They ran the risk of losing control of the Alleghany Corporation, the holding company by which they had thus far maintained their power over so many railway systems. The Alleghany Corporation was in serious financial difficulties. The time came when it was clear that that corporation would have to go into receivership and be reorganized. There was, of course, serious danger that then the bondholders, having at least theoretically a free choice, might push the Van Sweringens and their bankers out of control.

The opportunities for financial master strokes, carved by the Morgan-Van Sweringen lawyers out of the railroad reorganization law, were not available to them for use in the Alleghany Corporation. That law related to railroad companies, and the Morgans and Van Sweringens had deliberately contrived that the Alleghany Corporation should not be treated under the laws that apply to railroad companies. This policy they adopted in 1929, when, prohibited by the Interstate Commerce Commission from building vast control over railroads on a personal investment very small in comparison, the Van Sweringens turned to the holding company device to outwit the Government. It was in this manner that the Morgans were enabled to float millions of dollars of holding company bonds to the investing public without any supervision by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

This policy of the Van Sweringens and the Morgans, a policy which kept their chief holding corporation outside the law for the regulation of railroads and railroad finance, has continued successful to the present day. Even when Congress passed a law in 1933 to bring railroad holding companies under the regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, phrases were included in the statute under which these men have claimed that their Alleghany Corporation and other holding companies are still free from Interstate Commerce Commission supervision, free from Government regulation, free from the necessity of letting Commission examiners inspect the books, the files, and the records of these billion-dollar holding companies. What disclosures such access to the books and correspondence of the Alleghany Corporation and the other Van Sweringen holding and management companies might have brought about! But as the law to regulate railroad holding companies took shape, the Van Sweringen companies slipped through again—further evidence of the fact that the regulating authorities cannot get the needed facts, and that a congressional committee is the only agency which can get the facts.

Enjoying, thus, for their empire immunity from the law of the land applicable to the great railroad-operating companies they had annexed to that empire, the Van Sweringens were, of course, not in a position to use the railroad reorganization law of 1933 for the holding companies which they wanted to keep immune from the law. Fortunately for them, a bill had been pending in Congress to deal with the bankruptcy of corporations other than railroads. In fact, at the 1932 meeting in the Bar Association in New York City, when a resolution was adopted to appoint a committee and to press for a railroad-reorganization statute, the lawyers' committee, the one with a majority of Morgan-Kuhn-Loeb-Guaranty Trust Co. lawyers, was directed to press also for a statute on the subject of reorganization of corporations other than railroads. This was right down the Morgan-Van Sweringen alley. And, in fact, a law on this subject was passed by Congress and signed on June 7, 1934.

The Van Sweringens shortly thereafter took advantage of this law. Its provisions were particularly satisfactory to them, although it is obvious from the reading of the debates in Congress that no one in Congress foresaw the use to which the Van Sweringen interests would be able to put the new statute for the preservation of their control.

They brought about a bankruptcy proceeding under this 1934 law in the Federal court in Baltimore. The Alleghany Corporation now appeared in several roles inconsistent with each other. Facing in one direction, the Alleghany Corporation declared itself to be a bankrupt. Facing in another direction, the Alleghany Corporation proceeded as though it were not a bankrupt at all. And even in that aspect of the Alleghany Corporation in which it admitted itself to be a bankrupt, the court permitted control over the company to remain in the hands of the Van Sweringens and their bankers just as before. Taking advantage of the provisions of this law, the Van Sweringens and their bankers put through a reorganization of Alleghany Corporation in record time—probably the fastest reorganization ever accomplished in all financial history. The principal feature of this reorganization was that although many of the bondholders of the Alleghany Corporation were compelled to take stock for bonds, the big prize in the American railway system—control over Alleghany Corporation and a tremendous network of railways—remained in the hands of J. P. Morgan & Co. and their banking syndicate.

It is significant, also, that although the Interstate Commerce Commission had complained for some years that the organization of holding companies, the chief of them being the Van Sweringen holding company, had defeated the regulatory efforts of Congress and the Commission, and although the sucking of vast quantities of credit into the railroad holding companies had helped to impair railroad credit in general, the reorganization of the Alleghany Corporation was not submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission's scrutiny. The Alleghany Corporation, having, as has already been said, escaped the statute passed by Congress in 1933 to regulate railroad holding companies, could be reorganized without letting the soundness and fairness of the reorganization plan reach the official eye of the Government Commission which knows more about the subject than most courts, probably more than all courts. The principle that reorganizations dealing with railroad affairs ought to come before the Interstate Commerce Commission—a principle recognized in the debates in the United States Senate in February 1933—remained wholly ineffective so far as the Van Sweringen holding companies are concerned.

MORE MAGIC

The Van Sweringens have now come back for more Government money. This time the magic wand is the wand of those who say they can bring back prosperity. This time there is also a magic stick with which to beat the Government if it will not lend the Van Sweringen companies more money, and that stick is the threat that without reorganization of the Van Sweringen roads the country is in danger, the country cannot be saved, the depression cannot be routed, prosperity cannot be brought back. In insisting on their magic, the prestidigitators slur one condition which, from their point of view, is vital, and from the point of view of everybody else is fatal. J. P. Morgan & Co., and its banking syndicate, now in control and using the Van Sweringens as a convenient front, insist that the money, when lent by the Government, shall be lent on a basis that gives this small group control of the $2,000,000,000 railway empire, which they have thus far controlled, by controlling the investments of the public. Is it to be believed that the country cannot be saved, that recovery cannot be secured, that railroad investors cannot be protected, that railroad labor cannot be protected, that railway service cannot be adequately maintained, unless J. P. Morgan & Co. and the Van Sweringens control these great railroad systems? Has America sunk to such low estate, to such desperation as these bankers and these promoters, with their deplorable record in railroad control and railroad finance, would make us believe?

Here is the banker-promotor control of these great railway systems, operating on a "shoe string" with that "shoe string" investment already lost and with hundreds of millions of other people's money also lost for them by the bankers and promoters—and the control of these bankers and promoters still continues. They have access everywhere. They can go to any agency of the Government, and when they do not want to go they can send so-called "railway associations", maintained with the money of all the principal railroads of the country, to call upon any and every agency of the Government and indirectly seek to protect before such agencies the Van Sweringen bankers and the Van Sweringen interests.

How does it happen that J. P. Morgan & Co. and the powerful banks in their syndicate have such power over these railroad associations and organizations? A report of the Interstate Commerce Commission made on January 7, 1935, provides the answer. This report deals with the 4 years, 1930, 1931, 1932, and 1933. The Commission shows that in those 4 years the Van Sweringen roads paid well over $2,000,000 as the contribution of the Van Sweringen empire to the support of all manner of railway associations. But there is even more to the story. Other railroads, for which J. P. Morgan & Co. and financial institutions in the Van Sweringen banking syndicate also act as bankers, have paid additional millions for the support of these railway associations. Therefore, when we read that this or that association has gone to see this or that public commission, administrative authority, or high official, we can fairly conclude that anything discussed by such an association bearing on Van Sweringen interests will be in full accord with the wishes and needs of the Van Sweringen bankers.

It is of the utmost importance to recognize how these direct and indirect agents of the Van Sweringen banking syndicate are in a position to descend upon Washington and on Government agencies that have anything to do with the railroads, to descend upon Washington in full force, and both in Washington and throughout the country to press the views and requirements of J. P. Morgan & Co. and its affiliated banking houses and institutions with the utmost of astuteness and power. In brief, the bankers for the Van Sweringen empire have such potent charms that most doors open readily to them, to the Van Sweringens, and to the railway association executives, who every little while, not unlike presidents of railways, are active in Washington to do the bankers' errands.

THE DANGER TO THE COUNTRY

One of the most dangerous combinations of property and wealth in this country today, one of the most active in riding roughshod over the public interest and over the interests of investors at large, is the Van Sweringen railway empire. The country will not be safe until that aggregation of railway systems has been separated into more workable units and into units which cannot by themselves exercise such dangerous powers in the affairs of our country. Until we get rid of the stranglehold of the Van Sweringen bankers and of the Van Sweringens themselves on this vast aggregation of large railway systems, investors will be without safety, railway labor will be without safety, Government money will be without safety, Government agencies will be harassed and invaded, and democratic processes and representative government will be flouted. There is no safety in this country for private property so long as a small group of men have the power, by misuse of a congressional grant, to get a stranglehold on property in which they no longer have a penny of their own money and which they have abused to the damage of is true owners. There will be no safety until the railroad reorganization law is changed in such a manner as to release great railroad empires from the control of such men. It may be difficult to get this law changed, and it will certainly be difficult to achieve amendments which are unquestionably in the public interest and unquestionably not in the interest of J. P. Morgan & Co. and their banking allies, until an investigation by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce has aired all pertinent facts thoroughly. Without such an investigation, there is every danger that the huge Van Sweringen empire will continue in the midst of our Republic; and so long as that empire within a republic continues, so long are great American public interests in constant danger.

REGULATION OF BANKS AND BANKING—STATEMENT BY A. P. GIANNINI

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement by A. P. Giannini, as published in the New York Journal of Commerce of today, in relation to the proposed Banking Act of 1935.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Journal of Commerce of Apr. 15, 1935]

GIANNINI ATTACKS NEW YORK BANKERS—BACKS TITLE 2 OF BANKING BILL, HITTING OPPOSITION OF WARBURG

Bringing into the open the pronounced differences of opinion between eastern and western banking groups over title 2 of the proposed Banking Act of 1935, A. P. Giannini, head of the Bank of America, California, over the week-end attacked the attitude expressed before the Senate Banking Committee by James P. Warburg, vice chairman of the Bank of the Manhattan Co.

Mr. Giannini charged that, in attacking title 2, which vests credit control in an administration-appointed Reserve Board, Mr. Warburg had represented, not the opinions of bankers as a class, but only the opinions of the New York bankers. He declared that in the past monetary policies were largely determined by the New York banks.

SEES WESTERN TRADE GAINS

Following his attack upon Mr. Warburg, Mr. Giannini yesterday issued a statement upon the pick-up in trade in the far West.

"The West is alive with industry," said Mr. Giannini. "Five great building enterprises are being worked out and will be completed within the next 3 years."

Mr. Giannini enumerated the various projects under way, declaring that they comprise "only the beginning of the 'new era.'"

"Agriculture had a great year in the far West, and the oil and mineral industries also took on added impetus. Nevada's condition was considerably improved, owing to the activity in the numerous silver mines in the State and the vast wine industry of California developed into one of the country's major industries during the year, largely through the efforts of the newly organized wine institute.

"These are the major reasons for the waves of improvement that have been noted heretofore in the trade balances.

"Naturally good times in the far West are bound to aid in bringing industrial activity to the entire country."

VIEWS OF TITLE II

The statement upon title II follows:

"I have read the testimony of James P. Warburg, who appeared early this week before the Senate Committee on Banking as a witness against the banking bill of 1935. In view of the possibility that his attitude may be taken as that of bankers as a class, I wish to take issue with him. However typical his attitude may be of that of the New York banker, it by no means represents the attitude of many bankers outside of New York. It is true that one of the purposes of the banking bill is to lessen the authority of bankers to determine the monetary policies of the country, but it should be emphasized that bankers at large have had very little voice in the determination of such policies in the past. The group that has exerted the predominant influence has been the New York bankers. Mr. Warburg did not dare to advocate a continuance of this situation in so many words, but a careful reading of his testimony leaves no question but that is what he had in mind. Although he claimed that he was not pleading for bankers' control of the people's money, he nevertheless maintained that the New York Federal Reserve Bank should determine its own policies, and he had the audacity to maintain that this represented popular control of the people's money.

MONETARY CONTROL

"Mr. Warburg attacked the banking bill by suggesting that it tended 'to undermine the "American order" and was an important step toward communism.' Perhaps Mr. Warburg understands by 'the American order' the inalienable right of the New York bankers to issue money and to regulate the value thereof. Most of us feel that when the Constitution gave Congress the power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof, it meant what it said, and I know of no higher authority as to what constitutes the 'American order' than the Constitution itself.

"Mr. Warburg professes to believe that the power to control the money of the country is in any case a useless power since, he maintains in effect, it is quite impossible to influence business conditions by inflating or deflating money. Why then should he be so exercised over defeating public control over money? If he lays so much importance on who has the control it surely must be because he knows full well that the control of money is a real power for good or evil. Personally, I would rather that this power be exercised by a public body in the public interest than by the New York banking fraternity.

"I am opposed to a Government-owned central bank, but I support the idea of giving the Federal Reserve Board a large degree of authority in the system's policies. I think it wise that the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board be made the President's representative on the Board, his term to run concurrently with that of the President, and he, as such representative, should sit in on all monetary conferences with foreign governments rather than the Governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York as is the case at present."

PREVENTION OF LYNCHING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. COSTIGAN that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 24) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing, and punishing the crime of lynching.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to address myself to the bill for the consideration of which by the Senate a motion has been made. I realize that, to a great extent, many Senators have made up their minds on this measure even before the motion to take it up shall have been passed upon. A study of the bill, however, convinces me that neither the Senate nor the country is familiar with the effect this measure would have if it should be enacted into law.

I desire to preface my remarks with the statement that I am against lynching. In no public or private utterance I have ever made in all my life can anyone find a single statement made by me indicating that I favored lynching as a punishment for crime.

I claim that this bill which has been introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] could well be designated a bill to increase lynching, as a bill to suppress labor unions, as a bill to punish and prosecute sheriffs and peace officers who fail to perform satisfactorily the duties which owners and operators might claim they should perform in the case of a strike. I claim that it is not only a bill which would subject the sheriffs to prosecution in the Federal courts for neglect to protect persons from injury but it goes still further and would subject every sheriff in this Nation to a penalty not in excess of 25 years if he failed to exercise that diligence which the coal operators, for instance, thought he should exercise in order to protect their property in case of strike.

I do not claim that the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New York intended to introduce a bill which would have that effect, but I assert that there never has been a self-respecting court in this Nation that could hold to the contrary of the views I have expressed with reference to this particular measure. I base that statement on the measure itself and on the report submitted by the Judiciary Committee, and particularly upon the brief in support of the report submitted by Mr. Charles H. Tuttle.

Therefore, Mr. President, I assert that if the bill should become a law, it would have an accentuating effect like unto that of the fourteenth amendment. There were many who believed that it was necessary to adopt the fourteenth amendment in order to protect colored citizens of the country from an infringement of their rights. Some were honest and sincere in that belief. They believed that the amendment would serve to effectuate such a purpose. I submit to the Senate that if at that time it could have been known that over a period of 10 years, out of 529 cases coming under the amendment, 509 would have been decided in a way to protect vested interests in their predatory special privileges in this Nation, the amendment would not have had easy sailing, even at that time, when the dictator from the State of Pennsylvania was practically deciding what should be the laws to govern the people of the Nation. In order that there may be no misunderstanding about my statement, when I say "dictator" I refer to Mr. Thaddeus H. Stevens.

The bill which it is now sought to bring before us is a lineal descendant of the measures which were enacted as laws in this country and about which the great historian Claude G. Bowers has written that magnificent book entitled "The Tragic Era."

There is nothing new in the proposal except that today to him who will read it, it is plain that it goes much further than its proponents in earlier days ever intended it should go, and that it is bodily placing in the Federal courts of the Nation, in courts presided over by men appointed for life, the unquestioned right and privilege of penalizing every sheriff, every peace officer, every judge, and even every Governor of every State, if he fails, forsooth, to be as diligent as the owners think he should be in protecting the property of those whose employees are out on strike.

Mr. President, I deny that this is an "antilynching" bill. The public, the great body of the citizens of the country, have been led to believe that we have in this bill a simple measure against lynching. I assert that if the bill should become a law not only would it affect the so-called "14 lynchings" which occurred in the country in 1934, but I assert that in the first year of its operation there would fall under the terms of the proposed law more than a thousand cases arising all over the Nation which would not even remotely in any sense of the word touch a lynching.

Standing here before this body, following the fights which have been made upon this floor in which I have frequently joined, I do not concede that the Federal courts should have the authority which has been exercised to suppress labor organizations. Nor do I propose to sit silently and permit anyone to cast a vote without having it called to his attention in language that he must understand if he will listen that whoever shall vote for this measure will be voting to crucify the organized laborers of the country upon a cross of so-called "idealism" with respect to one particular subject.

Before I proceed with reference to the discussion of that feature, however, I desire to deny that there was any lynching in the State of Alabama in 1934. It has been stated there were 14 lynchings in this country in 1934 and that 1 was in Alabama. I have investigated to see what it was that was designated as a "lynching." I found to my utter amazement that it has been charged that a lynching occurred in Jefferson County in 1934. That is the county of my residence. I do not recall that there has been any overt act in that county with reference to lynching, except on one occasion, during the past 30 or 40 years. At the time that overt act occurred, the sheriff of Jefferson County, Ala., met the onrushing mob at the doors of the jail, jeopardized his life, killed those who were in the lead, and wounded many others. This was done while he was protecting his prisoner.

The only case I recall when there was a near mob was when a colored man was accused of raping three colored girls in Birmingham, Ala. It was necessary to protect him from the outraged members of his own race.

What was the so-called "lynching" which it is alleged occurred in Jefferson County, Ala., in 1934? I am making this statement, not because it will affect the particular measure, but in justice to the people of that county. When I read the statement about the alleged lynching, I went over to the Congressional Library to read exactly what occurred in connection with the incident to which reference was made. I found that this is what occurred:

About a year and a half ago three girls who lived in Birmingham were up on Red Mountain looking at the sunset. A colored man came to them with a pistol and forced them to accompany him down into the woods. For about 4 or 5 hours they were tortured. All three of them were left for dead. Fortunately one of them lived. She dragged herself to the waiting automobile and drove to her home. Every endeavor was made to find the man who committed the crime. Perhaps 150 men were brought for identification. She said that none of them was the man; that she would know him anywhere she ever saw him so long as she lived.

Several months thereafter, at a time when her father was with her, she pointed out a man on the street. She said, "There is the man." The man was arrested and taken to jail. He was tried, convicted, and sentenced to hang. The case went to the Supreme Court of Alabama and was affirmed. The case came to the Supreme Court of the United States and was sent back and thereafter the Governor of the State of Alabama, believing that there might have been a mistake in the identification, commuted the sentence to life imprisonment.

It was shortly after this crime occurred that three girls in the city of Birmingham, who had started to a meeting shortly after dark, were met on the street by a colored man with a pistol and told to go with him. They asked him what for. They said they had no money. He said, "Come on and I will show you." He had a pistol. A struggle ensued. One of the girls broke away. She rushed to the nearby meeting which the girls had intended to attend. She sounded the alarm. Citizens left that meeting, rushed to the spot, and found the other two girls engaged in a struggle with their assailant. The assailant shot at the men who had rushed to the scene. They started after him. Shots were exchanged and the man was killed.

That is one of the so-called "14 lynchings" which occurred in the United States in 1934. There has been charged to the State of Alabama a lynching by reason of the fact that the men who were notified what was occurring and went to save the girls would, under the terms of the bill which it is now sought to bring before us for consideration, if it applied to that kind of crime, have been liable to punishment by incarceration in the penitentiary if they had failed to listen to the cries of this assailant. It is charged that this was a lynching.

I have mentioned this occurrence because I resent the statement that there was a lynching in that county and in that State in 1934. There have been lynchings in the past. In my judgment, each one was one too many, in my State or any other State. I may say, in reference to what the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] has just suggested, that under the common law—the very law that is cited in the brief to support this bill—it was not only the right but the duty of citizens to follow their assailants until they got to him, and it was not their duty to stand and permit themselves to be killed, even though someone might later say that they had violated the law.

Mr. President, I now desire to refer to just one other incident which happened in that county while I was the prosecuting attorney.

A colored man was charged with the crime of rape. He was identified by two girls. I mention this incident because it is stated that in some sections the sentiment is always against the man on trial. A lawyer was appointed to defend him. The lawyer now lives in the State of Illinois. He did defend the colored man. The defendant was identified from the stand by two witnesses. He pleaded an alibi, and his alibi was that at the time the crime was alleged to have been committed he was committing a burglary. He produced evidence that a burglary had been committed on that night at that time. He not only said that he had committed the burglary but, when asked what his occupation was, he said he was a burglar. The defendant was acquitted by the jury in Jefferson County, Ala., the county in which it has been publicly stated this lynching was committed.

Mr. President, I am very happy to say that the sentiment in the section of the country from which I come against the crime of lynching has increased marvelously during the past few years. The records will show convictions in the State of Alabama for failure to protect prisoners. I am of the opinion that if there were any one thing needed to reverse this salutary and wholesome growing sentiment against lynching, if there were any one thing that could reverse the trend, it would be the passage of a measure entrusting the trial of such matters to the Federal courts of the Union.

That is not the sentiment of a day; it is a sentiment of generations. Even before the War between the States was fought, Alabama was one of the States which followed the Jeffersonian idea that the courts of the State, not the courts of the Federal Government, should be trusted to enforce the laws with reference to the habits and customs within the State.

After the war was fought the State of Alabama, along with other States in the South, had a baptism of blood. It was subjected to the cruel and grueling punishment inflicted by reason of the tenacity and ruthlessness of a man who took the position that the Southern States were conquered provinces. Federal soldiers were quartered in the homes of the people of my State. Those transactions at that time aroused the opposition of the liberal thought of the Nation. Those who will consult the publications of those days will see that the voice of the liberal-thinking people of the country was finally heard. It took a great number of years, however, for them to recognize the fact which political philosophers had been expounding throughout the ages—that even though a province should be conquered, a wise conqueror left its local habits, customs, and manners untouched.

We all know the history of that period; and I mention it only because the bill under discussion to-day is a lineal descendant of the type of thought that placed the heel of the military oppressor upon the people until they could tolerate it no longer. I am glad to state that at that time men who lived in other sections of the country opposed the measures advanced, such men as the great Voorhees, of Indiana, the "tall sycamore" whose voice was raised in this Capitol time after time in the effort to bring about a return of sanity in a day when emotionalism had swept good, honest, idealistic people from their feet and had caused them to attempt things that could not possibly be performed. The laws of that day were a curse to those they were supposed to benefit as well as a curse to those they were supposed to punish.

I desire to call attention to the fact that in this Capitol there is a statue erected to a distinguished Alabamian. In 1865–66 that distinguished Alabamian went over the State of Alabama to convince the people that they should accept the verdict of the war. He persuaded them that they should build schools in which to educate those who had only recently been slaves. He not only stood for their education, but he stood for the extension to them of the right of suffrage. That man was Mr. J. L. M. Curry. That was not his sentiment alone; it was the sentiment of the sound-thinking people of the State; and it would have continued to be the sentiment of the sound-thinking people of the State if others had not entered that State on account of laws that were enacted at this Capitol largely for political advantage. Had that not been done, the solution of the great problem of two races living together side by side would not have been so much retarded.

I call attention to this fact in order that I may point out that frequently laws which on the part of some are designed for the most benign purposes fail to accomplish those purposes. They react, because, whether the condition to be affected is in the State of New York, the State of Indiana, the State of California, the State of Alabama, or any other State in the Union, we must take into consideration the fact that, after all, this is a democracy; and unless we desire to turn over the administration of the laws to the military authorities, in the final analysis we must depend upon the sentiment of those who enter the jury box.

Mr. President, with those prefatory remarks I desire to call attention to the bill which is now before us. I state again that, while it is called in the press an "antilynching bill", that is a misnomer. I admit that lynching is included in it; but it would constitute such an infinitesimal part of the things affected by the bill that it is a misnomer to call it an antilynching bill.

I do not believe the Senate would willfully and deliberately pass a law which would subject the sheriff of a State to 25 years' imprisonment in the penitentiary if he neglected to protect a mine from striking miners. I assert—and I maintain that any court would so hold—that the bill would impose a penalty of 25 years in prison upon a sheriff not only for failing to protect an individual whose personal safety or life was in danger but would inflict a penalty of 25 years in prison for failing to protect property from striking miners or other striking employees.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senators upholding the bill ought to hear the able argument being made by my colleague. Therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). Does the senior Senator from Alabama yield for that purpose?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, most of the Senators were present at the time the roll was called a little while ago, and if my colleague would consent, I should prefer not to have a quorum called again. I understand there are a great many Senators who feel that they are perfectly familiar with the bill, and there are some, perhaps, who would still be of the opinion, as stated by the newspapers, that it is an antilynching bill. Therefore they would say, "We have to be for it." I assert that if the bill shall ever become a law, those Senators will then have called to their attention what they have perpetrated to enslave the workers of the Nation.

Mr. President, I have carefully analyzed the first paragraph of the pending measure, which is the foundation of the entire bill. The first paragraph defines what a mob is. I assert that there has not been a gathering of strikers during the last 20 years, as a consequence of which there was injury to any person or any property, where the case, if they had been arrested under State authority, could not, if the bill had been the law, have been removed to a Federal court, and they compelled to defend themselves before a judge who was appointed for life instead of a judge selected by the voters in the district where the alleged crime was committed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is now discussing a phase of the bill which is very interesting to me. As I understand the measure, it really provides that if a certain number are congregated together for a certain purpose, then the Federal question may be invoked.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. But if one individual alone is acting in the particular matter, the Federal Constitution does not apply?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. If that be so, it seems to me the argument ought to be concluded very readily, because we certainly have not one Constitution for a half dozen and another Constitution for an individual.

Mr. BLACK. I should like to invite the Senator's attention to the fact that one of the things the measure would do would be to give a change of venue from a State court to a Federal court at any time when someone was willing to make an affidavit that three or more people had gathered together, and as a consequence thereof—note the word "consequence"—someone had been deprived of due process of law or the equal protection of the law. Every time a man is killed he is deprived of due process of law. Every time a striker is given an advantage—and it is always alleged that the sheriff gives strikers an advantage over strikebreakers—the strikebreaker is deprived of the equal protection of the laws.

Under paragraph 2, which I shall discuss later, a paragraph so ably argued in the report on the bill, it is not necessary that a person be killed or injured; for one is deprived of due process of law if his property is damaged by a group of men. If property were damaged by strike breakers, and the charge could be proved—and, I regret to say, such a charge is too frequently proved—that instead of strike breakers damaging the property, actually strikers damaged the property, what would be the result? Those doing the damage would be held for the Federal court upon a mere affidavit by one special officer of the employer, and when they got into the Federal court, they would be tried by a judge appointed for life, who could not be removed by the votes of his peers in the county.

We have, following that, a reversion not merely to the old anti-injunction law—which many Senators have taken credit for supporting in connection with this bill—but it goes further than any court could have gone in an injunction. It would subject strikers to imprisonment, not for 6 months but for 6 years. It would subject a sheriff, not to impeachment alone but to 25 years' imprisonment in the penitentiary, if he failed to exercise that diligence which the Federal court might decide he should have exercised in order to protect the property of a company whose men had gone out on strike, perhaps, because they were not receiving decent wages, or because they were being worked contrary to contract, or contrary to Federal law.

Someone may say, "You are mistaken. This is an antilynching bill." The same thing might have been said of the fourteenth amendment.

I have divided the first paragraph as it must be read by the court, and I invite Senators who have the bill before them to follow me and see if I misquote any part of it. I have divided the paragraph into five parts to show what is designated as a mob. Remember, if there is a mob, immediately the case becomes a Federal case if something happens as a consequence of the actions of the mob. A special officer of a company can make an affidavit that the State courts did not afford due process of law, and the case would go to the Federal court.

Let us consider the first part:

> The phrase "mob or riotous assemblage" * * * shall mean an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert, without authority of law, for the purpose of killing or injuring any person in the custody of any peace officer.

If it were desired to have an antilynching bill, that would limit it to some appreciable extent, although it happens that I have tried cases where under such a provision those who were out on strike could have been taken before a Federal court.

Let us read no. 2:

> The phrase "mob or riotous assemblage" * * * shall mean an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert, without authority of law, for the purpose of killing or injuring any person—> suspected of, charged with, or convicted of the commission of any crime, with the purpose * * * of preventing the apprehension or trial or punishment by law of such person.

These two particular provisions come nearer limiting the bill than any other provision in it. Yet, under the illustration which I gave on the floor of the Senate a few days ago, they would include the group of miners down in Alabama who unfortunately engaged in an altercation a few months ago.

Let me read no. 3:

> The phrase "mob or riotous assemblage" * * * shall mean any assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert, without authority of law, for the purpose of killing or injuring any person * * * suspected of, charged with, or convicted of the commission of any crime, with the * * * consequence—> with the consequence of preventing the apprehension or trial or punishment by law of such person.

Note—

There is a vast difference between charging a purpose and a consequence. In other words, if a person should happen to be killed or injured or removed, the case would go to the Federal court.

Now let me read no. 4, because it is no. 4 and no. 5 particularly to which I desire to call attention in connection with the brief filed in support of the bill:

The phrase "mob or riotous assemblage" * * * shall mean an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert, without authority of law, for the purpose of killing or injuring any person * * * with the purpose * * * of depriving such person of due process of law.

What is due process of law? It is the right to be tried in a court. Every time one man meets another and has an altercation with him and kills him, the person who is killed is deprived of due process of law. If one injures another without cause, the person injured is deprived of due process of law. The only right any citizen in this country has to lay his hands on another man is under authority of law; and certainly if three or more miners, or three or more railroad men, or three or more workers of any kind or type, meet together, it is easy to charge, if they are on a strike, that they met for the purpose of injuring somebody; and if, after that, someone is injured, of course, the strikers can be taken right straight into Federal court upon an affidavit by the special officer of the company.

Let me read the next one:

The phrase "mob or riotous assemblage" * * * shall mean an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert, without authority of law, for the purpose of killing or injuring any person * * * or * * * depriving such person of the equal protection of the laws.

The last two clauses which I have set out in connection with paragraph 2, to which I shall refer in a moment, would make this bill the strongest weapon which has ever been placed in the hands of the employing groups of this country to destroy every association of working men where they attempted to protect their rights, to protect their wages, and to protect the working conditions of their lives. Let me say why I make that statement. I desire to call attention to the statements made in the report as to the objects and purposes of this bill and why it is legal.

In the first place, if Senators will read the report they will see on page 5 a very lengthy argument to sustain the view that it is necessary to construe this bill most liberally. Cases from the Supreme Court are cited for that purpose. It is said that it is necessary to construe it most liberally in order to effectuate what is said to be the purpose of the fourteenth amendment.

In the next place, some Senators may think that the measure affects a State only when it fails in its corporate capacity to do something to protect those who are charged with a crime. That is not the case at all. If Senators will look on page 6 of the committee report, they will find that the brief asserts that the bill affects the State if the State acts in its corporate capacity, or fails to act in its corporate capacity, through its Governor, its executive officers, sheriff, policemen, deputy sheriffs, constables, through its judiciary, its judges, through its ministerial officers, even down to the lowest one of all the categories of officials in the State.

Not only that, but Senators will find in the brief a case from the Supreme Court which states that the State would be bound by the action of the lowest ministerial officer, even a policeman, even though he were acting directly contrary to the law of his State and directly contrary to the Constitution, which is the fundamental law of each State of this Union.

In other words, let us assume that the constitution of the State—any State we may see fit to take—has a prohibition against doing a certain thing. A sheriff, a peace officer, a justice, a deputy sheriff, or a constable acts directly contrary to the statute and the constitution of that State. If Senators will look on page 6 of the committee report, they will find the argument made by Mr. Tuttle to the effect that even though the State officer acts directly contrary to law his action is fastened around the people of that State, and even though it should be the poorest county in all the Nation, if by that officer's neglect—not his criminal action but even his neglect—someone is injured and thereby deprived of due process of law, a verdict for as much as $10,000 can be rendered against the county, even though the action was contrary to a State law, contrary to county administration, and contrary to the belief of every other citizen in the county.

Not only that, Mr. President; but after the judgment is obtained the persons who claim to be injured can levy upon the courthouse in the county to collect the judgment, and can levy on the jail, thereby perhaps satisfying those who seem to think some criminals ought to have things made as easy for them as possible in the United States of America. That is in the bill.

If anyone has any doubt about the theory on which this bill is written, let him read the brief on page 6 in support of this measure, and see if the third argument given in favor of the constitutionality of this bill is not that the action of a ministerial or judicial or executive officer in a State fastens liability on the State, even though the action is contrary to the desire and will and hopes and aspirations and laws of all the other people in the State.

If anyone doubts that the bill is intended to apply to the action of municipal officers, constables, mayors, policemen, street sweepers, all the way to the governor, I ask that he read the brief on pages 8 and 9. Senators will find not only that the argument is made, but they will find, in addition, that an opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States is cited to sustain the viewpoint that if the Congress has any power to enact the proposed law, it has the power to go just to that extent. In other words, if the State of New York or the State of California or any other State in the Union should adopt in its fundamental law a prohibition against lynching—as all of them have, according to my information, either under the crime of murder or specifically designating it is lynching—if its Governor were opposed to lynching, if all its officers but one were opposed to it, under the authority cited, if this bill should become a law, one petty officer in one little county could bring his people under the operation of this bill not only by his direct action but by his failure to act; not only by his deliberate failure to act but by his negligent failure to act!

I wonder how many Senators who have so glibly stated they are for this bill knew that a fine could be imposed upon counties of their States because a peace officer was negligent in the performance of his duties; and not only a fine but the peace officer, not for criminal intent, not for deliberate action, but because, forsooth, he had failed to measure up to the standard set by the Federal court, could be sent to the penitentiary at Atlanta or to any other penitentiary in this country for a period of 25 years. The bill so provides. I wonder how many of those Senators who always take the liberal side of legislation, who realize that history has shown that harshness of punishment is the attribute of a despotism, and that leniency in the way of punishment is the characteristic of a democracy, and who have stated that they would vote for this measure, knew that if a little sheriff in a rural county of their States should exercise wrong judgment and a man should be killed and deprived of due process of law, that little country sheriff could be jerked into the Federal court and sent to the penitentiary for 25 years.

I assert that such punishment could be meted out to him, not because he had deliberately committed a crime but because he had been negligent in the performance of his duties.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I very much appreciate the able speech being made by the Senator from Alabama. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator.

I have scanned the bill, every word of it, two or three times. I am unable to find where the bill provides any effort at retribution or any effort at compensation to the person, we will say, who has been ravished, or the members of such a person's family. The proponents of the bill do not seem to think the members of such a family should have the county fined and that penalties should be imposed to compensate the family. Does the Senator find anything of that character in the bill?

Mr. BLACK. There is nothing in the bill which provides for compensation for anyone except one who is injured or killed by a mob, where three or four are gathered together.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I should like to know why such a distinction is made.

Mr. BLACK. If, perchance, someone had been murdered, and citizens should become infuriated and they went out after the murderer and took the law into their own hands, the county where that occurred would be held liable. Not only that, but if they took the man into another county, even though no one in that other county knew he had been taken there, as I happen to know was the case in one instance, where he was taken just over the line at night, the county where they had taken the prisoner or the person would have to pay half the penalty, and there would be no compensation of any kind to the person who had been originally killed. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is the point I wish to make inquiry about. It seems to me the authors of the bill were more solicitous of the person who may have suffered the fate of being lynched than they were of the victim of the criminal who outraged the public to the point of bringing about the lynching, for if they had not been, why did they provide for fining a county and getting compensation from a county for the members of the family of the one lynched, who, in the first instance, provoked the mob? I should like very much to see the authors of this bill and those supporting it more solicitous in behalf of the absolutely innocent ones and their families.

Mr. BLACK. I might say to the Senator that, so far as my own personal views are concerned, I am inclined to the belief that I would favor a general law which provided where a person is killed or murdered in any way and leaves dependents, that the laws which owed him the duty of protection should see that his dependents are taken care of. I do think, however, it is wholly unfair to provide such compensation for some and not provide it for others.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I understood the Senator to say a moment ago that if any officer of the law had in his possession a prisoner charged with a crime, and negligently let somebody get that prisoner away from him, he would subject himself to imprisonment for 25 years. I do not find such a provision in the bill.

Mr. BLACK. I ask the Senator to read the report.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not care what the report says; I should like to have the Senator point out to me some provision to that effect in the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Certainly. I pointed out in the beginning before the Senator got here what is included in this bill.

Mr. WHEELER. But on page 3, section (b) provides that—

Any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I should like to follow the debate but I cannot hear what is going on.

Mr. BLACK. I will read the exact language to the Senator, beginning at the bottom of page 2:

or any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof charged with the duty of apprehending, keeping in custody, or prosecuting any person—

This includes judges, Governors, prosecuting officers, sheriffs, policemen—participating in such mob or riotous assemblage who fails, neglects, or refuses to make all diligent efforts to perform his duty in apprehending, keeping in custody, or prosecuting to final judgment under the laws of such State all persons so participating, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

I assert that under that the prosecuting attorney of the county where the Senator lives, the sheriff of the county where the Senator lives, a policeman of the county where he lives, the Governor of the State where he lives may be taken into the Federal court and charged with neglect of duty for failing to protect the prisoner and for mere negligence may be sent to the penitentiary of the Federal Government for 5 years; and I assert that it is barbarous and inhuman even to make such a suggestion in a civilized country.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McGILL. I observe from section 5 of the bill that it attempts to fix civil liability attaching to a county in favor of the person injured or the legal representative of the person injured. The county being a subdivision of the State, of a different sovereignty, deriving its powers under the laws of the State, I should like to inquire of the Senator whether or not he feels that the Federal Government, a separate sovereignty, has authority by act of Congress to fix civil liability of any subdivision of a State such as a county?

Mr. BLACK. I will state to the Senator that I have not undertaken to present any of the constitutional phases of this bill because they have been very ably presented by others who have preceded me. I will state, however, that it would certainly be a paradoxical situation if the Federal Government, not founded upon the idea of enacting laws with reference to crime which affect individuals within a State, could have given to it the responsibility of sending to jail the officials of the communities that have been fixed with the responsibility because they failed to enforce the laws for which they alone were responsible. In other words, we will certainly all admit, I think, that the Federal Congress has no right to enact a law against murder in the State of Kansas; that is a question for the State of Kansas. The Federal Government has never attempted to do such a thing; but we find ourselves in a situation where, although the Federal Government cannot enact such a law, except insofar as it affects Federal property for the acquisition of which the Government obtained the consent of the legislature in advance, the authority is here attempted to be given to it to send local officers, charged with the duty of enforcing their own laws, to the penitentiary because they neglect to enforce the laws which they alone can write. Not only that, but we find that Federal authorities could paralyze the hands of the local communities by levying on their jail and on their court house at the same time when they are supposed to have the authority to pass laws and to preserve order within their jurisdictions.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. If any such power as that exists, it must be possible to point to the provision in the Constitution of the United States which grants such power. I should like to know what is the provision upon which reliance is placed for the exercise of such power.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator will find that in the brief which is embodied in the report.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I read the brief.

Mr. BLACK. They attempt to rely on two separate clauses of the Constitution. One is that the Federal Government shall guarantee a republican form of government to each State, and the other is the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. BORAH. So far as the guaranty of a republican form of government is concerned, that seems to me utterly irrelevant; I do not think it has anything to do with the proposition at all. The other is the fourteenth amendment, in reference to denying due process of law. How would we know whether due process of law had been denied until the authorities, the courts, who administer the law within the States had been appealed to and had refused to protect the individual?

Mr. BLACK. Of course, the authors of the bill set up in section 1 what they say should be construed to be a denial of due process of law, and that would be if for 30 days the prosecuting attorney and the judge and the sheriff had failed to catch a man and to try him and to convict him and send him to the penitentiary. If 30 days elapse without all that being done, anyone could go to the Federal court, make an affidavit that he had been denied due process of law, in spite of the fact that in many of the Federal courts of this country it would take 5 years to give him a trial.

Mr. BORAH. If that could be done with reference to a case where a number of people had congregated, if the district attorney or sheriff failed to catch a single one of the individuals who had committed the crime, appeal could be had to the same principle precisely, that due process of law had been denied.

Mr. BLACK. There can be no possible doubt about that.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, if this principle is correct, the Federal Government may step in and take over completely and absolutely the administration of the criminal laws of the State on the theory that they were not being properly administered.

Mr. BLACK. That is absolutely correct. It may take over the law governing each separate community in the United States. If that be correct, there never was any reason for the adoption of the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. The suggestion of the Senator from Idaho is certainly a most pertinent and comprehensive one. Let me suggest to the Senator from Alabama that if a man's life is taken or he is injured by one individual, has not his right been infringed to the same degree as if he were killed or injured by three individuals?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly he would be just as dead, if killed by one, as if he had been killed by three.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Federal Government has the power to intervene in a case because three individuals are acting in concert, why would it not have the power to enter the State in any case where a man was murdered or his property was despoiled or where, on any kind of a claim, his rights under the fourteenth amendment were not guaranteed to the same extent that some other citizen's rights were guaranteed? Why could not the Federal Government step in, not only as to his personal safety but as to his property rights, because the fourteenth amendment applies as well to property rights as it does to individual rights?

Mr. BLACK. That fact as to property rights is pointed out in the brief.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Idaho again.

Mr. BORAH. Some of the large cities have had great difficulty in enforcing the law. There has been almost a reign of terror in some of them. Machine guns in the hands of criminals wounding and killing people.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; in some of the cities even more than 14 have been killed in 1 year.

Mr. BORAH. If there is any justification for the Federal Government moving into the States and undertaking the enforcement of the criminal law in the instances which are cited by this bill, there would be no exception, and the people of the cities would have a perfect right to invoke the Federal Government to take charge of the enforcement of the criminal laws in the cities.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct. If the law should be carried to its logical conclusion Tammany could not supply enough officers in New York City; they would exhaust their entire roster in 3 years, because the remainder would go to the penitentiary.

Mr. BORAH. Not only that but, in all probability, if the Federal Government should move in, it would take entire possession of Tammany.

Mr. BLACK. Of course, they would soon take possession of it, because if Senators will examine the Wickersham report and see how many have committed crimes in the city of New York who have not been apprehended and who have not been punished and who have not been convicted, and if they will also consult the records and ascertain how many times it has been charged that the failure of that city and of other cities to punish was because of improper motives of officials and improper influences brought to bear upon them, they will understand how it would be impossible for any political organization to supply enough officials from day to day, from week to week, from month to month, from year to year to take the places of those in the ever-continuing procession going to the penitentiary.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. I may be under a misapprehension and for that reason I should like to ask the Senator a question. Under the terms of the bill which it is sought to bring before the Senate, a State court would not be divested of jurisdiction and a Federal court would not be vested with jurisdiction unless and until some individual made an affidavit?

Mr. BLACK. Someone could always be found who would make an affidavit. It is usually easy to find someone who will make an affidavit. I very seriously doubt, under the bill, whether a man could plead former jeopardy if he had been tried in one jurisdiction and later should be indicted in the other. I do not believe he could.

Mr. GORE. My point is that jurisdiction to be vested under the terms of the bill would depend upon one individual making an affidavit.

Mr. BLACK. Certainly taking the case to the Federal court would depend upon one individual making an affidavit. As the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has well pointed out—and I concede it absolutely—if the Federal Government has the power to punish where three or more have committed a crime in a State, there is no earthly reason why it does not have the same power to punish where one has committed the identical crime. The individual is just as dead when he has been shot and killed by one as when he has been killed by three.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. In the light of the very clear statement by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], which no one can successfully contradict, I wish to suggest that those who are opposing consideration of the measure are fighting, first, for the lives of the 48 States which constitute the Union, and are fighting, second, for the character of the Union itself.

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator in that connection that we are fighting against the philosophy declared by Mr. Charles Sumner when he said the Southern States had committed suicide. That was the entire philosophy upon which he based his attack upon the South shortly after the war. He took the position that those particular States had committed suicide. Mr. Stevens took the position, not that they had committed suicide, but that they were conquered provinces.

As the Senator from North Carolina has well pointed out, it is certainly true that if this bill can be enacted into law, whether or not the States committed suicide, they would be murdered by the representatives whom they had sent to the Capitol in the city of Washington.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. It ought to be said that Mr. Lincoln had the directly opposite view to that of Mr. Sumner and Thaddeus Stevens. The views of Sumner and Stevens were combatted by President Lincoln so long as he lived.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct. So did President Johnson. It was by reason of President Johnson's courageous stand for the principle for which he stood, it was on account of his standing up like a man in the face of a hostility second to none that has ever been heaped upon an individual in the White House, that he was dragged into this Capitol and subjected to the indignity of a trial.

At that time there were certain idealists in the country who were asserting that President Johnson was wrong and they were praying in certain church organizations in the United States not that justice should be done, but that the Senate should vote to impeach President Johnson.

Telegrams were sent by the hundreds and by the thousands, prompted by idealism, I admit, but prompted by an idealism which concealed and blurred reason, sanity, and judgment, and which, if their principles had been adopted, would have made of our Republic one Union with no State line of any kind, with no privilege of any community to adopt any law which every other community did not adopt, regulating their habits and their customs.

Mr. President, it might be appropriate at this time for me to state, with reference to one part of our system of government, one thing in connection with which I am of the opinion that time itself has wrought changes and conditions.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield for that purpose?

Mr. BLACK. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Johnson	Pope
Ashurst	Coolidge	Keyes	Radcliffe
Austin	Copeland	King	Robinson
Bachman	Costigan	La Follette	Russell
Bailey	Couzens	Lewis	Schall
Bankhead	Dickinson	Logan	Schwellenbach
Barbour	Dieterich	Lonergan	Sheppard
Barkley	Donahey	Long	Shipstead
Bilbo	Duffy	McCarran	Smith
Black	Fletcher	McGill	Steiwer
Bone	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	George	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Gerry	Minton	Townsend
Bulkley	Gibson	Moore	Trammell
Bulow	Glass	Murphy	Truman
Burke	Gore	Murray	Tydings
Byrd	Guffey	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hale	Norris	Van Nuys
Capper	Harrison	Nye	Wagner
Caraway	Hastings	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Carey	Hatch	Overton	Wheeler
Clark	Hayden	Pittman	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, one of the tragic things about this measure is that there are some who are attempting to seize upon it for political advantage in order to try to prove their friendship for many voters in this country, although history does not record that in their political efforts in that regard heretofore they have raised the standard of living of those they claim to love, nor have they added to their opportunities for a more abundant life.

Some sentiment of that kind has been created, and therefore some of those who are so anxious at this time to have this measure voted upon that they vote practically in a solid block believe that by doing this they can cause the people of the country to forget their history with reference to economic affairs. I refer at this time particularly to those "regulars" on the other side of the Chamber who belong to the party of Mr. Mellon, and who subscribe to the idea that he was the greatest Secretary of the Treasury the world has ever known, and who hope by reason of this particular measure again to get a foothold in the political arena, and to cause the people to forget that in reality their interest is not in the large group of voters whom they hope to pacify and win by their action; but their desire is again to place the country in the grip of the same predatory and privileged interests that practically brought us to destruction at the end of 1929. It is a sad and tragic thing to me that some of those who are most liberal in their views, and who really honestly desire to raise the standard of opportunity of the great masses of American men and women belonging to all races, find themselves at this juncture fighting side by side with the apostles of special privilege and greed.

Mr. President, it is my belief that if any administration in all the history of mankind has shown an honest desire to raise the standard of living of the great masses of American men and women, it is the present administration. Whether or not one agrees with the methods adopted, it is difficult for me to understand how anyone can deny this fact.

We have under consideration at the present time by the Finance Committee a bill for social security, a bill which will affect millions and millions of American men and women, irrespective of race or creed or color. That bill, if enacted into law, will give a ray of hope to millions of men and women who are now in despair. It will not affect possibly 14 individuals; it will affect millions of individuals.

While I do not agree in detail with each of the provisions of that measure, in my judgment, it is one of the most forward and progressive steps for giving security to the underprivileged of this Nation that has ever been proposed since this became a self-governing country; and yet we find ourselves now unable in this body to continue preparation for that measure, to consider the payment of the soldiers' adjusted compensation, or to provide various other means of adding to the peace and hope and security of the men and women of the Nation, chiefly because, as I assert here, of the political pressure brought about, not in the main—and I do not refer to all individuals—by those who are really interested in the great masses of men and women of the country, but by some with the political hope that they again may seize the reins of government and continue to operate it not for the benefit of all but for the benefit of their favored few.

Mr. President, I had begun an analysis of the bill. I desire now to take up section 2, which provides that—

> If any State or governmental subdivision thereof fails, neglects—

Note the word "neglects" again—

> or refuses to provide and maintain protection to the life or person of any individual within its jurisdiction against a mob of riotous assemblage, whether by way of preventing or punishing the acts thereof, such State shall by reason of such failure, neglect, or refusal be deemed to have denied to such person due process of law and the equal protection of the laws of the State—

And for that reason, it is said, the bill is to be enacted.

Now let us refer for just a moment to the fourteenth amendment.

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. * * * nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Did any Member of the Senate hear me read the word "corporation" as I read the fourteenth amendment? He did not. The word "corporation" does not appear in the fourteenth amendment. Did Senators note that out of 529 cases during a period of 10 years, 285 cases decided by the Supreme Court applied the fourteenth amendment to protect corporations? What does this section of the bill say, and what does every section of the bill say? It refers to injuring a "person." What is a person? Has not the Supreme Court said what a person is? Does not the fourteenth amendment provide that if a person is injured in his property without due process of law it shall be contrary to the Constitution? Is there anyone who thinks the Court would decide differently as to the meaning of the word "person" if this bill should be taken before them? What is meant by injury to a person known as a corporation? One cannot commit an assault on a corporation. One cannot murder a corporation. One cannot destroy a corporation's life by shooting it with a gun. There is only one way in which a corporation may be injured, and that is by injuring its property, and here, in a bill which the press has heralded as an antilynching bill, we find it provided that if two or more persons get together, and, as a consequence, a corporation is injured, they are depriving that corporation of due process of law. Hiding behind a sentiment against lynching, it is proposed now to have enacted a law which will fit the predatory interests of the Nation, and, as I have previously stated, will crucify every labor organization which exists in the United States of America.

How can such a corporation get into a Federal court? It is a very simple process; it requires only an affidavit. Every lawyer here knows how one now gets into a Federal court with a case involving over $3,000.

I might take occasion at this juncture to say that this is not the first time I have objected to more jurisdiction being given to the Federal courts. The great senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has had pending in this body for quite a number of years a bill which would reduce the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, and, if I am not mistaken, a great many of those who are here, and some who have indicated they would favor the so-called "antilynching measure", have supported the bill of the Senator from Nebraska.

If it be right to reduce the jurisdiction of the Federal courts instead of increasing it, as proposed by the bill of the Senator from Nebraska, why should we now rush over ourselves in order to add more jurisdiction to the Federal courts, presided over by judges appointed for life, to have them take jurisdiction of the matters affecting the daily life and customs and habits of the people of the country, and particularly to rush into the Federal courts the organized workers of the Nation every time three or more of them gather together?

Do not be deceived. If this bill should be enacted at the next session, Congress would be asked to reduce the number defined as a mob from 3 to 2, or to 1, and it would likely be done. It would certainly be done if those who have adopted reactionary policies should succeed in their political maneuvering and again find themselves where they can control the laws of the Nation.

Mr. President, there is no argument which can possibly be advanced to justify the conclusion that a murder committed by three can be removed to a Federal court and a murder committed by two must remain in a State court. There is no person who can advance any argument to sustain the contention that a murder committed by three can be removed to a Federal court and the murder committed by one can only be tried in a State court. So we find ourselves in this situation: The Federal Constitution leaves to the States the right to determine the type of criminal laws they will enact, and yet the Federal Congress is asked to say, "After you have enacted these laws, if you do not prosecute the violators and punish them within 30 days, we will take out of the hands of the State courts the right to prosecute and punish at all."

With reference to the provision in section 2 of the bill, that if the State neglects to perform its duties it shall be considered to have deprived someone of the equal protection of the laws, I have just a word to say. Note that that has no reference whatever to whether a man is a prisoner or not. It is not limited to natural persons; it includes artificial persons, which would cover corporations.

Let me invite attention in this connection to just what the committee reports a State to be. In other words, how does a State act? How is it going to neglect its duty? Let us turn to page 6 of the report, where I read the following from the brief:

> For the same reason the prohibitions of the fourteenth amendment apply to local officers as well as to the State-wide officers, for officers of counties, States, or other local subdivisions of government are in the ultimate analysis the repository of the power of the State. * * *
> So likewise in Yick Wo v. Hopkins (118 U. S. 356)—

Which case went up from California—

> it was held that a municipal ordinance to regulate the carrying on of public laundries within the limits of the city of San Francisco, which conferred purely arbitrary power upon the municipal authorities to give or withhold consent, was violative of the fourteenth amendment. * * *
> In Tarrance v. Florida (188 U. S. 519) Mr. Justice Brewer, speaking for the Supreme Court said:
>
> "The contention of plaintiffs in error is that they were denied the equal protection of the laws by reason of an actual discrimination against their race. The law of the State is not challenged but its administration is complained of. * * *
>
> "Such an actual discrimination is as potential in creating a denial of equality of rights as a discrimination made by law."

Again, it is said on page 6:

> In Virginia v. Rives (100 U. S. 313) it was said:
> "It is doubtless true that a State may act through different agencies, either by its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities."

Let me call attention to what this means. It means that the Governor of every State is brought within the provisions of the measure. It means that a charge can be made against a Governor for failure to have a man apprehended, to have a man tried, and to have a man convicted. It does not recognize the fact that the States have a right to try an accused man, but it means that the Governor places himself within the scope of this proposed law if he is negligent in the performance of his duty as Governor, and that question would have to be determined by the court and by the jury.

What else does it mean? It means that where a case was tried in court a charge could be made that the judge had been negligent in charging the jury. The charge could be made that he had been negligent in permitting certain evidence to be introduced in the case, or that he had been negligent in failing to reprimand counsel because counsel had made a statement which should not have been made, and the judge would be brought within the scope of the act, and he could be tried. It means that every prosecuting attorney in the Nation would have his actions reviewed in order to determine whether he had been properly diligent in prosecutions.

A few days ago the Supreme Court rendered a decision directly to the contrary of this hypothesis. The Supreme Court handed down a decision to the effect that it was not merely the duty of a prosecuting attorney to convict; that one of the highest and most sacred duties of a prosecuting attorney was to see that each side had its case properly presented to the jury. But under the pending measure the district attorney must walk with caution, he must plant his feet with care, because, forsooth, if he neglects to perform a single duty, he can be taken into a Federal court and tried, under the proposed law, for neglecting to perform his duty, and he can be sentenced to the penitentiary for a period of 5 years.

Mr. President, I do not believe there has ever been a civilized nation on earth which would send a man to the penitentiary for 5 years for plain, simple negligence. Yet those who have glibly said they are for the pending measure, if they vote for it, must vote to make it a crime to be negligent in the performance of duties and to convict a man and to put the stigma of a felon upon him for negligence, and to send him to the penitentiary for 5 years. Someone raised a question about this statement a few moments ago and asked me where that was provided, and I read the provision.

Let us go now to section 3. If this were merely an antilynching bill, as it has been so widely heralded to be, there would be no reason in the world for having any more in section 3 than the parts included in lines 15 to 24. Lines 15 to 24 provide that any person or employee of a State shall be included—and remember, that means governor, lieutenant governor, attorney general, secretary of state, probate judges, circuit judges, supreme court judges, inferior court judges, prosecuting attorneys, policemen, constables, deputy constables, street sweepers, all the employees of the State. If any Senator has any doubt about it including all of them, let him read the report of the committee which reported the bill to the Senate. If any one of these—> who is charged with the duty or who possesses the power or authority as such officer or employee to protect the life or person—

And remember, "person" includes a corporation; it included it in the fourteenth amendment, and it includes it here, and there is nothing in the world which can be said to deny that it includes a corporation—> to protect the life or person of any individual injured or put to death by any mob or riotous assemblage or any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof having any such individual in his custody—

Note—

who fails, neglects, or refuses to make all diligent efforts to protect such individual from being so injured or being put to death—

Then such person—shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years.

What does that mean? That includes the judge of the county. He certainly is charged with responsibility for protecting the lives and persons of individuals put to death. The judge and prosecuting attorney certainly are charged with the duty of attempting to protect them. It includes them all. And not that for the first time in the history of any civilized government, except a despotism, so far as I have been able to read history, we propose to give the Central Government the power to send the prosecuting attorney to the penitentiary because a jury might think he had been too fair to the man he was prosecuting as a criminal.

I had always subscribed to the idea that a man was entitled to a fair trial; that he was entitled to be presumed innocent until he had been proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. I had thought that the laws of this Nation, instead of attempting to hold a club over prosecuting attorneys to force them to prosecute with harshness and with vigor, really were designed to the end that those carrying them out would act as the Supreme Court of the United States said last week they should act—to try to convict only the guilty, but to protect the innocent. But, lo and behold! in this bill, which is called an antilynching bill, we have a new and novel doctrine announced in this democracy for the first time. Each prosecuting attorney, all over this Nation, when he is called upon to prosecute a man charged with a crime, has a sword of Damocles hanging over his head, with the knowledge that if he fails to prosecute as vigorously as some think he should he can be taken into the Federal court and there tried and sent to the penitentiary.

Let us suppose, as has frequently happened, that a strike has occurred. An individual miner or trainman—and I have tried both of them on such charges—may be charged with injuring a strike breaker. It is charged that three of them were present. Suppose a prosecuting attorney should decide the man was not guilty. Would he dare to tell the jury so? He would not. Would that prosecuting attorney dare to rise from his chair and tell the jury, "I believe that the killing of this miner was justified"? He would not. Why would he not? Because he would know that his Government, the Government of the United States, a democracy, had passed a law which subjected the prosecuting attorney to 5 years' imprisonment, and to have the stigma of felony put upon his brow if he neglected to do everything he could to convict that man.

Mr. President, let all who desire secure any political advantage they may think is theirs from attempting to force such a bill upon the American people. If it should pass, time will tell who was right. I state that there is no class in America which would be more injured by this bill than those who belong to the colored race, whose wages have frequently been so low as to be a crime against civilization and against decency, and whose wages have been raised more by organization of men than by any other method, and, practically, that has been the only method by which their wages have been raised, until the present administration began to secure the enactment of its legislative program.

I realize that someone may say, "Well, there has been some kind of a recommendation of this bill by organized labor." That is wholly immaterial. I make the assertion that if this bill should become a law, within 2 years from the date it was signed and went into operation there would be the greatest change in the position of organized labor this country has ever known in a like period of time, because this law would crucify organized labor, and the man in the ranks would know what was the matter.

I do not yield to any man on this floor in my loyalty to the ideas of good working conditions for the people of this country, white or black, or any other type. I yield to none in the desire to see that they receive an honest compensation for an honest day's work. If I had my way about it, I would make the minimum wages higher than they now are. I yield to none in my desire to see that they have good working conditions as to hours and the conditions in which they toil. But I state, Mr. President, that nothing could be more absurd or more ridiculous than for people to come here at one session of Congress and fight and become elated over a victory which prevents the issuance of injunctions by Federal courts against strikers, and at the very next session of Congress come into this body and offer and pass a bill which makes a mob of any three or four strikers who gather together, as a consequence of whose actions somebody is injured or killed.

I pointed out a few moments ago that the injury can be to a corporation and that the injury can be to the corporation's property. It will be useless to pass 7 (a)'s; it will be useless to pass labor-disputes bills; it will be useless to set up a vast machinery to protect the rights of laboring people to organize, if at the same time we shunt them off into the Federal courts, the place they have always abhorred and detested, every time three or more of them are gathered together and somebody's property is injured or some person is injured.

I make another statement. The matter of injury to a corporation or its property cannot be eliminated from a bill of this type. It cannot be done. The Constitution says that laws must apply with uniformity. There is no attempt to eliminate those matters in this bill in the form in which it now appears. They are included. And yet we find that sometimes, perchance, the unions elect a sheriff, and, of course, when they do it is charged that he is too friendly to them. Now, let us suppose that such a condition has existed in a county, and there is a trial held in that county. The sheriff goes down and makes an investigation, reaches the conclusion that the strikers did not commit the crime they are alleged to have committed at all; that strike breakers had been utilized to plant an apparent crime. Suppose the sheriff should decline to arrest the strikers. Do Senators think that he would dare to decline to arrest them if somebody told him they were guilty? If he did, an affidavit could be made in the Federal court and the sheriff could be taken in and given 5 years' imprisonment for failure to perform his duty.

Let us consider the next part of this section:

Any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof who is charged with the duty of apprehending—

Note this language—

apprehending—

That means catching. That includes the Governor and the sheriffs and the constables and police—keeping in custody—

That would include the sheriffs and the judges, because the judges have a responsibility with reference to keeping in custody—or prosecuting any person—

That includes the district attorney and the attorney general—or prosecuting any person participating in such mob or riotous assembly—

Note—

who fails, neglects, or refuses to make all diligent efforts to perform his duty in apprehending, keeping in custody, or prosecuting to final judgment under the laws of such State all persons so participating, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years.

What does that mean? It means that every time a prisoner escapes, somebody may have the Governor tried; it means that if the prosecuting attorney fails to prosecute he may go to the penitentiary; and the trial is taken away from the State where the crime was committed and is conducted by the Federal court. We find that some of those who have said that they favored the bill of the Senator from Nebraska, designed to reduce the power of the Federal courts and their jurisdiction, in line with the fight made by Mr. Jefferson in the early days of the Republic, are now anxious to throw thousands of cases into those courts under the bill which is here pending, for, I assert, that even a careless reading of it will show that it is not limited to lynching.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Johnson	Pope
Ashurst	Coolidge	Keyes	Radcliffe
Austin	Copeland	King	Robinson
Bachman	Costigan	La Follette	Russell
Bailey	Couzens	Lewis	Schall
Bankhead	Dickinson	Logan	Schwellenbach
Barbour	Dieterich	Lonergan	Sheppard
Barkley	Donahey	Long	Shipstead
Bilbo	Duffy	McCarran	Smith
Black	Fletcher	McGill	Steiwer
Bone	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	George	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Gerry	Minton	Townsend
Bulkley	Gibson	Moore	Trammell
Bulow	Glass	Murphy	Truman
Burke	Gore	Murray	Tydings
Byrd	Guffey	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hale	Norris	Van Nuys
Capper	Harrison	Nye	Wagner
Caraway	Hastings	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Carey	Hatch	Overton	Wheeler
Clark	Hayden	Pittman	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

(At this point Mr. SCHALL presented a letter, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry relative to the eradication of cattle diseases. His remarks and the letter appear elsewhere under the appropriate heading.)

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the interruption of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] reminds me that he has placed in the RECORD several speeches vigorously upholding the rights of the States; it reminds me that he and others on the other side have been attacking the present administration to some extent for what they said was an invasion of the rights of the States. This bill would take away from the States which they represent the right to try in the local State courts any crime committed by more than three persons resulting in the injury or death of an individual, and would subject their sheriffs, their prosecuting attorneys, their judges, their Governors, their policemen, and constables and their deputy constables to trial in the Federal court, with a punishment of 5 years in the penitentiary for negligence in the performance of their duty. Yet great speeches have been made on State rights.

Mr. President, with reference to subdivision (b) of section 3, on page 3, I will state that if any Federal antilynching law be justifiable that section should be adopted. I have no criticism of subdivision (b) of section 3, if it be justifiable to enact a Federal antilynching law. I will state, however, that that section provides a 25-year punishment for an official who conspires to murder. In Alabama the punishment is death or life imprisonment; but if it be thought desirable to reduce the punishment provided by a State to 25 years' imprisonment, it will be perfectly all right to enact subdivision (b) of section 3. I may state that the records will disclose that in Alabama the law to which I refer has been invoked and juries have recognized it.

Now let us get down to section 4. I particularly call the attention of the gentlemen who are interested in the rights of their States and the rights of their State courts to section 4. That section confers jurisdiction on the district court in the district "wherein the person is injured or put to death by a mob or riotous assemblage." Of course, if by this bill we shall confer jurisdiction on the Federal courts where the killing or injury is brought about by three or more, we will reduce it to one the next time, because if it is proper to prosecute in the Federal court three who kill a man, it is just as necessary to prosecute one.

I deny the logic and the consistency of those who are so interested in the rights of individuals that when a murder is committed by three or four persons they would send the case to the Federal court, but if a murder is committed by one man they would have him tried in the State court.

SEC. 4. The District Court of the United States judicial district wherein the person is injured or put to death by a mob or riotous assemblage shall have jurisdiction to try and to punish, in accordance with the laws of the State where the injury is inflicted or the homicide is committed, any and all persons who participate therein.

That is the way jurisdiction is to be given to the Federal court, this great haven of refuge, the Federal court; this great repository of knowledge and wisdom and justice, the Federal court; this great safeguard presided over by men appointed for life by an individual who is so much better qualified to preserve the rights of the people than is a court presided over by a man elected by the people themselves.

It is a little strange to me that in the main those who we would suppose would stand by the old liberal theory of letting the people elect as many of their officials as possible are pushing with vigor the idea of doing away with the State courts for the protection of the people and seeking to send them into a court whose judges they do not elect.

If I had my way, the Constitution of the United States would be amended so as to provide that Federal judges should be elected, because I believe in a democracy, and I believe in the election of judges by the people themselves. It has been said that judges so elected might be amenable to the people. Why should they not be? Whose Government is this? Does it belong to one man who has the appointing power? Do Senators who think that all wisdom and all justice repose in the Federal court subscribe to the gospel that we should extend still further the appointment of officers instead of having them elected by the people? I wonder if Senators on the other side who pay lip service to the man who said, "government of the people, by the people, and for the people", want the people to elect their judges, or if the reason why some of them are supporting the pending motion is that it is not seen that under the bill citizens can be rushed from all over the Nation into the arms of the Federal court, there to have their rights determined by a judge appointed for life.

So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to trust to the justice of the people rather than to the justice merely of judges appointed for life. Let Senators who subscribe to the great principles of democracy explain why it is they want to rush thousands of cases into courts presided over by the very judges who issued the very injunctions which some of them have been condemning on the floor of the Senate and to prevent which they favored prohibitory legislation. There is no defense for such a position. The bill places under the jurisdiction of the Federal court every one of the strikers whom we endeavored to protect by the enactment of the Norris-LaGuardia bill. The pending bill would throw them back into the Federal court. Not only would it throw them back to that court, but, sad to relate, it would take away the last chance they have to hope for a judge who might not be unfriendly, for a sheriff who might not be unfriendly, for a prosecuting attorney who might not be unfriendly, none of whom would dare to place his neck in the Federal noose when he knew any special officer or any strikebreaker could, by a simple affidavit in a Federal court, take that judge or sheriff or prosecuting attorney, or even the governor, into the Federal court, and, if he were convicted, subject him to a sentence of at least 5 years in the penitentiary—and all this in the name of protecting members of the colored race!

Mr. President, I yield to no man in my hostility and my antagonism to the crime of lynching; I make no defense for it; I have none to make; it is abhorrent to me; but in the name of antilynching, to crucify the hopes and the aspirations of the millions of workers of the country is beyond my conception and beyond my comprehension.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator this morning mentioned that Alabama was charged with a lynching last year. He denied the charge, and stated there was no lynching in Alabama last year.

Mr. BLACK. That is true; there was no lynching there last year.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am wondering if there has been some duplication in the propaganda touching upon the bill. For instance, it is charged there was a lynching in Jackson County, Fla., last year. I telegraphed the secretary of state to furnish me with a statement giving the established and essential facts in connection with that lynching in Jackson County.

It appears from the statement that the officers arrested a criminal and, in order to escape the pursuing crowd, or mob, if you will, took him from Marianna to Panama City, then to Pensacola, and thence to Brewton, Ala. It was at Brewton that the mob, or pursuing crowd, overtook them and captured the criminal, whence they brought him back into Jackson County, Fla.

It is possible there has been some duplication with reference to this matter. It may be that Alabama was charged with this lynching because the man was seized in Alabama and taken back to Jackson County, Fla., where he was lynched.

I merely mention that in passing. Then the thought occurred to me that if the bill should be enacted into law, why could not the sheriff and other officers, even the county and State officers of Alabama, be pursued for violation of the provisions of the bill, although they were in nowise responsible for what occurred in any way, and at the same time the officers in Florida could be pursued for the same offense?

If the Senator will permit me, I should like to have the clerk read the telegram from the secretary of state of Florida. It states the facts with reference to that occurrence in Jackson County.

Mr. BLACK. I am glad to yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the telegram, as follows:

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., April 27, 1935.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Further reference your wire, Marianna lynching, am advised by press representatives that Claude Neal, Negro, was lynched somewhere in Jackson County on night of October 25, 1934, by mob of men who claimed he had attacked and killed Lola Cannidy, white farm girl. Girl's body was found on father's farm and search immediately was started for Neal. He was arrested by Jackson County officers, who spirited him from Marianna to Panama City, then to Pensacola, and then to Brewton, Ala., in effort to escape pursuing mob. After Negro was placed in jail at Brewton, mob appeared and demanded his custody, finally overpowering jail guards and taking Negro. Returning to Jackson County, so far as best information available indicates, mob lynched Negro and at dawn strung his body to limb of tree in city of Marianna. Family of Miss Cannidy claimed Negro had attacked and ravished her and had killed her and attempted to conceal body in order to prevent discovery of his attack.

R. A. GRAY, Secretary of State.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I was discussing section 4 of the bill, which provides that cases can be removed into the Federal court in this manner:

Provided, That it is first made to appear to such court (1) that the officers of the State charged with the duty of apprehending—

Note, now—

apprehending—

That is the executive officer—

prosecuting—

That is the district attorney—and punishing—

That is the court—such offenders.

The statement is that it must be made to appear that they failed to apprehend, prosecute, or punish. Suppose they try the man and turn him loose. They have failed to punish him. The Federal court will have jurisdiction of the crime if this bill shall be enacted. Former jeopardy cannot be pleaded because of an acquittal in a State court; so, in order to be absolutely sure of conferring jurisdiction, the proponents of this bill go to the extent of providing that if the offender has not been punished—in other words, if he has not been convicted—then, upon one affidavit made by one person, the case can be removed to the Federal court, the repository of wisdom and justice presided over by a man appointed for life, and there tried after he has already been prosecuted.

Not only that; 30 days is all that the State is allowed in which to try him. I may be wrong, but I was told not long ago, when an Alabama Federal judge was sent to the city of New York to help try cases in the Federal court in the city of New York, that they were trying cases that were 4 or 5 years old in the Federal courts of the city of New York.

In this bill it is made prima facie evidence that the States are failing to do their duty if they do not apprehend, catch, prosecute, try, and convict within a period of 30 days. In other words, when the State does not try the offender in 30 days, remove the case to the Federal court so that there can be a delay of 5 years before trying him.

Mr. President, if it be true that a case is to be removed from the State court because the jurors who are drawn in that court are not in sympathy with the prosecution, why should we limit that procedure to one type of case? It has been charged in various sections of the country that it is difficult to convict in the courts persons who belong to certain political organizations. Why not bring them within the bill? It was charged several years ago, for instance, in the city of Chicago that it was impossible to convict before the juries of the State courts anybody who belonged to a certain political ring. Why not bring them in, if the juries will not convict? It has been charged from time to time—whether or not it is true I do not know—that in certain instances it has been impossible to convict in the city of New York persons who were closely associated with Tammany. If that be true and an affidavit to that effect can be made, why should not that case be removed to the Federal court, where different types of jurors can be obtained?

In other words, if we are going to establish a precedent of removing cases from the State court upon the ground of prejudice of jurors, why should that procedure be limited to a single type of case? Why should we not, in order to obtain justice, have them all taken over by these repositories of wisdom and justice, the Federal courts of the United States?

Now, what happens? The State has failed to catch, prosecute vigorously, and convict in 30 days. We have a so-called "trial", we will say, after this bill is enacted. As the case is tried the shadow of this bill is in the face of the judge.

The shadow of this bill is in the face of the prosecuting attorney. The shadow of this bill is in the face of the sheriff. Each one of them, as he looks over at the little defendant, perhaps a poor and humble man, perhaps nothing more than a miner belonging to a union, making $6 a day, he feels sorry for him. Perhaps they think, perchance, he is not guilty. Perhaps there enters into their minds the thought that the crime was "planted" on him. What do they do? Do they dare raise their voices and tell the jury that? They do not. The shadow of this bill haunts them, even as they lie down and try to sleep, with the picture of the defendant fresh on their waking vision. They know that if they do not prosecute with all the vigor possible, if they are not vicious before the jury, somebody will go into the Federal court and swear that the prosecuting attorney neglected his duty, that the sheriff neglected his duty, that the judge neglected his duty. Therefore, we find a trial not according to the democratic institutions of this country, where a man is supposed to have the benefit of a reasonable doubt, but we have a trial with the shadow of the heavy hand of the Federal judiciary hanging over the accused man, hanging over the defendant, hanging over the judge, hanging over the jury, because the jury is a part of the trial. Yet it is said that somebody is going to get some political advantage out of trying to pass a bill such as that!

It is a travesty and a crime against the sacred and traditional principles of justice of the American people even to introduce a bill which places the threat of the stamp of infamy upon the brow of a district attorney because, perchance, he neglects to prosecute as vigorously as somebody thinks he should prosecute. That is in the bill. Let him who says it is not in the bill rise to defend it. I have just read it.

Then, Mr. President, what is done? We will assume, now, that the sheriff has been tried and convicted; the district attorney has been tried and convicted; the judge has been tried and sent to the penitentiary. The Governor of the State has been taken; and, not satisfied with that, those who consider themselves injured sue the county and obtain a judgment. Then, they levy on the courthouse. What does the bill provide?—

Such court shall have jurisdiction to enforce payment thereof by levy of execution upon any property of the county.

Who owns the courthouse? The county. Who owns the jail? The county. It is true that they would be practically useless if this bill should pass. Perhaps there is no reason why the courthouse and the jail should not be levied upon. They would cease to serve any useful function in any State in the Union, they would cease to have any place, because there would be nothing left to be done there. Certainly no one should call a courthouse a temple of justice if, as a defendent charged with a crime is tried, the district attorney and the judge and the sheriff and the officials stand there cowering with fear because they feel the possibility of the heavy hand of the Federal judiciary, backed, if need be, not only by the marshal but by the tramping march of Federal troops. That is what occurred before. Of course, it did not work. No greater injury was ever done the Negro population of the South than by the laws which were put on the statute books during reconstruction days.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question about section 4, which he is now discussing.

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. That section provides that—

The District Court of the United States * * * shall have jurisdiction to try and to punish, in accordance with the laws of the State where the injury is inflicted or the homicide is committed, any and all persons who participate therein.

Then follows the proviso which is the remainder of the section. Before the court has jurisdiction to try the offender the finding must be made, as I understand, as provided in the proviso. Suppose there is a dispute about that; where will that question be tried.

Mr. BLACK. The Federal judge will try it.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the case have to be tried in the Federal courts before the warrant is issued? It has not any jurisdiction to try until a certain finding is made. In order to give the court jurisdiction, even before the man is arrested, will it not be necessary first to determine?—

That the officers of the State charged with the duty of apprehending, prosecuting, and punishing * * * under the laws of the State * * * have failed, neglected, or refused to apprehend, prosecute, or punish * * *.

Will not that finding have to be made somewhere?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Will not that finding have to be made in order to give the Federal court jurisdiction to try the defendant?

Mr. BLACK. That is true, except that the Senator will notice that the failure must be for a period longer than 30 days.

Mr. NORRIS. That is another fact which would not be difficult to determine, because 30 days is fixed. But before the court could try a defendant he would have to be satisfied that the officers had failed or neglected to do their duty. That question would have to be tried somewhere if the officers denied it. Suppose the officers said, "We have not failed. We have done our duty. We have done the best we could." If they had a trial first to determine whether or not they had done their duty, and if it was found on that trial that they had done their duty, had done the best they could, then the court would not have any jurisdiction. And would not that finding have to be made before a warrant could be issued? There is no doubt it would have to be made before the man could be tried. So the warrant would be issued and the man could not be tried, even though he were willing to be tried, but the court would first have to try this other question.

Would there be a jury trial of the preliminary question? Would not the court have to determine that, and would not the court take evidence on that controverted question and determine it, before he would proceed to the trial of the defendant? Or would it all be in one trial, and when the defendant came to be tried, would evidence be offered both pro and con as to what the officers had done or neglected to do about their duty? I do not see just where we would be with such a provision in the law.

Mr. BLACK. I will state to the Senator that my judgment about it is that all that would be required would be an ex parte affidavit from some individual upon which the judge could act. That is the way they have acted in the removal of other cases.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it would require more than that.

Mr. BLACK. The bill does not so provide.

Mr. NORRIS. It reads, "Provided, That it is first made to appear to such court." The court must be satisfied. It is a matter of fact whether or not an officer has done his duty. It must be made to appear to the court. An officer would have a right to offer evidence and to say, "I have done my duty", would he not, before the court made a finding?

Mr. BLACK. I would think so had I not had experience with the Federal court in just exactly that regard. Under the present law, as I recall it, while I am not sure about the exact language, it is provided that if certain things appear to the judge, a case shall be removed. I recall in one instance that certain things did appear to the judge through an ex parte affidavit, and he removed a case to the Federal court, when I had evidence showing the facts to be entirely different from those shown in the affidavit. I made a motion to remand the case to the State court. In one instance out of perhaps fifty in which I have made such a motion, I have succeeded in obtaining a removal back to the State court. I found that the Federal courts, like all other courts, want all the jurisdiction they can get, and my judgment is that under the proposed law all that a court would require would be an affidavit, and he would bring the parties in.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, the Senator thinks if he were an officer charged with neglect of duty, and I made an affidavit that the Senator had neglected his duty, it would be taken as conclusive before the court, and the Senator would not have a right to deny it?

Mr. BLACK. I think it would be taken as conclusive so far as a trial in that court was concerned, unless I made a motion to remand.

Mr. NORRIS. But the court must make a finding of fact in order to give him jurisdiction.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. If there is a dispute about that provision, let us go on to the next provision. I have not gotten through with referring to what must be shown.

The second thing is, "if it shall be made to appear to the court"—

I am reading what comes immediately after the proviso, but that applies to point no. 2 just as it does to no. 1. I take it there is no dispute about that.

Then, if it shall be made to appear to the court—

That the jurors obtainable for service in the State court having jurisdiction of the offense are so strongly opposed to such punishment that there is probability that those guilty of the offense will not be punished in such State court.

What action would the court have to take about that? An affidavit would not be sufficient, would it? Before the court could try the defendant charged with a neglect of duty, he would have to find that the jurors of a particular county where the offense was alleged to have been committed were so prejudiced that he could not get a jury which would convict; that they would be friendly to the defendant, in other words.

An affidavit made by some one that that was the state of affairs in that county would not in any court on earth be taken as conclusive. Would not the court take the other side of it? Would the court accept affidavits? Perhaps the court would say, in making its finding, "I will submit that question to a jury." So, while one case is on trial, with the jury impaneled, the judge would stop that case and take up another case and try that before a jury, and see what their finding was, and, depending on their finding, would decide whether the other jury could go on with the other case.

Mr. BLACK. I think that could be done under the bill. I have no question about it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, under the bill, the question of a change of venue to another county is eliminated entirely, is it not?

Mr. BLACK. Oh, yes; that is eliminated. It is changed now to the Federal court.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will undoubtedly remember, from his long experience, that a question often arises in State courts in regard to a change of venue. When that kind of a case has arisen, I have never known a court to presume for a moment to take an affidavit of some individual that the people of the county were prejudiced and remove a case on such a statement alone, without giving the other side an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. BLACK. That is the procedure in my State as to change of venue. There is a hearing, and a decision is reached by the court.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but in the meantime what happens to the other case?

Mr. BLACK. It will probably take a little more than 30 days to reach a decision on that, so we have 30 days more.

Mr. NORRIS. It is a question whether that finding would not have to be made in order to give jurisdiction even to start the criminal case by the issuance of a warrant.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, of course a fine of $2,000 to $10,000 would be a very insignificant thing to any county where there was a population of a million or two or three million; but $10,000 is not an insignificant amount to many of the counties in the United States. There are today counties where, on account of economic conditions over which the citizens of the county have no control, it might be very difficult to find any one man in the county actually worth as much as $10,000. To a small county a $10,000 penalty would be a very serious imposition.

It is interesting to note the theory upon which the right to impose a penalty on a county is based. Several years ago, in reading Macaulay's History of England, I found the beginning of the idea of imposing a penalty upon a county. It came into England from Denmark. The idea at that time was that when the hue and cry was raised every citizen had to respond and make an arrest. There were few sheriffs and few officers charged with the duty of apprehending criminals.

When the Normans conquered England, it was found, as had always been the case, that there was great antagonism between the Normans and the Saxons and the original natives of England. The result was that there were a great many Normans who were found murdered from time to time, and since they were in control of the country in those days, which some of us might now call primitive, a law was enacted which imposed a fine upon each hundred, the hundred being somewhat similar to the present township. The theory was that those citizens must apprehend the criminal.

That law did not work very satisfactorily, because it was found that in the poor hundreds usually 1 man or 2 men had to pay the entire penalty, men who had nothing whatever to do with the affair, and knew nothing about it until after it had occurred. Since the law provided that the penalty must be imposed when anyone of French descent was found murdered, the result was that the bodies were mutilated, and it became impossible to determine, from the dead body, whether it was that of a Frenchman, a Norman, a Saxon, or a native Englishman. So that law was amended and there was used the prima facie clause which we have in the pending measure, and it was provided that if any dead body was found it should be presumed to be that of a man of French descent. Before very long it was found that did not work, some of the books stating that an individual would simply disappear, and no body could be found. So the law was repealed. One of the great writers on law says that since those primitive times—he uses that term—a more equitable system of imposing punishment has been adopted, and that an effort has been made to punish those who commit the crime rather than to punish the innocent.

In the pending bill we find that a fine is to be imposed upon a county, and if the county is unable to pay, those who claim to be injured can levy on the courthouse or jail—and the hospital, I assume. They probably would take them all. If there happened to be a county hospital, of course, it would be far more important to have the judgment paid than to operate a hospital for the benefit of the sick and the needy! It would be far more important to have the judgment paid than to keep the doors of the courthouse open! Everything sinks into insignificance in the minds of those who have brought before the Congress a bill which is the lineal descendent of those pernicious measures which cursed the very people they were intended to benefit after the War between the States. They were a curse alike to those against whom they were directed and those for whose alleged benefit they were passed.

I understand, of course, the sentiment which has been stirred up with reference to this particular measure. In what I am about to say I do not refer to my friend the Senator from New York, nor to the Senator from Colorado, for whom I have a great admiration and even affection. I refer to the group agitation behind this measure from its very beginning. I give the two Senators I have mentioned credit for pure, idealistic motives, and for having the honest desire and ambition in their hearts to confer a benefit upon those who, as they believe, will be benefited by this measure. But, Mr. President, there are those who constantly stir up strife and attempt to create hostility between the races; and they do so, not from idealism, not from purity of purpose, not with the idea of benefiting those they claim to benefit, but frequently because they are drawing a salary from some organization, and the only way they are able to continue to obtain funds with which to pay themselves and their secretaries and assistants is by spreading the deadly fumes of hatred and race hostility.

I refer to others who are prompted by political motives, such as the man who referred to the Southern States as "conquered provinces", and who declared, as can be seen by anyone who will read Claude Bowers' The Tragic Era, that it was necessary to keep the seeds of hatred alive in order that his party might continue in power. When that man cracked the whip over one of the members of his party the member came to him and said, "My conscience will not permit me to vote this way"; and the reply was, "Your conscience be damned! You will vote with your party!"

Mr. President, I refer to the sentiment created by men for their own political aggrandizement or for their own financial advantage. In doing so, I desire it to be distinctly understood that I recognize a distinction between a man like the one who has recently been elected to Congress from the city of Chicago to succeed Mr. De Priest and others who have gone over this land holding aloft the ancient torch of prejudice and passion and hate, thereby contributing no benefit to the people of their race; simply attempting to stir up an antagonism which does not exist between the white people of the South and the colored people of the South.

In the State which I have the honor in part to represent there is an institution which was founded by a distinguished American, Booker T. Washington. His successor was another distinguished American, Dr. Robert R. Moton. To both those men I pay at this time my tribute of respect and of admiration. In that school in the State of Alabama is another man, humble in aspirations, but great in achievement. I refer to Dr. George W. Carver. There is no spirit of antagonism existing between the white people of my State and the people who operate this institution of learning. Seated there in the midst of one of the most fertile sections of Alabama—and, I might say, of the world—in a county which has long had a heritage of men and women who think of their Government and who love its traditions, there will be found no outcroppings of prejudice or hostility or antagonism. On each occasion when there has been presented to this body any measure from which it was believed Tuskegee Institute might receive an advantage, I have had from the white people of Macon County, Ala., messages expressing their hope that I would assist to bring about the improvements desired. On other occasions they have traveled all the way from Tuskegee, Ala., to Washington in an effort to obtain benefits for that institution.

Is it right, is it fair, is it just to the thousands of Negroes who do not feel disgraced when we mention the name of their race, but who, instead, have a feeling of pride that it is their race, is it right to them or is it right to us, who live there side by side, whose destiny must be inseparably linked the one with the other, for political advantage or for any other motive, to enact legislation which drives a wedge between the races, following up the old idea of the men in charge of the Freedmen's Bureau and the others who traveled into the South in those dark and gloomy days of desolation and despair, lured by the hope of pecuniary profit to themselves? Is it fair to us at this time, when we are working in peace and harmony the one with the other, to do something which will bring about again the spread of the flame of race antagonism, and instill prejudices which, thank God! have been stifled in the hearts of most of the people of Alabama and of the other States of the South?

I realize that it may be impossible to appeal to those who think they know more about the problem than those who live with it. That has always been the case. People have always been anxious to purify somebody else. They have always been anxious to impress the ideas of those who live a thousand or two thousand miles away upon the local habits, manners, and customs of those whom they do not know. That was tried a short time ago. The memory of it is still fresh in the minds of the men and women of America. I had personally hoped that the eighteenth amendment would be a success, because I believe liquor has done a great deal to degrade mankind and to drive man from the noble plane of his highest aspirations; but it did not work as those who designed it had planned. It was found that it was very difficult for a man, perhaps from Alabama, to understand exactly the problem facing the people in the populous cities of New Jersey and New York. Is it too much, is it unfair, is it wrong for me to ask those who live in New York and in New Jersey if they think they know more about how to meet the problems of the men and women in Alabama than do the people of Alabama?

I would be the last, Mr. President, I believe, to be pleading against a measure which I believed would accomplish the purpose of raising the standard of the underprivileged in America, whatever might be their color, their race, or their creed. I have tried to demonstrate since I became a Member of the Senate that the greatest purpose of my life is by my service here to bring about a nearer approach to social and economic justice. I have gone much further than have many of my colleagues from my own section of this Nation in following along the way that I believed would accomplish that purpose. I have sought to face the situation squarely that the Constitution as it was written, for instance, with reference to interstate commerce, while it affected but little commerce and trade at the time the Constitution was written, today touches every nook and cranny of America. I have realized and sought to face the facts honestly and squarely that economically, in trade and commerce, this Nation is one, indivisible and inseparable, and that today, when the mills of New Jersey may depend upon purchasers in South Carolina or California, when the cotton grown in Alabama may depend upon purchasers in Wisconsin or California, a national problem must be met by national legislation. I have planted my foot upon that political philosophy, because I believe that there is in the Constitution, even though it could never have been anticipated by those who wrote it, a clause which, by reason of the expansion of commerce between the individuals in the different States, has brought about a new condition and a new economic era.

However, let my friends, or those of them who are familiar with the problems that faced the founders of this Republic, go back in their memories for a moment, if they will. Do they recall that all over the world it was stated that it would be impossible for us to become one nation under one flag even at the time when there were only 13 little Colonies? Do they recall that since that time the sturdy pioneers have moved westward and the flag has followed them until today it is floating in the breezes of California and Oregon all the way to the Gulf? Do they recall that the problem which faced them then with reference to attempting to have a comparatively small number of people who lived in the Thirteen Colonies under one flag and one government has been accentuated by reason of the fact that today there are thousands of miles of territory of which they did not dream, and that we now approach 130,000,000 people living in different communities and different States? Cannot even those of us who favor recognizing the indivisibility of our commercial and economic establishment in America recognize that there is a distinction which, whether we want to or not, the people will make us realize, between the habits and customs of the people who live in the State so ably represented by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], whom I now see, and the people of Maine and the people of Alabama? Do they not have their problems in California, which they have been permitted to meet in their own way, even sometimes going to the extent of passing laws which have been stricken down by the Supreme Court of the United States?

Has not my State also had occurrences brought to that Court as to which the Court declared the supreme law of the land? And did not the Governor of the State which I have the honor in part to represent immediately after the last decision rendered by that Court, touching upon the practices of the people of the State of Alabama in connection with their courts, immediately announce that Alabama bowed before the supreme tribunal of this Nation and that her laws must and would be obeyed? Then, why, at this time, with an administration which is trying really to do something to help those people—not to affect 14 possible individuals, not to touch 14 lives, but to touch millions of human lives—with an administration which has before us now a bill which, if it shall pass, will give to every Negro who lives in the South who has passed the age limit provided in the bill for the first time a pension to take care of him in his declining years, when the administration has fed thousands and thousands of them, more than it has the people of the other race in my State, fairly and justly without any claim of prejudice, so far as I have heard, why should it now be necessary to enact such legislation as is proposed in the pending measure? We know the object of the measure; we know its history; and, with all due regard to my friends who propose it, for what I say is not meant with reference to them, because, as I have said, I have a high regard and affection for the two Senators who have offered this bill, I ask, with the knowledge of the iniquitous conception of the idea behind this bill back in the days of Thad Stevens and his group, why should it now be revived to mar the harmonious relations that exist between us, when we are working out our problems together and we have in the South committees of both races to work side by side in order that the harmonious and pleasant relationship shall not be affected?

I presume that it is unnecessary, or, at least, useless and futile, to make these remarks. It always was so in the past. It has been demonstrated in the past, seemingly, that there was only one way by which we could protect the people themselves who are supposed to be the beneficiaries of such measures as this. That way has been followed in the past, and if it shall be necessary to protect those men and women in the South—and I am talking now about the ones whom the report of the committee indicates this bill was intended to protect, the members of the colored race—from measures which might react to their disadvantage, which will play upon prejudices which do not now exist there and which carry out the old idea that was poured into their minds immediately after the War between the States that there is hatred between the two races, we stand here ready, willing, and, I hope, able to protect them in the only way that we have ever before been able to protect them from this prejudice and this passion.

Mr. President, this is about all I have to say on this bill at this time. I sincerely hope that it will not be necessary to say anything more at any time. Where there is involved the program of the President, who, I believe, by his actions and his recommendations has raised the standards of opportunity of the underprivileged more in 2 years than has ever been done before in a period of 50 years, I regret exceedingly that anything should occur to retard that program to the slightest extent.

I regret very much that it is necessary to delay, even for 1 day, action upon the soldiers' adjusted-compensation bill. I regret its delay, because I believe it provides for the payment of a just debt. I have always so believed, and I believe so now.

It seems to me that with the great progress which the Nation has made with the problem attempted to be dealt with, there can be little excuse for rejecting such a bill at this time. I was told that 30,000 people were killed in accidents last year. I believe the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] told me that, if I am not mistaken. If one is interested in the way crime has increased in the country, I invite him to read the so-called "Wickersham report" which was submitted several years ago. We will have made ourselves, it seems to me, just a little absurd, in view of the magnificent progress we have made and the improved relationship which exists between the races who live in the country, if we stop the real business of the Senate in order to consider a measure which, according to the maximum figures, would have affected only 14 people last year. I do not know exactly how many it would have affected, but I know from my own knowledge and investigation that that number was not correct insofar as the alleged lynching charged to the State of Alabama was concerned, because there was none there.

So, Mr. President, vain as it is, futile as I believe it to be, noting the empty seats which I see about me, with the political advantage which I know is hoped to be obtained by certain men whose party has been justly and righteously criticized by reason of its enmity toward the plain, ordinary, average, everyday man, I have assumed to utter these words; but at least I can express for the people of my State their views.

Let him who will say that those who oppose the measure favor lynching. I denounce that statement as unequivocally false. We desire to improve the relationship between the people of the Nation without animosity, sectional or racial. So far as I am concerned, even if I favored an antilynching bill, I should not vote for this measure; and I state my reason with highest respect for those who have sponsored it, though I do not know who wrote it. Even if I favored an antilynching bill, and at the same time I stood for the rights of the people of the country to organize in a collective manner and to protect themselves by strikes or otherwise, I should not vote to crucify them on the cross of a so-called "antilynching bill." If we get ready to make it illegal for men to strike and to define a group of three strikers as a mob, let us do it fairly and squarely, and let us entitle the measure "A bill to prevent strikers from meeting together and injuring the property of their employers, or, as a consequence of their meeting together, injuring or killing strike breakers or other individuals." Let it not come under the guise of a bill which has been heralded to the people of the country as having the benign purpose of preventing lynchings when there were, perhaps, only 13 lynchings in this country last year.

Mr. President, for the time being I surrender the floor. At a later time I may discuss the matter a little more in detail.

Mr. BYRNES obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 2035. An act to amend an act approved June 25, 1934, authorizing loans from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 5914. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in connection with the California-Pacific International Exposition to be held in San Diego, Calif., in 1935 and 1936.

PREVENTION OF LYNCHING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. COSTIGAN that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 24) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing, and punishing the crime of lynching.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I wish to address the Senate with reference to the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] that the bill from the Finance Committee providing payment of the adjusted-compensation certificates be taken up, instead of the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] being adopted to take up for consideration at this time the so-called "antilynching bill."

I think the motion of the Senator from Texas is wise, and that the Senate should proceed to the consideration of the so-called "bonus bill." I do not believe the Senate should proceed to the consideration of the antilynching bill. I think it would be exceedingly unwise, because, instead of promoting the cause in which Senators are interested, I believe it would retard the development of the fine spirit which has developed during recent years in behalf of the enforcement of law throughout the Nation.

I believe that lynching is murder whenever the victim of the mob dies at their hands. It is impossible for me to understand how men, and particularly lawyers, can make a distinction between lynching a human being when that crime is participated in by three persons, and the murder of a human being by an individual. I can conceive of no defense for it. In all my public career I have never made any other statement. Lynching, like any other form of murder, is a violation of the law of God and of man. For it I have never made, and never will make, an apology.

I know that those who have participated in the commission of such offenses have argued that their action was due to the fact that the law was not enforced; that delays prevented the enforcement of the law; that lawyers would appeal from the decisions of lower courts, delay punishment being meted out to the criminal, and that has been the excuse of many who have been guilty of the crime of murder, called "lynching."

To me it has always seemed that when a human being is killed by three persons rather than one, instead of lessening the offense it but exaggerates and aggravates the offense.

While this is true, I know that in the light of history with reference to lynchings in this country nothing could be more unfortunate than the enactment of legislation of this character.

In order to get an idea of the views of the committee in reporting the bill, I have examined the report. After setting forth the details of the measure, the report of the committee says:

> The committee, during the Seventy-third Congress and during the Seventy-fourth Congress, has given much consideration to this bill. Hearings were held by a subcommittee at which evidence was presented demonstrating to the committee's satisfaction the continuing and increasing need for Federal legislation of this character. When a measure similar to the pending reported bill was before Congress in 1934 and its enactment into law appeared to be more than a possibility, two lynchings occurred in January 1934, a month prior to the public hearings conducted by this committee. During the months from January 30 to June 8, 1934, when public opinion in favor of legislation to curb the practice of lynching was particularly articulate, no lynchings occurred. During the first week in June 1934, word was generally circulated that hope for the enactment of the proposed measure had been abandoned. On June 8 there was a lynching in Mississippi, followed in rapid succession by 2 lynchings in Alabama, 1 in Texas, 1 in Tennessee, 1 in Louisiana, a third in Mississippi, a third in Alabama, 1 in Georgia, and 1 in Florida.
